Orval Misenar closed a successful term of school here last Friday with a picnic in the grove. Singing and recitations, ice cream and cake and lemonade were pleasing features of the occasion, leaving a pleasant taste in the months of teacher, pupils and parents. Mr. Misenar gave each pupil a dainty souvenir with his photograph on the cover and a list of the names of the school board on one page and the names of his pupils on another page. The following pupils received rewards for punctuality and regular attendance: Gorth Stafford, Celia Cox, Maggie Spura, Martha Koteskey and Mable Borkley.

Italy can boast of a larch tree the age of which is estimated to be 2,000 years. It is situated on the northern flank of Mont Chetif in the direction of the huts of Plan Veni, above Courmayeur, a few steps from the footpath that skirts the limits of the meadowland. Due allowance being made for the extreme slowness with which the larch grows, for the altitude above sea level (1,650 meters) at which it is rooted and for its northerly exposure in the near neighborhood of the glacier, where the cycle of its development is barely five months every year, this venerable larch, untouched alike by woodman's ax and thunderbolt, cannot be less than 2,000 years old.—Scotsman.

"How much are these chickens?" asked the lady in the market.

"I sell them at 4 shillings each," said the market man.

"Do you raise them yourself?"

"Oh, yes. They were only 3s. 6d. the day before yesterday."—London Telegraph.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

COST OF POOR ROADS

Waste of Labor In Hauling Crops to Market.

WHAT THE MUD TAX FIGURES.

Six Hundred Million Dollars Is the Price We Pay Annually For Our Impassable Highways—What Is Being Done to Improve Them.

It cost a little over a billion dollars to haul the farm crops of America to market last year. With good roads, roads such as are to be found in some parts of America and in all parts of France, the marketing of the crops would have cost $100,000,000. Six hundred million dollars per year, then, is the price we pay in this land of the free for having impassable roads, says a writer in the St. Louis Times. Did ever a nation spend so much for so doubtful a luxury before? With American roads lying open and fatuitous before the eyes of our foreign critics, what monstrous injustice it is to talk of American dollar worship!

Most men of middle age can recall the annual picnic known as mending the roads. Just why it got that name no one has ever explained, for in practically every case the picnic left the roads in worse condition than before. The law in many states prescribed that each resident of a rural district must pay a certain road tax in labor each year. The payment of this tax was done under the supervision of a local officer, known as the pathmaster. The customary time of payment was in the early summer, just before haying time, when there wasn't much else for the men and teams to do. The neighborhood turned out with horses and plows and harrows, ripped up diverse sections of highways which the year's travel had packed to a more or less navigable condition, rounded them up nicely in the middle and scratched them up smooth with the harrows. You were never expected to work very hard at these festive occasions, and the pathmaster who insisted on real work soon found himself unpopular. It was just as well, for, since nobody had any knowledge of road-making, the more work the worse results.

What some of these results were and are we have vivid testimony. Across Iowa last winter the "racing" autos had to take to the railroad tracks because the common roads were simply impassable. Last March some misguided creatures began an automobile race from New York to Savannah, Ga. It was just at the opening of navigation on the country roads of the middle south, the time when the roads are too thin for wheels and too thick for boats. Across Virginia each racing automobile had an escort of six mules to pull it out of extra deep mudholes and to haul its emergency rations of gasoline. Usually this was enough, but when an auto was so thoughtless as to stay in the mudhole all night the mule teams had to be doubled and all the negroes of the neighborhood commandeered to service before that particular contestant could proceed. The racers averaged four miles per hour across the Old Dominion—a perfectly stunning rate of speed, all things considered.

And yet the roads of America are vastly better than they once were, and the improvement is going on apace. The United States government is leading a hand by setting its spare scientists to work teaching the people of different regions how to make the best roads at the least cost. The states are doing vastly more. New York in 1905 voted to spend $50,000,000 on her highways, and, while no other state is investing in roads at that rate, all are doing something.

Cities are finding it good business to improve the roads leading out into the farming region, the farmers are beginning to tax themselves in a rational fashion for highway improvement, and many philanthropists have passed by the conventional college and library donation to spend their surplus funds on good roads. Historic mudholes are being slowly filled up, stone and concrete are replacing the crazy wooden bridges, and a hundred inventions have been made to help get the best results for the lowest expense.

Some of the last deserve attention. Macadam roads have long been accepted as the standard of highway construction. But macadam roads of the old pattern, with crushed stone eight inches thick, cost from $6,000 to $10,000 per mile. Now it has been found that three or four inches will do quite as well, and the cost is cut squarely in two. In some parts of the central states, where crushed stone is rare, it has been found that the very clay which makes the roads almost impassable is the best trackmaking material when burned. In yet other regions the farmers have discovered how to make good roads by the simple expedient of rolling or dragging them after each rain, and in yet other places a mixture of sand and clay, costing $300 or $400 a mile, is found almost as good as the best macadam.

It is well that the roadmaking materials are abundant and varied, for there are roads enough in the United States to reach eighty-six times around the earth at the equator, and nearly all those roads are bad. The advocates of good highways will find ample room for their missionary enterprise for a generation to come.

I'd sing you a song about childhood, life's joyous and garlanded time, but I'm weary of ringing in "wildwood," and there's no other word that will rhyme. I'd warble of bright, sunny fountains, where water and music are blent, but I'd have to lug in a few mountains or my lines wouldn't fit worth a cent. I'd sing of a life on the billows, where the dolphins and flying fish race, but I'd have to say something of willows, which would have nothing to do with the case. I'd sing of the moonbeams that quiver, like gems on the water at night, but I'd have to quote onions and liver to make the verse twitter all right.—Emporia Gazette.

Was She an Exception?

She went into a Fifth avenue hairdresser's shop to have her head shampooed. She wore her hair in a Psyche knot. The shampooer seemed to be a trifle rough, and finally her tugs at the Psyche knot became so forceful that the woman in the chair cried out in pain. "What are you trying to do—pull my head off?" she exclaimed. "I am trying to get your Psyche knot off," replied the shampooer, "but it won't come. How did you ever get it pinned on so firmly?" The customer almost shrieked: "Come off! Why, it's my own hair!"—New York Tribune.

Our Manly Training of Girls

Our training of girls approaches close to the idiotic, claims Katharine Eggleston in Woman's Home Companion for June. The average girl, from the minute she leaves her dolls to go to kindergarten, till she matriculates at college, is told about men and men's work—never about women. The kindergarten songs and tales are about Lincoln and Washington—and even the pictures of animals show the lion and forget the lioness. In older childhood she is taught to build sand forts instead of good old-fashioned mud pies, and even the sums in arithmetic dwell on "Billy's" marbles and "John's" apples, to the total neglect of his sister.

Later still she goes to high school and learns history with all its ideals of brave men—and here again the woman's share of quiet courage is completely overshadowed. She learns carpentering, although she cannot cook an egg or sew a seam. And finally, her education finished, she knows all about the higher mathematics and is short-changed by the butcher. She learns political economy, but doesn't know who are the members of her own school board. Miss Eggleston's bright article concludes:

"If your boy wanted to be a lawyer, and a neighbor told you to put him to work in a carpenter's shop by way of preparation, you would think your neighbor crazy. But you do not consider yourself crazy when you train your daughter, who is to be a wife and mother (and nothing can get away from the grim statistics that women do marry, despite economic independence, the higher education and all other arguments in favor of coeducation), precisely as you train your son, who will enter some profession or trade, there to first earn his own living, and then to provide for a family yet unborn. The one to bear the family and to rear it, the other to provide shelter and comfort for the mother of that family, and yet both trained precisely in the same way."

THE CAPTAIN OF the KANSAS

By LOUIS TRACY,

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY EDWARD J. CLODE

COURTENAY was relieved to thinking that the savages sought a parley. The canoe was paddled by two women. They changed its course with a dexterous twist of the blades when within a cable's length of the ship and then circled slowly round her. The four men jabbered in astonishingly loud voices. Suarez, who gathered the purport of their talk, explained that they were discussing the best method of attack.

"The three younger men belong to the tribe I lived with," he said. "The old man sitting between the women is a stranger. I think he must have come from the north of the island with some of the fishermen, attracted by the smoke signals."

"From the north? Is there a reef?" asked Courtenay when he learned what Suarez was saying.

"He would arrive in a canoe," was the answer. "The Indians venture out to sea in very bad weather. He probably passed the ship late last night, and, now I come to think of it, the canoe which you captured is not familiar to me, whereas I know by sight every craft owned by the Feathered People."

"How many do they possess?"

"Twenty-three."

These statements were disconcerting. Not only was it possible for the natives to surround the Kansas with a whole swarm of men, but the mere number of their boats would render it exceedingly difficult to repel a combined assault. And nothing could be more truculent than the demeanor of the semi-nude warriors. They pointed at each person they saw on the decks, and made a tremendous row when they passed the canoe fastened alongside. Despite their keen sight, they evidently did not recognize Suarez, who now wore a cap and a suit of clothes taken from the locker of one of the missing stewards.

The impudence of the Indians exasperated Courtenay. The sheer size of the Kansas should have awed them, he thought.

At that moment the rowers permitted the canoe to swing round with the tide. One of the men stood up, and Elsie, who seized the chance of snapshotting the party, ran to the upper deck, so she did not overhear Courtenay's smothered ejaculation. He was scrutinizing the savages through his glasses, and he had distinctly seen the ship's name painted on a small water cask on which the Indian had been sitting. Tollemache made the same dramatic discovery.

"Out of one of the ship's lifeboats, I suppose?" he said in a low tone to the captain.

"Yes. Did you see the number?"

"No. 3, I think."

"I agree with you. That was the first lifeboat which got away."

Christobal, startled out of his wonted sang froid, whispered in his turn:

"Do you mean to say that one of the boats has fallen into the hands of these fiends?"

"I am afraid so," replied Courtenay. "Of course that particular keg may have drifted ashore. In any case, it tells the fate of one section of the mutineers. Either the boat is swamped or the crew is now on the island, and we know what that signifies."

"Is there no chance of bribing these people into friendliness or at least into a temporary truce?"

"It is hard to decide. Tollemache and Suarez are best able to form an opinion. What do you say, Tollemache?"

"Not a bit of use. They are insatiable. The more you give the more they want. The only way to deal with those rotters is to stir them up with a Gatling or a twelve pounder."

Suarez when appealed to shook his head.

"You might as well try to fondle a hungry puma. I am the only man they have ever spared, and they spared me solely because they thought I gave them power over their enemies. If you had a cannon you might drive them off. As it is, we shall be compelled to fight for our lives. They are brave enough in their own way."

The experience of the miner from Argentina was not to be gainsaid. Courtenay glanced up at Elsie. If aught were needed to complete the contrast between civilization and savagery it was given by the comparison which the girl offered to the women in the canoe. The hot sun and the absence of wind had changed the temperature from winter to summer. After breakfast Elsie had donned a muslin dress and a broad brimmed straw hat. Exposure to the weather had bronzed her skin to a delightful tint. Her nut brown hair framed a sweetly pretty face, and her clear blue eyes and red lips, slightly parted, smiled bewitchingly at the men beneath. The camera in her hands added a holiday aspect to her appearance, an aspect which was unutterably disquieting in its relation to the muttered forebodings she had broken in on.

"I find the get-up of our visitors distinctly humorous," he said, "and I hope they are a bit scared of us. We would prefer their room to their company."

"I thought that Senor Suarez would hail them, as he can speak their language. Perhaps he does not wish them to know he is on board?"

Now, Elsie had heard the man's impassioned appeal when the Incas were being carried, so Courtenay felt that she, too, was acting.

A new direction was given to Elsie's thoughts by the peculiar scowling aspect of Suarez's face. He was looking at Courtenay in a manner which betokened certain displeasure. The Spaniard's protégée was ruled guilty by a mere powerful sentiment. He scowled. Elsie received Courtenay's youth and high spirits.

Elsie darted one more Courtenay's eyes. A kind of understanding had existed between its members never been. Each knew only themselves, whereas Suarez, it seemed, to have no ideal intent at the time, rushed in upon her with overwhelming conviction. The middle aged physician suspected her of flirting with Courtenay and disapproved of it as strongly as she had condemned Isabel's admitted efforts in the same direction.

The proceedings of the Indians put a stop to any further conversation. The canoe had drifted closer to the ship. It was about eighty yards distant when the Indian who was on his feet suddenly whirled a sling and sent a stone crashing through the window of the music room. The heavy missile, which when picked up was found to weigh nearly half a pound, just missed Tollemache.

The captain raised a double barreled fowling piece, the only gun on board, and fired point blank at the savages. But the women were paddling away vigorously, and the shot splashed in the water on all sides of the canoe, though a howl and a series of violent contortions showed that one at least of the pellets had stung the wizened Indian whom Suarez believed to be a newcomer.

There was no second shot—cartridges were too precious to be wasted at an impossible range—but the undeniable fact remained that the Indians meant to be aggressive. For a little time no one spoke. They heard the echoes of the gunshot faintly thrown back by the nearest wall of rock. The regular plash of the paddles as the canoe sped shoreward was distinctly audible. They watched the tiny craft until it vanished round the wooded point which concealed Otter creek.

The muffled clang of a hammer broke the silence which had fallen on the watchers from the ship. Walker had slipped back to his beloved engines. Had he not vowed that the massive pistons should again thrust forth their willing arms on or about New Year's day? He had forgotten the cannibals and their threats ere he was at the foot of the engine room ladder. Courtenay and Tollemache joined him; Christobal went to the salon to visit his patients; Elsie was left with Mr. Boyle, who forthwith fell into a doze, being worn out by the fresh air and the excitement.

Elsie seized the chance of snapshotting the party.

Joey, having followed Courtenay to the one doorway in the ship which he could not enter, trotted back to find Elsie. She greeted him with enthusiasm.

"Hail, friend," she said. "You at least are not jealous if I speak to your master, wherein you show your exceeding wisdom. Now, since you and I are persons of leisure, tell me, Joey, what we shall do to make ourselves useful."

The dog was accustomed to being spoken to. He awaited developments.

"It seems to me, Joey," she continued, "that Guglielmo Frascuelo is the one person on board who claims our attention. There is a mystery to be solved. Bound up in it are my poor Isobel, that beast Ventana and a drunken coal trimmer—an odd assortment to rub shoulders, don't you think?"

Joey still reserved his opinion. When the girl went to the forecastle by climbing down the sailors' ladder to the lower deck he thought she was making a mistake, but she held her arms for his spring, and all was well. She had not previously visited the quarters set apart for the crew. Puzzled by the large number of small cabins with names of subordinate officers painted on them, she paused and cried loudly:

"Are you there, Frascuelo? May I speak to you?"

An exclamation of surprise, a somewhat forcible exclamation, too, answered her from an inner berth. Frascuelo had heard from the Chilean who brought his meals that there was an Englishwoman on board, but he did not know that she spoke Spanish fluently.

Frascuelo was reclining on a lower bunk. His injured leg was well on the way toward recovery, but the wound and its resultant confinement had chastened him. He had lost the bright dandified swagger which was his most cherished asset.

After acknowledging inquiries as to his progress he showed such eagerness for news that Elsie told him all, what had caused the latest uproar. She cheered him, too, with the assurance that he was made by the engineers and then led her to the topic on which she was most interested.

"In some ways I regard you as most unfortunate," she said. "I have been told you are here by accident; that you had no right to take the voyage at all. Is that true?"

Frascuelo, delighted to leave secrecy a supposedly listener, poured forth his story readily. He bore no ill will against the captain, he said. He knew it was wrong to draw a knife on the chief officer, as his tale was an unlikely one, and he ought to have trusted to a more orderly recital of the facts to obtain credence.

"But I was mad, senorita, I just saw red, and the drink was yet surging up in me. I felt I must fight somebody, whatever the consequences."

"Can you tell me why any one had such a grievance against you that you should be thrown into the hold and nearly killed? That was a strange thing to do, especially as you came aboard too late for your work."

"Ah, that is the point, senorita. You see, we trimmers work in gangs, and the man who flung me through the hatch was the man who had taken my place. I see no reason to doubt that it was he who made me drunk the previous evening, and I know who did that."

"What was his name?"

"Jose Anacleto—'Jose the Whelp' we call him on the plaza. I ought to have smelled mischief when Jose paid. Never before had I seen him do such a thing. And a good liquor too. Dios, it must have cost him dollars."

"What object had he in coming on board instead of you?"

"Ah, there you beat me, senorita. I have twisted my poor brain with thinking of that. We only earned a dollar a head, and hunkering a ship from a flat is hard work while it lasts, whereas one would expect Jose to ride twenty miles the other way to escape such a task. But he was in the plot, and he shall tell me why or"—

By force of habit Frascuelo put his right hand to his belt, but his sheath knife had been taken from him. He smiled sheepishly, yet his black eyes twinkled.

"Plot! Why do you speak of a plot?" asked the girl, hoping that the word betokened some more promising clew than she could discern thus far.

"Why did the furnaces blow up? Tell me that and I can answer you. Good, honest coal isn't made of gunpowder. Jose or some one behind him meant to sink the ship, and as I might have proved awkward they were willing that I should go down with her. Maybe I shall meet Jose if we get out of this rat trap. Then we shall have a little talk."

Despite the man's shrewd guess as to the cause of the accident in the stokehold Elsie was at a loss to connect the freak of some Valparaiso loafer with the deep laid scheme which contemplated the destruction of the Kansas. She had followed the discussion in the chart room with full appreciation of its significance. Valuable as the ship and cargo were, there was far more at stake in the effect of the loss on the copper markets of the world. The most important copper exporting firm in Chile would practically be ruined, while the Paris "ring," of which she had read in the newspapers, would have matters its own way. Financial interests of such magnitude would hardly be bound up with the carousals and quarrels of Frascuelo and "Jose the Whelp." Yet—

"Have you ever heard of Senor Pedro Ventana," she asked suddenly.

"Has he to do with mines?" inquired the Chilean tentatively.

"Yes."

"I know him by sight, senorita."

"Would he be acquainted with this man Anacleto, do you think?"

"Can't say. Jose would know anybody whom he could touch for a few pesetas."

She left him, promising to visit him daily in the future. As she walked back toward the bridge companion she met Dr. Christobal. His fit of ill humor had gone. He was all smiles, but Elsie, having extracted such information as Frascuelo possessed, was bent on adding to her store of knowledge. Incidentally she meant to widen the doctor's views.

"Why have you taken to lecturing me?" she asked, with a simple directness which Christobal was not slow to profit by.

"Because, though old enough to be your father, I have not yet reached years of discretion."

"You mean, I suppose, that if every one attended to one's own affairs it would be a less spiteful world? I am inclined to agree with you. Unhappily life is largely made up of these minor evils. Yet I should have thought that the desperate conditions under which we exist at this hour might protect me from uncharitableness."

"You are pleased to be severe."

"No; it is the last privilege of danger that shams should vanish. Yet we plumb the depths of absurdity when we contest the right of any woman, even a young and unmarried one, to appreciate all that a brave man has done and is doing to save her life."

Elsie was speaking without heat. She might have been reasoning some disputed point in ethics. The Spaniard was obviously thrown off his guard.

"You seem to demand an explanation," he said, with some warmth. "Well, you shall have it. I am not a man to flinch from the disagreeable. I admit a sort of impression, I might almost describe it as a conviction, that Captain Courtenay's manner toward you betokens a growing admiration."

"This is the wildest folly," cried Elsie in bewilderment. "I—I cannot imagine what put such a notion into your head."

"Let me at least lay claim to a species of altruism," he replied. "I can see fifty excellent reasons why our young and good looking commander should be drawn to you, nor can I urge one against it."

"But he is already engaged to another woman, so my one reason is worth more than all your fifty."

"Ah, can that really be so?"

The tense eagerness in his voice might have warned her were it not that she was shocked by the bitterness which welled up in her heart. She was amazed by this introspective glimpse. It alarmed her. She must convince herself at all costs that she had spoken truly.

Although the evidence she tendered was of dubious value, she strove to advance her argument further.

"I have prized our friendship greatly, Dr. Christobal," she said, speaking with a calm deliberateness that rang hollow in her own ears, "so greatly that I am compelled to utter this protest. Now, to end a distasteful controversy let me tell you what I know to be true. When the ship was stranded and we all thought our only chance of safety was to take to the boats, by a fluke, the accident of the moment, I was left alone in the captain's cabin. The sea was breaking in through the doorway, and it brought an odd relief to my overburdened mind when I endeavored to rescue the contents of a locker which for some reason had been scattered on the floor previously. Among them I found some letters. I think you will believe me when I say that I would not consciously read another person's private correspondence. Just then I was hardly responsible for my actions, and I did happen to see and grasp the meaning of a passage in a letter from Captain Courtenay's sister which alluded to his affianced wife. If is not such a tragic admission, is it? I would scarce have given it another thought were it not for your

A Fresh Cool Complexion

Is especially delightful and attractive in warm weather, when most skins are red and perspiring. If you use a good toilet preparations it does not require much care to maintain this cool, fresh appearance in spite of the heat. We are enthusiastic over some toilet goods we sell, because we know what they are and have seen results from them. Not only are they good, but they are perfumed with the finest odors and are put up in attractive packages.

Harmony Skin Cream

Is one of them. It is not greasy, and goes right into the skin, makes the skin cool and bleaches it. It is an ornament to any dressing table, and is really a necessity in the summer time.

New View of Education of Women.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot has been exceedingly gracious to college women's clubs since he laid down the burden of Harvard direction, and only spiteful women recall what strenuous opposition he made to certain innovations in Radcliffe. He has been addressing the intellectual women in and out of season, and he has urged them not to henpeck the men because of those intellectual attainments. In a recent address before a college club of Baltimore he praised higher education for women enthusiastically, but he deprecated the limited view generally assigned to it. He thinks that in the home education is of more genuine benefit to society and for the future of the race than in the professions and that in the last analysis knowledge benefits women only in so far as it trains them for their natural duties. Instead of seeing the menace other great educators see in the desire which the modern woman has for obtaining the best educational advantages, Dr. Eliot takes vast comfort in the idea. The next generation, he thinks, being trained by intelligent and intellectual mothers, will swing the pendulum the other way for the men of the American race. Instead of being consumed with business ambitions to the exclusion of mental culture, he holds, they will be trained from their cradle upward to estimate properly the necessity of college training.

WHEN you have trouble with the way your clothes fit, it's probably due to one or more of these causes:

Either the fabric is of poor quality—cotton mixed goods, in place of all-wool; or the cloth is not properly shrunk before cutting; or the tailoring workmanship is badly done.

These are the dangers in buying cheap clothes; or clothes you don't know anything about; or too often clothes "made-to-measure."

And these are the dangers you absolutely escape when you buy Hart Schaffner & Marx clothes here. All-wool fabrics thoroughly shunk; perfect tailoring of the highest type; and designing unequaled in any other clothes.

It pays to buy such goods; a suit of these clothes lasts several seasons and looks right. Suits $18 to $40

THE CUCKOO.

Curious Superstitions That Are Connected With the Bird.

There is a popular belief that whatever one is doing when first one hears the cuckoo that will be what one will most frequently do during the year.

In many parts of Scotland and in the northern counties of England people turn their money in their pockets on hearing the first call of the cuckoo, as this, they say, insures a lucky year. In the counties bordering in Wales not only do they do this, but they also have a wish at the same time, this wish being kept secret, of course. To have a gold coin in one's pocket when the cuckoo's call is first heard insures good luck for the rest of the year. The German peasants declare that after St. John's day the bird changes into a sparrow hawk.

The Danes have a curious legend regarding this bird. When the village girls hear its first call they kiss their hands and repeat, "Cuckoo, cuckoo, when shall I be married?" As many times as the bird calls "cuckoo" in answer, so many years will the maiden have to wait. The old folk, bent and bowed with rheumatism and age, ask instead, "Cuckoo, cuckoo, when shall I be released from this world's cares?" and the answer comes in the same way. So occupied is the poor bird in answering these questions, say the Danes, that she never has time to build her nest, so is forced to lay her eggs in the nest of another bird.—Planet.

A GREWSOME BEQUEST.

Extraordinary Legacy by the Father of Lord Audley.

Probably the most grewsome bequest ever named in a will was that made by Philip Thicknesse, a dissipated Englishman, who died in 1792. Some years before his death he had quarreled bitterly with his son, Lord Audley, and to spite him had placed on the outside of the family mansion a board bearing this inscription in large black letters:

"Boots and shoes mended, carpets beat, etc., etc., by P. Thicknesse, father of Lord Audley."

Finding he was about to die, he sent for his lawyer and drew up a will containing the following extraordinary clause: "I leave my right hand to be cut off after my death, to my son, Lord Audley. I desire it may be sent to him in hopes that such a sight may remind him of his duty to God after having so long abandoned the duty he owed to a father who once so affectionately loved him."

The dead man's wishes were scrupulously carried out, and his severed hand, inclosed in a hermetically sealed leaden casket, was forwarded to his son. There is no record as to how Lord Audley received his unwelcome legacy or how he disposed of it.—New York Press.

Beggars of Bombay.

The nuisance caused by beggars in Bombay has assumed unbearable proportions. The officials practice charity as a religious obligation and relieve poverty where they find it. Recitals from Kohlt and Marshad never fail to touch the innermost chords of the natives with their innate reverence for spiritualism, and the faker backs up his appeal for alms with profuse quotations from the poets. Then there are lay beggars and religious beggars, the ash besmeared ascetics who practice mendicancy as a hereditary profession. Last and not least are the unfortunate sufferers whom the loss of limbs or eyes or some fell disease disables for work and drives them to beggary as the last resource. These latter have a genuine claim on our charity, but as there are so few asylums in India for the halt, the maim and the blind the streets and byways of towns are flooded with beggars, pitiful types of suffering humanity.—Rash Gaftar.

The Lace Curtain.

Just why there must be lace curtains even where there is no plant or rubber plant or gilt chair has never been explained—to the entire satisfaction of man. He only knows that there must and less it go at that. It often seems to him that if he could have his way, which is out of the question, of course, there wouldn't be lace curtains, at least above the cellar floor. They are in the way when windows are to be lowered or raised; they are apt to blow into the gas and lure down the house, and alarm is constantly sounded for fear the man will soil or tear them. They do not serve to keep out the light when there is too much of it, and the dog can't toast himself in the sun without getting tangled in them.

Still, there are lace curtains everywhere, and that is all there is to it.—Providence Tribune.

There is no doubt that the first idea of a suspension bridge was suggested to primitive man by the interlacing of tree branches and parasitical plants across rivers. Probably monkeys used them before men did. In very mountainous countries, such as Tibet and Peru, they have apparently been used since the dawn of history, possibly earlier.

A force of men are making rapid progress on the new VanPelt buildings. The excavating for the building on Bridge street is being pushed. The block work on the building back of the postoffice is climbing toward the sky and the new COURIER office is underway. The erection of these buildings will make room for more business houses in the city. A splendid upper story will be ready for somebody to use as will the basement now occupied by the COURIER.

George H. VanPelt, Judge Willis Brown, Frederick H. Brown and Frank Chaloupka, while returning one day last week from the Boy City grounds, were nearly run down by the afternoon P. M. passenger train, at the railroad crossing this side of the Boy City site. The rig barely cleared the rails when the train went rushing by. No warning whistle was blown and the view from the road up the railroad track is so obstructed by trees that it is impossible to see whether a train is in sight or not.

Neighborhood Notes

That a subscription promise to pay is a binding contract was the ruling made last week by Circuit Judge C. L. Collins, of Bay City, when he directed that a verdict of $1,122.51 be returned against Frank P. Chesborough formerly a wealthy lumberman of that city but now a resident of Detroit.

In 1901 the First Presbyterian church of that city wished to erect a new building, and the subscription was circulated, Chesborough signing for $2,000. He paid $500 in cash, and gave an amount of stock in a local bank which was afterward sold for $100. He refused to pay the remainder of the amount, however, claiming that it was not a legal contract. The verdict covers the remainder of the subscription, and interest from that date.

State Warden Pierce announces that his deputies will examine the spark arresters on all railway engines running through districts in which forest fires are liable to occur, to ascertain if the spark arresters comply with the law. The railway rights of way will be inspected also to see that they are kept clear of combustible material.

"More fires are caused from engine sparks than in any other way," says Pierce, "and we are going to try to enforce the law. I am also sending out 15,000 circulars into the upper sections of the state warning people of the provisions of the law relative to protection from fires."

The monthly report shows that the department made 93 complaints last month for violations of the game and fish laws, and 55 convictions have been secured. A total of $1,369.35 has been collected in fines and costs.

Fourteen families are coming from Ward county, North Dakota, to the immediate vicinity of Cadillac to make their homes as the result of their investigations touching the offerings of this region to farmers and prospective land owners. Other families are coming to this section from the Canadian northwest, the distant section that has been so persistent and so successful with its alluring inducements to residents of Michigan to go there and make their homes. They went to the Dakotas and to the Canadian northwest, Michigan people by hundreds and in greater numbers, and now many of them are coming back again. S. S. Thorpe, the real estate and farm lands man, is receiving many letters from persons now living in the Dakotas and other sections of the distant west, who through experience have come to know that life and labor and profits in Michigan are more attractive than in their present locations.—Cadillac News.

The I. O. O. An architect in Grand Rapids is now drafting the plans and specifications for the building. This new block will be a decided ornament to the village and will enhance the value of property in the neighborhood of its location.

The lightning sometimes plays strange freaks is a well known fact, but we had never heard of its burning up a wire fence before, until Tuesday, when Wm. Vannetten presented us with a few little pieces of burned wire and barbs—all that could be found of about eighteen rods of barbed wire fence on the line between his farm and what is known as the Shutts farm adjoining. The wire had been burned, broken into little pieces and scattered in every direction.—South Boardman News.

KNEW HIS BUSINESS.

The Little Boy Was Thoroughly Posted on the Elevator.

"Little boy," exclaimed the portly lady, "you ought to be at school instead of trying to work a lift."

"I'm not trying to work it," was the answer. "I am working it, and if you wish to ride I shall be happy to accommodate you. So far as my obligation to be at school is concerned, allow me to remind you that this is a legal holiday, and I am exempt from attendance at an institution where, I am pleased to say, I am at the head of my class."

"You have no business trying to work that lift, anyhow."

"For what reason?"

"Because you are too young to know anything about it."

"Madam, allow me to reassure you. This lift is worked by hydraulic pressure, the principle relied on being that water exerts pressure in proportion to the height of a column rather than in proportion to the diameter. In making use of this characteristic water is admitted into a cylinder, the pressure being regulated by the use of valves and a stable equilibrium being made possible by an ingenious system of counterpoises. I could go further into the minutiae of this particular machine, which of course has its variations from other models," he added as she gasped in astonishment, "but I doubt if you could follow the technical terms whose use an accurate description would necessitate, but I wish to assure you that if, after what I have said, you think you know more about this lift than I do you are at perfect liberty to step in and take its management out of my hands."—Pearson's.

STOPPED THE NOISE.

A Chemist's Suggestion to a Maker of Prussian Blue.

The great German chemist, Liebig, related that when he was a young man a manufacturer of prussian blue who was showing him through the works drew his attention to the deafening noise made by certain committing and mixing machines. These machines consisted of large iron mortars in which iron pestles were actuated by machinery. The pestles pounded the materials to a fine condition and mixed them. On Liebig's suggesting that some means ought to be devised to prevent the terrible din made by the machines the manufacturer told him that it was a singular fact that the more noise the pestles made the better was the blue produced. It happens that in making prussian blue iron is a necessary constituent of the mixture, a fact that did not seem to be thoroughly appreciated by the manufacturer. He was therefore much surprised when Liebig told him that the iron which was necessary to produce the color was rubbed off his machinery, the most extravagant way to supply it. He understood for the first time, moreover, why it was that the greater the noise from the friction of the pestles in the mortars the better the blue produced. He thus learned in an expensive way that it was better manufacturing to put iron into the mixture than to grind it off high priced machinery.—Frederick J. Maywald in American Industries.

Intending to visit a small village in Scotland, Archbishop Tait arranged to have his letters addressed to the local postoffice, which happened to be also the hamlet's general store. On the day of his arrival the prelate entered the shop and made inquiry if there was anything for the archbishop of Canterbury.

"Maybe you'll be that purrsen yerself?" the storekeeper suggested, without replying to the archbishop's question.

"Quite right," said Dr. Tait; "I am."

"Mrs. Rawson has a dozen dresses handsomer than the only good one I've got," a young wife complained to her husband, who, a domestic diplomatist, merely remarked: "Of course. DAFFODILS IN TOWN.

They Brought Back Memories of Home and True Love.

By HENRIETTA CRAWFORD.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

Everybody was sipping tea and nibbling cakes save Mildred. For her tea and cakes had no charm, perhaps because she had poured the one and dispensed the other steadily for the past hour.

She leaned back in her chair behind the tea table absently watching the little crowd of foshionably dressed men and women that were flitting about the parlors, yet conscious never theless that the man beside her was observing her and enjoying her experience from his own standpoint, which was so different from her own that she often wondered how he could find anything in her to interest him.

In a low voice he was telling her about the people before her eyes, how the woman in gray velvet had recently come into a fortune, how another woman in rather shabby silk with wonderful silver fox furs had lost hers, how Mrs. Poynter had been Mrs. Somebody else before divorce relegated her and how the girl in blue was sadly puzzled as to whether she would be happier with an American because she loved him or with an English eldest son because he was heir to a title.

She listened carelessly, scarcely replying. In reality her mind was busy with his own affairs. What did she care about these people, most of whom she had not seen before and might not see again? And what did they care about her?

She was merely their hostess' country cousin who poured tea and to whom Hills Hubbard was somewhat attentive. Cousin Nell had seen that her frock was appropriate, and she herself had been long enough in the gay world to learn that the majority judges one by one's raiment mainly. Yet Hills Hubbard seemed to judge her in different wise.

"You must be very nice to him," Cousin Nell had advised the first day Mildred was in the house.

"And why?" the girl had inquired.

"Because he is a good match, as good as there is to be had. That counts very much in my world, Mildred. It may be that you will charm him, being a type that he is unacquainted with."

Certainly it seemed that she had charmed him. Since the first day she met him he had been attentive to her, sending her flowers, taking her to ride in his motor and to lunch at the best places. Cousin Nell was delighted. And Mildred thought it fascinating business to be thus sought after by a man whom so many girls had tried unsuccessfully to capture.

She had been quite frank with him from the first in spite of Cousin Nell, telling him that her father was only a poor country doctor and this was the first time she had been asked to visit her cousin. He had seemed not to mind. Perhaps he had so much money himself that he did not care whether the woman he married had a dowry or not.

As she leaned back in her chair she was wondering how it would seem to always have plenty of money, to buy one's frocks at the best shops, to live in a house where the work was done as by magic, to go about in a blue and gold motor and be able to hear all the best music.

Just that afternoon Cousin Nell had said when she came in to inspect her toilet:

"You understand, Mildred, that Mr. Hubbard will have something to say to you before you go home. There is but one answer for you to make, and I am sure he expects that one."

"But—but I'm not certain I care for him enough," Mildred had stammered.

Nell had stared at her.

"My dear child! Do you think that any one in these days marries for love alone?"

"I didn't know," the girl said humbly. Then she thought of her cousin's elderly husband, who was seldom visible save at breakfast time, and the hitherto concealed reason for Nell's strange marriage was suddenly revealed to her.

Mildred had indeed experienced much since coming into her cousin's house. None of the golden rules which her parents had taught her were applicable here. Other ideals were cherished, other aims kept in sight. At first it had been very mystifying to the girl to find that the teachings of her whole lifetime were of no account. It was as if she had taken great pains to acquire Latin only to find that French was demanded of her.

Her father and mother had married for love. Money they knew to be a great good which one could yet be happy without. The poorest person was as good as the wealthiest, provided he was of moral character. Yet, after all, when one was constantly meeting strangers how could one know more about them than their appearance revealed? Who cared whether Mrs. Poynter's first husband was living?

She was the wife of a notable rich man and very agreeable. In Harlin she would have been looked upon with suspicion, but here she was courted. Yes, money was a wonderful thing. It brought one so much. Even if she did not love Mr. Hubbard she could no doubt be very happy with him. To be able to wear a dress like that gray velvet and black furs with long silver hairs in them, each one of which represented a purseful of money, and rubies like Mrs. Ogden's!

The girl drew a long breath and stirred uneasily. What would her father and mother say? What would Tom think? She bit her lip as the memory of his brave yet tender face possessed her. She could almost hear him saying:

"Now, look here, Daffy-Down-Dilly, you are going up to Maine to visit your dine relatin, and she'll have some fellow picked out for you, I know. He'll be rich and—and different, and that will end my chance, which always was mighty poor, wasn't it, dear? If it wasn't, you'd say one word, and then I wouldn't feel so entirely down and out as I will be if you go without saying it."

She had not said the word, and so she was quite free as far as Tom was concerned to marry Mr. Hubbard if she chose. With a start she came back to reality and the sound of his voice.

"You can understand that everybody is watching Miss Stephen with a great deal of interest. But I can't be too direct in my talk that the [illegible] We're out."

"What makes you think so?" Mildred asked.

"Because I don't know. It's a woman's intuition, I suppose, but I feel it. The American girl is always successful in her business. I feel it and for the present my affections are [illegible]. The English girl is a fine old house, access of the best, lacks neither breeding and a certain amount of good looks, but is a little cold."

Mildred sighed and looked again at the girl in blue. She was very pretty as she stood with her back to a great mass of daffodils particularly, but now something about them set her heart to beating quickly with memories of home. A month later there would be a great showing of them in the little garden she and her mother tended. The dear, dear things! Nell had ordered them simply because they looked well against the wall paper of her drawing room, but to Mildred's girlish fancy they were vital, appealing. They meant home, the country, springtime, yes, and Tom, walking toward her, his face full of joy at sight of her.

Oh, they had no business to be here in this hot, crowded room, jostled by furs and velvets, simple, open air blossoms that they were! No one apparently was aware of them save herself and the girl in blue, who had drawn one from the jar and was pulling it to pieces.

A woman came across the room, set her cup down upon the table, smiled at Mildred and leaned toward Hills Hubbard.

"I have something to tell you which I just now heard on the best authority," she said. "You have lost your wager, my dear boy. Love wins. Miss Bertha Stephen marries the American after all."

"Is that possible?" he exclaimed. "I would not have believed it of her."

"Nor I. Thank you, no more tea, my dear Miss Verrel. I am just leaving." She made her adieus and passed on gayly. Mildred's eyes, with a new expression in them, were again on the girl in blue.

He turned sharply.

"You would do it yourself?"

"Yes," Mildred said.

He studied her a moment.

"Yes, I believe you would," he said, "but in your case there are no parallel circumstances. May I come tomorrow when you are alone, dear, and explain to you what I mean?"

Mildred turned white, but she faced him bravely.

"No," she gasped. "No. It would be of no use. You see, I have just made up my mind to go home tomorrow. It's the best place for me, I think, and they want me, father and my mother and"— She stopped abruptly, with a vivid blush.

"Ah, I see," Hills Hubbard said. He looked very straight before him for an instant.

In Mildred's ears were ringing the absurd old nursery rhyme with which Tom had teased her before she set forth to visit her cousin Nell:

Daffy-Down-Dilly has gone up to town
In her yellow petticoat and her green gown.

But Daffy-Down-Dilly was going home from town to be happy with her own.

The Lady and the Cobra.

An Englishwoman residing in India one evening found to her horror that a huge cobra had coiled itself about her veranda rails, near which she sat playing the violin. She was too near the snake to run with safety, so she continued playing while she gradually edged away. At first her only idea was to keep the creature thus engaged while she escaped, but when she had gained a safer distance and perhaps fascinated by the unwonted sight a strange inspiration seized her. She played air after air of different characters.

The effect was magical. That snake behaved like an ardent, hot blooded disciple of Pagnahd.—Every variation in the music, whether of volume or of tone, produced instantly a corresponding change in the attitude of the cobra. If she played a lively dance it swayed its body sideways in quick time and yet in graceful curves. Once she struck a number of false notes in rapid succession on purpose. The cobra writhed and writhed in pain, as if suddenly struck with a whip.

Thus the creature behaved like a mad musician till the lady, getting tired of the sport, gradually moved herself further and further and then made a sudden bolt into her room and banged the door, leaving the cobra to wander disconsolate to its lair in the fields.—London Chronicle.

How to Care For Goldfish.

The secret of success in caring for goldfish is to keep the water they are in fresh and sweet. Their globe should be emptied and its water renewed as often as every second day. Lift each fish out gently in a glass full of water, empty the globe, wash it out, then put in fresh water and put the fish back again. Clear, sweet rainwater should be used, and its temperature should be raised to 75 or 80 degrees by warming a part of it. Sparkling well water is too cold for the fish to thrive in and too pure, for the animalculae of rainwater form an important part of the food of these fish. They need no other sustenance than a very few breadcrumbs sprinkled in their water daily, for overfeeding will kill them very quickly.

How to Tell Good Cheese.

A cheese with an inflation of goodness will have an even colored, not a mottled, rind. The moment you press your finger tips in the rind you can begin to judge of the interior makeup of a cheese. If it yields readily to the pressure of the fingers and the rind breaks or does not spring back readily when the pressure is withdrawn, you have got a soft article, caused by the slack coding of the curd, a want of acid, or both. At best it will have an insipid flavor and will "go off" as it ages. A good cheese will be mellow to the touch, yet firm. Its rind will be of an even tint, elastic and free from puffs, and the sample will reveal firm, close grained, buttery cheese of a nutty flavor.

How to Freshen Potted Ferns.

It is said that ferns may be kept fresh by giving them a steaming of three hours. Once every week or so they should be put into the bathroom, shutting all windows and doors of the room to keep in the steam. The bathtub should then be filled with hot water. It will give out a good steam. The room should not be roused suddenly after this is done. By treating the ferns to this bath it is not necessary to wash and spray the leaves, which does not give so satisfactory a result.

How to Get Rid of Roaches.

If roaches appear in rooms, sprinkle the floors well with borax. Wipe all closet shelves and floor with a strong solution of alum water, two pounds of the alum dissolved in a gallon of boiling water. If the roaches are in the kitchen, set the following trap for them: Mix a strong decoction of common poke root with an equal quantity of black molasses boiled to a strup. Spread upon bread and place near the crevices frequented by the bugs. They will eat it greedily and then die.

How to Hang Decorative Plates.

If you wish to hang a large platter or plaque fasten three or four picture hooks in place at regular intervals over the edge with wire instead of using the "plate hangers" of the shops. For small plates, etc., use medium sized dress hooks and fasten with wire in the same way.

Care of the Colt.

It is just as important in winter the colts regularly every day as to feed regularly in order to keep them in thrifty condition.

Have the feet of unshod colts leveled at least once a month with a rasp, unless the animals get exercise on bare ground; also see that the feet are kept well rounded and the toes are not too long.

A lump of rock salt should be kept in the manger of every animal of the horse kind.

The Captain of the Kansas.

By LOUIS TRACY,

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

Copyright, 1903, by Edward J. Clode.

manner this morning and your words last night. I paid no heed at the time to the innuendo that I had come on deck to find him—to waylay him, as I have heard men say when speaking of a type of woman I despise. So I resolved to straighten out a stupid little tangle. It would be ridiculous in our present state of suspended animation to let such a slight thing mar our friendship."

Elsie was indulging in that most delusive thing, self persuasion. It was not surprising, therefore, that she failed to note the unmixed satisfaction with which Christobal listened.

"And I forgiven, then?" he asked, with a new tenderness in his voice.

"Oh, yes; let us laugh at it."

"But"—

"Please let us talk of something more useful. I have a little plan, and you might ask the captain if he approves of it. We have plenty of strong canvas. What do you say if I set to work and cover in the promenade deck fore and aft as well as both sides? Then if the Indians try to seize the ship they would not be able to gain a lodgment at so many points simultaneously. It would simplify the defense, so to speak."

"Admirable! I am sure Courtenay will agree. Indeed, I am ashamed that we superior males failed to hit on the idea earlier. Before I go let me be certain that my forgiveness is complete."

"Shall we quarrel about a degree of blessedness? I assure you I like you more than ever. When all is said and done, you thought I was flinging myself at our excellent captain's head, so you tried to spare me the pangs of unrequited love." The words hurt, but she did not flinch. Christobal, anxious to deceive himself, was radiant.

"Your charity goes too far," he cried. "That was not the exact reason. No, my dear Miss Maxwell; I begin to exercise a newborn discretion. I shall not elucidate that cryptic remark until after New Year's day. But I don't mind telling you why I have hit on a definite date. If all goes well with us—and we have had so many escapes that Providence may well send us a few more—the Kansas should steam out of our little bay of Good Hope about that period. Then I shall remind you of our discussion and keep my promise."

With that he left her. After a gasp or two of surprise, for Elsie could read only one meaning into his words, she hurried up the bridge companion to arouse Mr. Boyle and ask what he would like for luncheon.

CHAPTER XII.

THE captain was enthusiastic when he heard of Elsie's idea for the protection of the main deck—"an excellent notion," he termed it, but he scouted the suggestion that she should undertake the work herself.

"You little know what hauling taut heavy canvas means," he said when they met at lunch. "It would tear the skin off your hands. No, Miss Maxwell; we can put our Chileans on to that job. I have something better for you to do. Can you map?"

"I have copied heaps of plans for my father," she told him.

"Excellent! At noon today I took an observation, so I intend to devote an hour to revising the chart. Will you help? Joey is in the scheme already. Then the admiralty will gracefully acknowledge the survey supplied by Miss Elsie Maxwell, Captain Arthur Courtenay and Joey, otherwise known as 'the pup.'"

His allusion to the dog by name recalled "Jose the Whelp," but Elsie thought she would retain that tiny scrap of defective information for the present. So she simply said:

"You will explain to me my part of the undertaking, of course?"

"Certainly. You must first correct the index error. Then you subtract the dip and the refraction in altitude, take the sun's semidiameter from the nautical almanac and add the parallax. Do you follow me?"

"Perfectly. It sounds the easiest thing. But I don't wish to hear the remarks of the admiralty when they see the result."

"I am interested in navigation to the slight extent possible to a mere yachtsman. May I join you?" interposed Christobal.

"Oh, yes!" said the captain offhandedly.

Elsie repressed the smile on her lips. Did the worthy doctor fear developments if this harmless mapmaking progressed in his absence? She imagined, too, that Courtenay's acquiescence in Christobal's desire to be present was not wholly in accordance with his innermost wish. She promptly crushed that dangerous fancy. The captain was only seeking for some excuse to take her away from the rough work of rigging the extra awnings. How odd that the other thought should have cropped up first!

"You still think the Kansas will win clear of her difficulties?" she said rather hurriedly. "After all, the ship's safety is essential to your survey."

"Every hour strengthens my opinion," was the confident reply. "Suarez says that there is a reasonable chance of occasional brief spells of fine weather at this period of the year. At any rate, the gale may not be absolutely continuous, and Walker is assured that he can patch up the engines for half speed. Given a calm day—a day like this, for instance—we can reach the strait in a few hours."

"And the Indians?"

"I leave them out of my reckoning. What else can I do?"

"Kill 'em," said Tollemache.

Courtenay glanced sharply at his fellow countryman. He disliked these references to the Araucanian bogy in Elsie's presence.

"We have dynamite aboard," said Tollemache. "Why not construct a couple of infernal machines which could be fired by pulling a string and let them drift toward the canoes when the Indians are near enough?"

"It is worth trying," was Courtenay's brief comment, though he saw later that Tollemache's suggestion was a very useful one.

Elsie's first task was to prepare a large scale drawing of the southern part of Hanover island as set forth in admirably chart No. 1837 (sheet 2, Patagonia), which is the only trustworthy record available for shipmasters using the outer passage between the gulf of Penas and the strait of Magellan. It was a simple matter to fill in the few contours given. The neighboring small islands were shown in reasonable detail, but the whole western coast of Hanover island itself consisted of a dotted line and a solitary peak. Stokes mountain, the height of which could be estimated and its position triangulated from the sea. Even Concepcion strait, on the north, and the San Blas channel, on the south, were marked in those significant dotted lines. The coast was practically unknown to civilized man.

It was borne in on the girl while she worked that the chief marvel in her present condition was the triumph of science over nature in its most hostile mood. The Kansas boasted all the comforts and luxuries of a well equipped hotel. Seated at the same table as herself was a skillful sailor, using logarithms, secants and cosecants, polar distances and hour angles as if he were in some university class room.

She stole a glance at Courtenay. He was so keenly engaged on the business in hand, so bent on achieving accuracy in his figures, that she chided herself for her reverie. Then she wondered if he ever gave a thought to that promised wife of his, who must soon suffer the agony of knowing that the Kansas was overdue.

Elsie was sufficiently well acquainted with shipping to realize the sensation that would be created by the first cablegram from Coronel announcing the disappearance of the steamer in the strait. The Valparaiso newspapers would be full of surmises as to the vessel's fate. They would publish full details of the valuable cargo and would give a list of the passengers and officers. Ah! Ventana would learn then, if he had not heard it earlier, that she was on board. And he alone would understand the true reason of her flight from Chile. Her cheeks flushed, and she applied herself more closely to the chart she was copying. She had left a good deal unsaid in her brief statement that morning. How strange, how utterly unexpected, it was that Ventana's name should fall from Courtenay's lips—Courtenay of all men living! And what did Isobel mean during that last dreadful scene, ere she was carried away to the boat by screaming in her frenzy that Ventana had taken "an ample vengeance?" Vengeance for what? Had the half breed dared to make the same proposal to the rich and highly placed Isobel Baring that he did not scruple to put before the needy governess? Surely that was impossible. There were limits even to his audacity—

"Well, how is my chief hydrographer progressing?"

Courtenay's cheery voice banished the unwelcome specter of Ventana. Elsie started.

"I do believe you were day dreaming," said the captain, with a surprised smile. "A penny for your thoughts."

"I don't think you can pay me," she retorted, hoping to cover her confusion.

"Won't you accept Chilean currency?"

"Not on the high seas."

"But you are on dry land. Please make a dot on your map at 51 degrees 14 minutes 9 seconds south and 74 degrees 59 minutes 3 seconds west. That is the present position of the ship. Let me pin this compass card on the table. Use the parallel ruler, regard each inch as a mile, and I'll do the rest by guesswork."

Courtenay took his binoculars and went on to the bridge. He called out the apparent distance of each landmark he could distinguish, described it and gave its true bearing. In the result Elsie found she had prepared a clear and fairly accurate chart of the bay and its headlands, while the position of the distant range of mountains was marked with tolerable precision. But Courtenay was far from being satisfied.

"If I had a base line or even a fresh set of points taken higher up the inlet I could improve on my part of the survey," he said. "Yours is admirable, Miss Maxwell. Of course I know you are an artist, but mapping is a thing apart. That is first rate."

"Perhaps you may be able to secure fresh data when the Kansas puts to sea again," said Christobal.

Not so very long ago it was customary to treat children as if they were stupid and naughty grownup people. Now there is a tendency to run to the opposite extreme and to treat them as if they were a great deal cleverer than their parents. There are even people who set themselves deliberately to "study" their children in much the same spirit as a biologist would study a new kind of germ.—London Mirror.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The fifty fifth annual state convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union began its work at the First M. E. church, Battle Creek, Tuesday afternoon 2 o'clock with a consecration service led by the state evangelistic, Superintendent Mrs. Leona T. Fields. Roll call found all the general officers and vice presidents present except one.

The afternoon was taken up by miscellaneous business and a touching memorial service in memory of our promoted sisters and friends, led by Mrs. Annie Andrus, of Detroit, and county presidents problems. The greatest problem to get women who will do things and it was said that one L. T. L. was worth about two Unions.

In the evening a delightful banquet was given by Dr. Kellogg free to the delegates, in the gymnasium of the sanitarium. After the banquet proper a number of short toasts were given with Mrs. E. L. Calkins, state president, acting as toast mistress. The responses were brilliant in feminine oratory, all sparkling with references to the W. C. T. U. work.

Wednesday morning De Carolyn Geisel, of the sanatarium, gave a demonstration on health culture and Dr. J. H. Kellogg gave a short talk to the assembly in which he answered questions which were asked by the ladies and showed how many of the chronic diseases of the race today originated in the kitchen because of bad cooking and the wrong kind of diet. He closed with a plea for mothers to use better judgment in this matter. In the evening welcomes were extended to the convention in behalf of the city, the churches, the schools, the woman's club and woman's league, county and local W. C. T. U. and Manager L. E. Steward, of the local option league, who made the positive statement, founded upon experience that if a businesslike campaign was started in "wet" counties that not one election would be lost. He stated that the business of one grocer had been increased $500 in 30 days since the first of May.

Mrs. Julia R. Parish, corresponding secretary, stated that the work of the past year had been the most strenuous in the history of the state union. In the local option campaign the unions paid for speakers, held meetings and prayer meetings, posted bills, wrote letters, argued with people and opened their pocket books. They also spent $2005.73 during the campaign. There had been lack of recognition of the work however. In one session the fact was brought out that a person can now start in the upper part of the lower peninsula and walk to the Gulf of Mexico without stepping on a wet territory. A local option demonstration was given by the presidents of the dry counties. Thirty ladies gowned in white carrying banners marched to the platform, where each gave a one minute speech and all sang "We'll Work for Prohibition Till we Make the Map all White." As the women marched and counter marched the audience cheered with enthusiasm and Dr. Dickie, in his address later, referred to the demonstration as one of the prettiest sights he had ever seen. The Charlevoix delegate had a part in this.

Each days sessions was marked by keen interest and large attendance. The net gain in membership in the state this year was reported to be 1463. The sixth district being the banner district with a membership of 1913, their increase in membership the past year being 185, one woman alone securing an even one hundred names. This union marched upon the platform tied together with white ribbon and read in unison a poem and gave a district yell. When the delegation left the platform the audience sang "Blest be the Tie that Binds."

The following resolutions among others were adopted:

"Resolved, that the Michigan Woman's Christian Temperance Union is in favor of the reading of the bible in our public schools and the teaching of reverence for sacred things; further, be it,

"Resolved, That the young people of this generation should be taught respect for old age.

"Resolved, That we urge every union to greater diligence in Loyal Temperence Legion work and medal contests, for in this work we educate both children and parents.

"Resolved, That this convention record itself as directly opposed to all coarse or vulgar illustrations on bill boards or elsewhere, and most strongly opposed to the colored and illustrated comic supplement of modern newspapers as a menace to the morals of our youth and a disgrace to journalism.

"Shepherd. Replied the Arabian cheerfully.

The one sided conversation kept on awhile longer, the light of desperate resolve meanwhile burning brighter and brighter. Then the reader raised his eyes to a stranger, his neighbor across the aisle, and suddenly demanded, "What is your name, sir?"

"Ward," said the stranger.

"Yes, yes, of course!" cried the reader briskly. "Mr. Ward, let me introduce Mr. Shepherd."

By which simple but ingenious expedient the torrent of extraneous matter was diverted to poor Ward, and the reader read happily ever after.—Harper's Weekly.

The Next Best Thing.

"My heavens, Willie! Where did you get that black eye?"

"Johnny Smith hit me with his fist."

"And I hope you remembered what your Sunday school teacher said about heaping coals of fire on the heads of our enemies?"

"Well, I didn't have any coal, so I just stuck his head in the ash barrel."—Judge.

"What would you say," said the prophet of woe, "if I were to tell you that in a very short space of time all the rivers in this country would dry up?"

"I would say," replied the patient man, "go and do thou likewise."—Stray Stories.

FOR JACK SORES.

Remedy of a Veterinarian That Should Give Good Results.

One of the most persistent inquiries is for a jack sore cure. This is probably the case because such a sore is one of the most persistent of sores. We have never seen any real satisfactory explanation of the fact that sores almost invariably appear on the legs of jacks and that once there are very apt to remain despite all manner of treatment, writes a veterinarian in the Breeder's Gazette of Chicago. Now and again some handler of jacks believes he has found a specific and passes the word around, only to find that what cures in one case will not cure in another apparently similar case.

These sores are very annoying, especially in fly time, and many a handler has been willing to pay a round price for a treatment that will cure them. We do not know that we can furnish such a treatment, but we submit for trial a prescription which has been reliably represented as about as sure a cure as medicine affords for any ailment. Here it is:

Boracic acid, calomel, subnitrate of bismuth, of each four drams; iodoform, one dram; carbolic acid, forty drops; vaseline, enough to make three ounces. Mix and make an ointment.

This ought to be a specific, as nearly all of its ingredients are specifics! It is somewhat of a "shotgun prescription." Each of its ingredients is in much favor with physicians as a skin remedy, and it would seem that if one failed to act the others should. This ointment should give excellent results in general use for old sores or fresh cuts, even if it does not cure jack sores. It comes so highly recomaended that we would surely give it a trial on jack sores.

SELF SUCKING COWS.

Inexpensive Devices That Will Cure Them of the Habit.

In answer to an inquiry about a device to prevent a cow from sucking herself, a dairyman says:

"Securing two lengths of small cord, also six pieces of round, light wood about twelves inches long and one and one-half inches in diameter, I bored three-eighth inch holes at each end of the sticks, then, having tied a knot at one end of the rope, I threaded on the sticks. Not having shorter pieces of wood, I bored through the center likewise to thread between the longer sticks. I knotted the cord on either side of the sticks, then, throwing the same across the cow's neck, having regulated the knots and sticks to suit the small of the neck and also the shoulder, I tied the ends of the cords around the first knot. The illustration shows the result. This device prevents the cow from reaching her flanks and in my case has stopped the falling and will save quite a few pounds of butter."

Another device to cure cows of this habit is a spiked halter. A buckle at the upper part behind the ears makes it quite easy to detach. The spikes should not be over two inches long. They are best made of wrought nails, but a good wire nail with a flat head will suffice. The nails may be placed in an iron vise and the heads flattened as much as possible. They are then driven into a piece of thick leather and secured by sewing or riveting it upon another piece of leather.

A SPIKED HALTER.

An old halter can be used to good advantage. First drive the spikes in the nose piece as desired, then sew or rivet a piece of leather over the heads of the nails.

Rough Treatment Costly.

Few farmers realize what it costs to be rough with cows. Make a test and be convinced. Use the Babcock test when the cows are handled quietly and properly and again when they are yelled at and hurried in the stable. The loss following rough treatment will astonish most farmers. A careful milker, quiet in his ways about the stable, is worth many dollars more in a single season than one who is brutal. There is not a cow, no matter how poorly bred, that will not respond to kind treatment. The more highly bred the more susceptible she is to these influences. Never allow a harsh, unfeeling man in the cow barn. It is not possible to give a cow too much care.

THE FEEDER.

In order to promote health let the hogs have all the ashes and charcoal they will eat.

Cottonseed Meal For Lambs.

A bulletin of the department of agriculture says that a mixture of two parts of cornmeal and one part of cottonseed meal fed for ten weeks to lambs with pasturage gave a weekly gain of 2.05 pounds per head. The lambs were fed about eight and one-half pounds each week of the mixture.

Beginning With Pigs.

I begin feeding the pigs as soon as they will eat with soaked corn and middlings, says a breeder. It is well to steal out the ration by weight or measure, so as to be on the safe side and not overfeed. As soon as you have them used to this give them plenty of bone and muscle forming food. Milk, middlings, oilmeal, tankage and some corn, with a run on pasture, will give you a 300 pound pig in eight or nine months. Get a good growth first, and after five months you can add plenty of corn, provided you feed other things with it. I like oilmeal for this purpose. By following this method you can get your hogs on to the early market, which I consider best in both fall and spring.

Rations For Ewes In Lamb.

A few rations that have been fed to ewes in lamb with good results follow. They are the daily feed per 100 pounds live weight:

Second crop clover hay alone, 3.5 to 3.7 pounds.

Corn fodder in which are nubbins, 3.7 pounds.

Second crop clover hay, 1.8 pounds; roots, 1.5 pounds; shelled corn, 8 pounds.

Second crop clover hay, 1.5 pounds; corn fodder, 1 pound; oats and corn, 3 pounds.

Bathing and Sanitary Arrangements as Planned. Tickets are Going Fast for the Entertainments

Few, who have not visited the site of National Boy City, realize the amount of work which has been done by Manager Brown during the past few weeks in getting the ground ready and in shape for the coming of the thousands of boys next month.

Leaving the main road just after it crosses the railroad tracks, the road to the city leads directly to the grounds, the first building which you will see will be the large dining hall which is forty by sixty feet in size and will seat one hundred and forty people. A refrigerator is built directly into the building. In this building, too, is the large range in which five hundred loaves of bread can be baked at one time. The buildings are all constructed with a rustic effect with tent roofs.

In the dining hall the hat racks are made from birch trees with the limbs cut off. The seats at the tables, carrying out the general plan, are made of round birch pedestals with the tops nailed on.

Across from the dining hall to the northeast is the administration building. In this building will be located the bank, post-office, all the city offices, information bureau and office of General Manager Brown. In the center of this building is a twenty foot rotunda. This building is constructed mostly of white birch.

To the right of the dining hall is a building for the camera club, this building is fitted up with developing tanks and everything needed for picture making. Instruction will also be given here in the art of taking pictures. Pictures which are taken during the day will be developed in this building and shown during the evening entertainment. Prizes will be given for the best pictures.

To the left of the dining hall, a building sixteen by twenty-eight has been erected as a supply station. In this building a complete grocery store will be maintained, it being possible to obtain anything needed here.

In the center of this group of buildings, a grand stand has been erected in the form of an octagon. During meal hours the famous Boy City band will furnish music from this stand.

To the east of these buildings the grounds have been specially prepared, a large tent which will occupy a space ninety by one hundred and sixty feet, taking up considerable of the space. In this tent the entertainments will take place. The program has been published in previous issues and at the nominal price for which season tickets are offered, no one should miss this feature of the city.

But what will prove of most interest to the boys as well as their parents, will be the arrangements made for bathing. A dock has been constructed east of the circus grounds, running one hundred fifty feet into the lake. At this point the shore line of Pine Lake runs back for some distance, forming a natural bay. At the end of the dock there is six feet of water. A danger line will extend from the end of the dock clear across the bay. On the shore Manager Brown will construct a deep pool for boys who do not care to bathe in the large lake. A large house will be erected on the shore for dressing rooms. A tower will be erected on the dock, where a lookout will be stationed at all times during bathing hours and life preservers will always be handy.

Manager Brown in making the for the swimming arrangements has carried out the general plan of the city and nothing has been ommitted, which will make Boy City an ideal place for boys to spend their vacations in perfect safety. Not only has all precautions been taken to guard against possible accidents at the bathing grounds, but the sanitary arrangements are as near perfect as possible.

A well, over eighty feet in depth has been put down near the entrance, from which cool, clear, spring water will be pumped by gasoline power to a large storage tank, from which it will be carried by pipe lines all over the grounds. In selecting the location, a natural beauty spot was found, which needed but little improvements save the making of roads and clearing up of the grounds for the erection of the tents. Leading from the entrance in a circle down to the lake front and from there around the whole grounds a boulevard has been built.

Docks, both for large and small boats have been built and a large refreshment stand has been constructed near the dining hall, where all kinds of refreshments can be secured by visitors to the city.

While it has taken a vast amount of work, and will yet, to get the grounds in complete shape, Manager Brown is hustling them to completion. It means much to Charlevoix to have this famous city located here and all of us should do what we can to push the good thing along.

H. B HUDSON DEAD

One of the Most Prominent Men in North Michigan

Was a Leader in Political and Fraternal Societies

Hon. H. B. Hudson, one of the most prominent residents of Northern Michigan, died at his home at Mancelona Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock, death being due to infirmities incidental to his advanced age, he being 75 years old.

In addition to his widow, Mr. Hudson leaves three daughters, Miss Ama Hudson, Miss Sewell Hudson and Mrs. John Wilson.

For a quarter of a century, Mr. Hudson had been a resident of Mancelona, being engaged in the practice of law. For five years he was president of the village and previous to coming there, was prosecuting attorney and county clerk of Allegan county. He possessed the distinction of having been the first white child born in Battle Creek, and some years ago was a candidate for lieutenant governor.

When the Civil war came, Mr. Hudson enlisted in the 10th Michigan volunteers and served valiantly. He was prominent in the G. A. R. circles as well as in other capacities and the post has lost an earnest and excellent member.

Mr. Hudson was an Odd Fellow and took a leading part in the work of the order. Several times he was honored by being sent to the grand lodge and he made the principles of fraternity a part of his life.

In Leelanau County

Sunday June 13, Rev. R. N. Holsaple, Assistant Superintendent of the Anti Saloon League spoke in the Northport churches. Union services were held both morning and evening. The expected trip to Omena in the afternoon was given up on account of the storm. In the morning Mr. Holsaple gave an interesting address in the Congregational church on the "Organization and work of the Anti Saloon League" and in the evening gave an address in the M. E. church on "Some phases of the Liquor Problem and the fight against the traffic." Mr. Holsaple is a forceful speaker, and the evening address was especially helpful, entirely free from anything abusive, and abounding with convincing facts. Leelanau County will be organized for a Local Option Campaign within the next few weeks. Northport Leader.

Suggestions for the good of the association.

Closing.

All are invited to come whether members of the association or not, and bring something to help hold the tables down until dinner is eaten.

It is especially desirable that the executive committee and stock holders should be present at this meeting.

At the present time there is every indication of the heaviest fruit crop ever harvested in this region and if we are to get the benefit of the best markets and shipping facilities we must talk and plan to that end. It is only through the medium of these meetings that an organized effort can be made for the benefit of this section.

LUMBER TRADE ON PACIFIC COAST

Officials of the Michigan-Pacific Lumber Co. Looking for Early Resumption of Business

With the arrival home of the officials of the Michigan-Pacific lumber company from their long trip to their property on Vancouver island, comes the news that mills in British Columbia have been resuming operations rapidly during the past month or so.

From Seattle, under date of June 11, now comes the welcome news of what local lumbermen predict—is the first step in the big revival of the lumber trade in the Pacific coast states south of the Canadian boundary line.

On June 11 specifications were received from the east for 12,000,000 feet of lumber for bids to be opened July 10. The specifications come from car shops in Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Louis. The Chicago and the Milwaukee shops are asking tenders on 10,000,000 feet and the St. Louis shops on 2,000,000 feet. The material, according to advices received here, is to be used in the construction of a large number of refrigerator cars for the Northern Pacific Railroad company.

The receipt of these specifications today, coming closely upon the letting of a contract to Oregon mills for 8,000,000 feet by the Pullman company, causes local lumbermen to believe that from now on the revival in the lumber trade will be rapid.

Mr. Charles A. Phelps, of Grand Rapids, treasurer of the Michigan-Pacific Lumber company, states that they are putting in at the present time about 100,000 feet of logs per day which is netting $11 at the mill. "While these prices are very much lower than prevailed in 1906," said Mr. Phelps, "they are very satisfactory to us in view of the fact that all our estimates on our property were based on logs at $9.50. We look for considerably higher prices within the next few months and are storing our logs at the present time rather than to market our full production at present prices."

Call at the bowling alley for a half hour's exercise. 24-4-f.

WORLD'S BIGGEST BEET FIELD

Three Sections of Land Under Cultivation to Sugar Beets.

Tulare county, California, has the distinction of possessing this year the largest sugar beet field in the world. The big tract, which contains within its confines nearly three sections of land, a total of 1700 acres, is situated near Tague, between Tulare and Goshen, California, on the main line of the Southern Pacific. There are other large fields in Colorado and in other parts of this state, but none that can boast of anything like the magnitude of the Tagus tract, and therein lies Tulare county's great fame. It is about seven miles around the big field and requires about an hour for an auto completely to encircle it and in a buggy one may ride for hours to skirt the place. The crop is the property of the sugar company. Speaking of it recently, Nathan Cole, Jr., of Los Angeles, one of the officers of the Pacific Sugar Corporation, with factories near Visalia and Corcoran, said that the beets are looking fine and are fast acquiring the necessary saccharine to make them profitable for sugar making. Besides the big tract mentioned, the company has another big field on the Bliss ranch, east of Tulare, where there are 1011 acres of growing beets and other fields aggregating 855 acres, a grand total of 3116 acres. An additional 2500 acres have been planted by about 100 farmers, making altogether planted this year 6500 acres, from which it is expected to harvest at least 5,000 acres allowing for a large amount which may not have been properly cared for. This is against 1800 acres harvested last year and 1500 the year before. Both the Corcoran and Visalia plants will be operated this year with an output estimated at between 100,000 and 150,000 bags of sugar, of between 5000 and 7500 tons. This is against 13,000 bags last year and 21,000 the year before.

CHICKENS ARE DRUNKARDS

New Jersey Farmer Having Trouble With His Flock.

Jacob Foos, a farmer of Livingston, New Jersey, is seeking a gold cure for his chickens. Thirty Plymouth Rocks in his barnyard have become inebriates, and Foos feels it is his duty to reform them.

A few weeks ago Foos placed an old whiskey barrel, with an end knocked out, in an open space near the henhouse as a shelter for a hen with a brood of little chicks that had been hatched out early. When the sun became hot the hen retired to the barrel with her brood. After a few days Foos observed that every chicken in his barnyard seemed to be in a half stupor—even the young chicks. The roosters went about the yard crowing in hiccoughy way and the hens clucked in hoarse, guttural tones.

Foos was puzzled and he called in W. F. Merrill, a veterinarian, who inspected the coops and found nothing wrong. Then he examined the barrel. One sniff at the air of the interior enlightened him.

"The chickens are druok," Merrill said. Then he explained to Foos that the whiskey barrel, which had been in a damp cellar all winter had been affected by the sun, which brought the alcohol out of the wood. The hen that pecked at the wood first must have communicated the secret to the other fowls, and all became visitors to the barnyard "speak-easy."

Foos thought an easy solution of the difficulty would be to burn the whiskey barrel. This he did, but the craving for drink had become too strong in the chickens. An old rooster, with the instinct of a confirmed toper, found his way to an improvised silo where Foos kept a supply of malt which he buys from a brewery to feed his cattle. This proved a substitute for the whisky barrel, and soon all the chickens were clustered about the silo, devouring the malt. Foos has shut the chickens off from their new form of dissipation, but fears that unless he breaks them of the habit they will wander off the farm in quest of strong drink.

WILL CELEBRATE NATIONAL HOLIDAY

Neighboring Towns are Making Great Preparations

CENTRAL LAKE, BOYNE CITY, PETOSKEY

Will be the Gathering Places for Charlevoix this Year

As the Holiday Falls on Sunday, Celebrations Will Take Place Saturday. Watch Further Notices.

The committees having in charge the celebration of the Fouth of July at Boyne City are busy these days pulling in together the fag ends to make it a hummer. East Jordan, Charlevoix, Boyne Falls and other near-by places will join to make the celebration a success. The base ball games, one in the morning and one in the afternoon between Boyne City and the Good Lucks of Detroit will probably be the fastest game of the national sport ever seen in Boyne City, as all the players come from the Southern Michigan and other leagues.

The sports committee are preparing stunts that will amuse and entertain the crowd. It is possible there will be no fireworks, as many people are opposed to burning up the money in this way.

Petoskey is also preparing to celebrate the day and will not fall behind the other towns in making it a day which will long be remembered in this vicinity.

Central Lake will celebrate Saturday, July 3.

Central Lake has a reputation of doing whatever she undertakes and doing it right, the loyalty of her people and the generosity of her business men being proverbial throughout this part of Michigan. It is not the intention to strive to outdo neighboring villages and cities with the magnitude of our celebration, but simply to have a good old-fashioned picnic celebration for the pleasure of the people of this territory and visitors.

There will be boating, for which this place is incomparably located base ball games, sports of all kinds, races, big picnic dinner, doubtless some oratory, and stirring and patriotic music by the Central Lake Band, dancing all day and evening, and all without the unpleasant features of a big celebration in an overcrowded town.

If you want a quiet good time, lots of good clean fun, you'll surely come to Central Lake, Saturday, July 3.

A LONG JOURNEY

Body of Edith E. Mason Loisket Brought Home for Burial

John A. Loisket and child arrived in the city Friday evening, with the body of his wife, formerly Miss Edith E. Mason of this city. Mr. Loisket left Manilla on the United States transport, A. T. Thomas May 11, and has been since that time making the long journey. The burial took place at Brookside.

Mrs. Loisket was married to Mr. Loisket at Santa Cruz, California in 1901 and went from there to the Phillipine Islands where she died in the Civil hospital Manilla September 20, 1908, leaving beside her husband one child three years of age, besides numerous relatives in this city.

Good Reasons for Kicking.

Automobilists are crying loud and long about a piece of impassible road about three miles north of Norwood. Three machines were stuck there one day last week and had to be towed out. Strong and emphatic complaints were made of this same piece of road last fall, when they were hauling products to town, and again this spring. Most of the autos are getting their turn at it.

Why don't somebody get busy and remedy this state of affairs?

Where's your good roads committee that work with the state authorities on this question?

Lots of money is left in northern Michigan in the course of a season by the autoist and it is to our advantage to keep the roads in good condition for them.

Neighborhood Notes

Owing to the efforts of Toledo to secure a new warship to replace the ancient Essex for her naval militia it is revealed that Canada has commenced to draw the line on this sort of business on the great lakes.

When the state department secured the consent of Canada to the presence of the gun boat Nashville for the use of the Illinois naval militia the dominion went about as far as it felt it ought to. And now that Toledo also asks for a modern boat Canada shows so much reluctance to agree to the proposition that Secretary of State Knox has informed the navy department that it must send no more such ships to the lakes.

The navy department has therefore informed Toledoans that they will have to be satisfied with such repairs as the government will make on the Essex and let it go at that.

Envious eyes were cast on employes of the Battle Creek Brewing Co. and the federal authorities Wednesday afternoon, when 117 barrels of beer were poured into the gutters. The exhibition was witnessed by many.

Julius Martin, manager of the brewery, presented the federal officers with a clean sheet, showing that all beer had been cleared from the buildings.

The proposed ice plant, which was to have been installed in the brewery, will not be built, the brewery officials wishing to make an example of the effects of local option by permitting its $75,000 building to stand idle.

Mrs. Stella M. Champney, reporter for the Traverse City Record, started Monday with her son, Don O. Champney, on what is probably the longest walk any woman ever took, from Oberlin, Ohio, to Traverse City.

Mrs. Champney does not expect to experience any difficulty in making the walk for in her work on the Record she covers 25 miles a day and is in excellent training for the trip. She will carry a knapsack that was carried by a British soldier through the South American war and will wear a pedestrain skirt of gray with cutaway jacket, a broad brimmed Mexican hat on the sombererro order which will fulfil the offices of umbrella on rainy days as well as filling the needs of a parasol for they expect to encounter some warm weather interspersed with rain. They will travel in the early morning, resting through the heat of the day, and again taking up the walk in the cool of the evening.

Don Champney will also carry a knapsack and a 32-calibre revolver for protection if the occasion should arise. They expect to consume about three weeks in making the journey and will pass through the following towns in the order given below:

Oberlin, Toledo, Baltman, Clinton, Jackson, Leslie, Mason, Ionia, Reed City, Leroy and Walton.

THE CAPTAIN OF the KANSAS

By LOUIS TRACY,

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY EDWARD J. CLODE

CHAPTER XII Continued.

"If I am coming the whole I must leave the charmaking entirely to my assistant," replied the captain feebly.

Elsie's first task was to prepare a large scale drawing.

"But I do mean to peep a little farther into our estuary. Before the ship sails I may have another spare hour to devote to it."

"In what way?" asked Elsie.

"By utilizing the canoe. A mile or so higher up the channel I should be clear of the bluff which hides Otter creek. I imagine it will be possible then to see the full extent of the bay. I must get you to sound Suarez as to the lay of the land."

"I hope you will do nothing of the sort," protested Elsie earnestly.

"Why? Do you think the canoe unsafe?"

"No, no; not that. But those wailing Indians. They might see you."

"Oh, the Indians again! I shall run no risk of that sort. It would indeed be the irony of fate if the Kansas slipped her cable and left the skipper behind."

"Huh—no fear! She'd follow you like Joey. I was tellin' Miss Maxwell what a lucky fellow you are. Besides, if you went I'd be in command, an' you know what would happen then. If all else failed, the bloomin' tub would turn turtle in the pool."

To emphasize his remarks Boyle blew a big smoke ring and shot several smaller rings through it.

Elsie felt Christobal's critical eye on her. She was shading the outlines of the map and trusted that her head was bent sufficiently to hide the telltale color which leaped to her face. But Courtenay wished to hear more of this.

"I hope you do not credit everything my chief officer says about me," he said, glancing over her shoulder at the drawing, "nor about himself," he added, as she was too busy to look up. "To my knowledge he has refused the command of two ships since we both joined the Kansas."

"Home orders!" cried Boyle, who was certainly beyond himself. "Probably he missed his regular vocal exercise owing to lack of a crew. 'My missus says to me: 'You just stick to Captain Courtenay, young feller-me-lad. He's one of the get-rich-quick sort. P'raps you'll learn from him how to dodge board of trade inquiries.' You stand on what I told you, Miss Maxwell. You remember—commodore? Huh!"

Courtenay glanced at the chronometer.

"I must be off," he announced. "Tollemache may need some help with his bombs, and those Chileans require looking after."

Christobal, too, quitted the chart room to visit his patients. He had said very little while he sat there, and Elsie did not know whether to laugh or cry at the tragic comedy of her environment. She was only certain of one thing—she would like to box Boyle's ears. She was completely at a loss to account for his persistent efforts to drag in references to their prior conversation. She dared not catechise him. That would be piling up more difficulties for the future. But what possessed him—to blurt out such embarrassing details in the presence of the two men whom she most wished to remain in ignorance of them?

She peeped at Boyle sideways. His eyes were closed, the cigar was between his teeth, and he had a broad grin on his face. She could not guess that the once taciturn chief officer of the Kansas was saying to himself:

"My godfather, how I'll is glared! There will be trouble on this ship about a woman before long or I'm a Dutchman. An' didn't the skipper rise at the fly too! Huh!"

A little later as Elsie passed along the promenade deck she saw Courtenay, Tollemache and Walker deep in consultation. They were arranging a percussion fuse of fulminating mercury. While she was watching them Walker dropped a broken furnace lid on top of a small package placed on an iron block. Instantly there was a sharp report, and Joey, who was a interested observer, jumped several feet. The men laughed, and she heard Courtenay say:

"That is the right proportion of fulminate. Now, Tollemache, I'll help you to fix them. We do not know the moment those reptiles may choose to attack."

So the captain did not leave the Alacalof menace altogether out of mind. Something rose in her throat, some wave of emotion which threatened be squeamish sexually. She ran rather than walked to her cabin, flung herself on the bed and sobbed piteously. It had to come, this tempest of tears. When desperate odds demanded unflinching courage she faced them dry eyed, with steadfast heart. But today in the bright sunshine and apparent security of the ship sinister death shadows tortured her into rebellion. She did not stop to ask herself why she wept. Being a woman, she yielded to the gust, and when it had ended, with the suddenness of a summer shower, she smiled through the vanishing tears. Her first concern was that none should be aware of her weakness.

"How stupid of me!" she murmured. "What would the men think if they knew I broke down in this fashion?"

She looked in a mirror. In the clear light without any one could see she had been crying, and there was so much work to be done that she did not wish to remain in her stateroom until all tokens of the storm had passed. She searched for a powder puff and was at a loss to discover its whereabouts until she recollected that the doctor had borrowed it for the use of a man slightly scalded when his own supply of antiseptic powder was exhausted. So she went into Isobel's room, entering it for the first time since the Kansas struck on the shoal. The two cabins communicated, as Mr. Baring had gone to the expense of having a door broken through the partition for the girls' use during the voyage.

If Elsie had not already given way to tears she must have faltered now at the sight of her friend's belongings strewed in confusion over the floor, chairs, dressing table and bed. Isobel possessed a gold mounted dressing case the size of an ordinary portmanteau. It held an assortment of pretty and mostly useless knickknacks, and they had all been tumbled out in a frantic hurry. At first Elsie flinched from further scrutiny, but common sense told her that this despondent mood must be fought. She dropped to her knees, found a mother-of-pearl powder box and picked up other scattered articles and replaced them in the dressing case. To accomplish this it was necessary to rearrange various trays and drawers. Portraits of girl friends, including her own, and of men unknown to her, letters, memoranda and other documents were thrown about in disorder. All these she put back in their receptacles, wondering the while what motive had led Isobel to make such a frenzied search for some special object that she cared not a jot what became of the remaining articles.

Yet who could account for the frenzy of that terrible hour when the captain announced the ship's danger? Even Courtenay himself, she remembered, had emptied a locker in a rapid hunt for the dog's coat, but he had laughingly explained his haste later when some chance reference was made to his soaked garments.

Anything was explicable in the light of panic. She gathered up a skirt and some blouses, locked the dressing case, put the key in her purse and quitted the room with a heavy heart, for the handling of her friend's treasures had brought sad memories.

Passing into the deck corridor, she heard the captain's voice, apparently at a considerable distance. Two hundred yards away from the ship Courtenay and Tollemache were anchoring a flat framework built of spare hatches and secured by wooden crosspieces. On it stood the first of the infernal machines. The raft floated level with the water, so its only conspicuous fitting was a small spar and a block, to which a line and an iron bar were attached. The men looked strange in her eyes at that distance. In the marvelously clear light she could see their features distinctly, and when Courtenay shouted to a sailor to haul in the slack of the line she caught a trumpet-like ring that recalled the scene in the salon when he held back the mob of stewards. His athletic figure, silhouetted against the shimmering green of the water, was instinct with graceful strength. He looked a born leader of men, and, as though to mark his quickness of observation, no sooner had Elsie glanced over the side of the ship than he waved a hand to her.

She sighed. A bitter thought peeped up in her that he was perhaps a trifle careless in showing her these little attentions. She wished he would speak to her of that other girl who awaited him in England. A pleasant state of confidence would be established then. These secret twitches of sentiment were irritating.

She walked aft to obtain a better view of the operations. The sailors had already shut in a large portion of the promenade deck with canvas, and she noticed that loopholes were provided every ten feet or so to permit the effective use of the defenders' firearms. Thus at each step she was reminded of the precarious hold she had on life, and she was positively frightened when some mad impulse surged through her whole being, bidding her impetuously to abandon her ultra conscientious loyalty to a woman she had never seen. Why struggle against circumstance? If death were so near, what did she gain by prudery?

For an instant she stood aghast at the revelation which had come to her. She was in love with Courtenay. She was ready to die by his side, fearless and joyous, if only he would put his arms around her and tell her that she was dear to him. Ah, the fierce delight of that first silent surrender! Her heart beat as it had never pulsed before, even under the stress of the storm or the sudden terror of the night attack. Her eyes shone, and her breath came laboriously between parted lips. Golden dreams coursed through her brain. She was thrilled with an unutterable longing.

Then her swimming eyes rested on a group of men standing on the poop. Among them was Christobal, interested, like the rest, in the floating of the mine. And forthwith Elsie fell from the clouds and was brought back, shuddering, to cold reason again. She was sick at heart. She hated herself for her self abasement. She must gird her with sackcloth and mourn, and the fight must be fought now without parley or hesitation unless the sweetness were to go forth from life forever and all things turn to ashes in her mouth.

So, marshaling the best qualities of her womanhood, she quelled the turmoil in her breast, forced herself to join the men on the after deck and said when the smiling Spaniard turned to receive her:

"Where do they mean to put the second contrivance?"

"About there," he said, indicating a point on the surface of the bay eastward of the canoe. His right arm was extended, and he placed his left hand on her shoulder. Courtenay, hailing Walker, saw the two leaning over the rails in that attitude. Perhaps one of the two hoped that Courtenay would see them. Elsie, as part of her punishment, did not shrink away, though the touch of Christobal's hand made her flesh creep. But Joey, whose mind was singularly free from complexities, leaped up at her. He wanted Elsie to tell him what Courtenay was doing out there, so far away from the ship. She stooped and picked him up. Christobal had no excuse for a second caress.

"Bark, Joey," she whispered, "bark and call your master. If anything happens to him, you and I shall never see England again. And I am longing for home today."

CHAPTER XIII.

CHRISTMAS day arrived and maintained its kindly repute by finding affairs on board the Kansas changed for the better. Mr. Boyle was so far recovered that he could walk. He even took command of two watches in the twenty-four hours, but was forbidden to exert himself lest the wound in his back should reopen. Several injured sailors and firemen were convalescent. The two most serious cases were out of danger. Frascuelo, hardy as a weed, dared the risk of using his damaged leg and survived, though his progress along the deck was painful. Nevertheless on Christmas morning he presented himself before the captain and asked leave to abandon his present quarters. He felt lonely in the forecastle and wished to berth with the other Chileans in the neighborhood of the saloon. Although his luck was bad in some respects, the coal trimmer was endowed with the nine lives of a cat, for there could be no manner of doubt that he dragged himself up just in time to avoid being killed.

Yet never was day less ominous in appearance. The breezy, sunlit morning brought no hint of coming tragedy. The fine weather which had prevailed since the Kansas drifted into the estuary seemed to become more settled as the month wore. Suarez said it was unprecedented.

But the miner from Arzenthia never wavered in his belief that the Indians would soon muster every adult for an assault on the ship. The elements might waver, but not the hate of the savage. From the rising of the sun to the going down thereof Suarez was ever on the alert.

Every other person on the ship held the opinion that the Aleuloís would attack by night if they were not afraid to attempt the enterprise at all. So Suarez slept soundly while his companions were on the qui vive for a call to repel boarders. Were it not for the strain induced by the silent menace of their savage neighbors the small company suffered no ill from their prolonged stay in this peaceful anchorage. There was work in plenty for all hands. Walker was re-enforced by a trio of firemen whose technical knowledge, slight as it was, proved useful when he began to fit and connect the disabled machinery. For the rest, the promenade deck was walled with strong canvas, while Courtenay and Tollemache gave undivided attention to the fashioning of several other deadly bombs which could be exploded from the ship. They also provided flexible steam pipes in places where a rush might be made if the Indians once secured a footing on the deck, fore or aft. Steam was kept up constantly in the donkey boiler not alone for the electric light and the daily working of the pumps, as the Kansas had not

Blue Ribbon Meeting.

There is every reason to look for a better blue ribbon meeting July 26 to 30 than was the great success of 1908 at the state fair grounds. To give as good a meeting as was last year will be creditable to the Detroit Driving Club, but the wind is blowing in the right direction, and the Grand Circuit inaugural this year will far outshine efforts of the past.

The basis for this statement is the lack of declarations in the four stake events. It naturally was supposed that there would be a defection of fair size with the June payments. On the contrary but two horses were withdrawn. This is a smaller percentage than in other years and leaves the stakes larger than they have been in June of any year.

Five have been taken out of the M. & M., leaving 18 eligibles and the likelihood of a field of about 12, which will be sensational. Of the original 15 in the chamber of commerce stake 13 remain. But one is eliminated from the free-for-all, so there are 12 in it now. The 2:11 trot also has lost one, so that its field now numbers 16.

The class races follow the stakes in size, so that the fields in the blue ribbon events next month promise to be among the best balanced the country ever was known, even at the late meetings. This speaks much for Detroit as a harness racing center, and the Detroit Driving Club as an organization which holds a high place in the esteem of the trainers. Also it insures the good people of Michigan a delightful outing.

Always the most and the best for the money, every night at the Bridge Theatre. 25-t-1

MRS. COHEN

The Captain of the Kansas.

By LOUIS TRACY,

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

Copyright, 1904, by Edward J. Clode.

blundered over the shoal without stripping some of her plates, but for use against the naked bodies of their possible assailants.

When day followed day without any sign of hostility not a man on board save Suarez and Tollemache paid much real heed to the shoreward peril. Walker, with his hammers and cold chisels, screw jacks and wrenches, was the center of interest. And Walker's swarthy visage wore a permanent grin, which presaged well for the fulfillment of his promise.

Elsie devoted herself to the hospital. She was thus brought more in contact with Christobal than with any of the others. Nor did he make this close acquaintance irksome to her. Always suave and charming in manner, he exerted himself to be entertaining. Though she knew full well that if the Kansas reached the open sea again he would ask her to marry him, he was evidently content to deny himself the privileges of courtship until a proper time and season.

She was far too wise to appear to avoid Courtenay. Indeed, she was studiously agreeable to him when they met. She adopted the safe role of good fellowship, flattering herself that her own folly would shrink to nothingness under the hourly castigation thus inflicted.

After the midday meal on Christmas day—a sumptuous repast, for the due preparation of which Elsie had come to the Chilean cook's assistance in the matter of the plum pudding—Suarez suddenly reported that a new column of smoke was rising from Guanaco hill, a crag dominating the eastern side of the bay. He was unable to attribute any special significance to the signal on that particular place. During his five years with the Alacuiof tribe he had never seen a fire lighted there before. That in itself was a fact sinister and alarming.

Suarez had sufficient tact not to make this statement publicly. He told Christobal, and the doctor passed on the information to the captain. Both men went to the poop with their glasses and carefully examined the coast line.

Courtenay was the first to break an oppressive silence, and his low pitched voice announced stirring tidings.

"Do you see those canoes yonder?" he said. "There were three under the trees before Suarez discovered the smoke on Guanaco. Now I fancy I can make out nearly a dozen. Though they are not launched, they have been put there for some purpose. Would you mind going forward and asking Mr. Boyle to summon all hands on deck? He knows exactly what to do. Remember that I regard you and Miss Maxwell as noncombatants and expect you both to remain in the salon. If these painted devils really mean to attack, some of us will get hurt, and then your services will be of greater value than in the fighting line. And if I do not see Miss Maxwell before the trouble begins please tell her she need fear no alarm. We shall be able to beat off our assailants with comparative ease."

When the captain of the Kansas spoke like that, there was no gainsaying him. Even Christobal, whose jealous suspicions were ever ready to burst into flame, was roused to enthusiasm by his cool gallantry.

But ere the Spaniard turned to go a disturbing thought forced its way to his lips.

"We have every confidence in you," he said, "und I admit that it should be a simple matter to prevent the savages from gaining the upper hand. Yet accidents happen. Suppose they manage to rush your defense?"

"They will not do that while I and every other man on deck is alive. If the worst comes to the worst, you have a revolver"—

"Yes," said Christobal.

"It will suffice for two, but not for a hundred."

The two men, united by the very bond which threatened to bring them into antagonism, looked into each other's eyes.

"Is that your last word?" asked Christobal.

"It is."

"I feel sure that you are right. Good-by!"

They shook hands. They were nearer a real friendship then than either of them thought possible, and the bond which held them was love for the same woman.

Courtenay, using his glasses again, saw that a number of Indians were launching the canoes simultaneously. He counted nine small craft, each holding five or six men or men and women. At the distance, nearly three miles, he could not be certain whether or not they all wore the distinguishing headdress of feathers. Against wind and current they could not possibly reach the ship under half an hour, and the smallness of the fleet surprised him.

The news that the Indians were advancing ran through the ship like wildfire, including Mr. Boyle, Frascuelo and those among the Chileans whose wounds were not serious, there were fourteen men available for the defense. Unfortunately the supply of firearms was inadequate. A shotgun and five revolvers constituted the armory, and one of the pistols was in Christobal's pocket. The supply of ammunition was so small that the revolvers could not be reloaded more than three times, but Courtenay had 200 shot cartridges, and against naked men an ounce of shot is far more effective than a bullet.

The captain hoped to terrify the Indians before they attempted to scale the ship's sides. If various ruses failed and the attack was pressed, he had decided not to split up his small force in the effort to repel boarders. A scattered resistance would surely break down at one point or another; there would be a rush of savages along the decks, a panic among the Chileans, and all would be ended. On the other hand, when fighting collectively under European leadership and well aware that the Indians would kill and spare not, the half breeds might be trusted to acquit themselves like men.

CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Jennie Alcox Concludes Report of the Convention.

The report of the committee on credentials showed a voting delegation present of 277, the largest number of delegates ever present at a state convention. Fully 500 white ribbons were in attendance. It was also shown that the state organization is entitled to 32 delegates to the national convention at Omaha and 12 to the worlds convention in Scotland next June. Michigan is now the strongest W. C. T. U. state in the Union. Miss Maggie Walz, of Calumet, a Finnish lady who publishes a paper in that city, and who is superintendent of the work among foreign speaking people gave an enthusiastic talk. She stated that there are 81 saloons in Calumet and asked that the union send some good speakers to awaken interest in temperance in that place. She is working both for temperance and woman's suffrage. She has secured 6000 signatures to suffrage petitions. She also made an appeal for literature and books, saying that there are books in Calumet in 36 languages. A great many responded to her call.

Mrs. Louisa Peterson, of Stephenson, superintendent of the department of lumbermen and miners, reported that she had a nucleus of a library for the lumbermen and asked donations of books and magazines. There are about 5000 lumbermen in her section of the state and she said that the papers and magazines thrown away each year at house cleaning time would be of great benefit to those woodsmen, miners and lone fishermen. This appeal aroused the delegates to so much enthusiasm that a large number arose and offered to send her from one to six books a peice. The state should stand back of two special lecturers, one to work among the colleges of the state and one to work in the populous centers and prepare for the state wide prohibition campaign in 1911 argued Mrs. Parish. We must have a dying time for the liquor traffic and that time has come. Keep to the main issue—the outlawing of the saloons. Where? Everywhere. Now is the opportune time to make state wide prohibition the rallying cry.

At this time the proceedings were brought to a close by the entrance of the National President Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, of Portland, Maine, and Miss Anna A. Gordon, of Granston, Illinois, national vice president. Both ladies were introduced and given the Chatauqua salute. The district presidents were then called to give a talk from their view points or in other words, suggestions regarding the work.

Mrs. Jennie Harington, president of the first district, said, "God give us warriors. It is a peaceful warfare we are waging but we need not be inspired. The saloon traffic must die. It is a despoiler of the home. People now demand teetotalers in business. In Detroit the Burrows Adding Machine company and the Calumet Car company are talking of moving away from the city because of the influence of the saloons upon their men, which renders them incapable for work. The W. C. T. U. carries the black flag against the saloon."

Mrs. Julia Moreland said national prohibition will come when women can vote. In brain power women are not the weaker sex. You can no more stop the prohibition wave than you can stop the Hudson river with a whisk broom. When the victory comes there will be so many at the finish that the W. C. T. U. will be hard to find but it will be said of us, "Well done good and faithful servants."

Mrs. P. J. Howard, of Petoskey, said we must not become too sanguine but must recognize the dangers as well as the victories. The whiskey element is aroused as it never was before and is using money and threats to accomplish its purpose. It takes persistent efforts to win victory and to hold it.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, president of the fifth district said her view point was state wide prohibition in 1911. When men talk of the revenue derived from the saloon give them facts. Yes, the saloon reduces the taxes of the drinker until he has nothing left to tax, neither has he any position in the social or business world.

Rev. Mecca Marie Varney, national superintendent of franchise, spoke of the women's work along the lines of the juvenile courts, child labor, kindergarten, compulsory education, forestry and the protection of the birds as well as the white slave and yellow slave traffic. She suggested that national airs be played at the voting places so that the act would suggest patriotism.

Thursday evening the principal address was given by Mrs. Stevens, national president, who said in part when men, women and children were dying from the effects of intemperance the heart of woman was touched and today the W. C. T. U. is the best loved and most needed of any society in the world. It is loved not only by broken hearted wives, who have been helped by this organization, but by young men who have been rescued from intemperate lives through its influence. President Taft has done what no other president had done in that he had said that hereafter his glass should be turned upside down and she thought there was no danger of his repealing the anti canteen law although it had been said he would do so. She explained how local option was a stepping stone to state wide prohibition and state prohibition lead on to national prohibition. She claimed that prohibition had been a blessing and benefit to her own state of Maine. Formerly it was one of the poorest states in the Union, while now it was one of the most prosperous. At the present stage of this reform movement however, it is in many cases harder to hold a prohibition law than to secure one so there is as much need as ever for the work of the W. C. T. U. Senator Carmack was eulogized by Mrs. Stevens as a martyr. To the great pleasure of the audience Dr. Dickie, of Albion college, came on the platform and proceeded to pay a glowing tribute to a long list of women with whom he had had personal acquaintance who had spent their lives in the work of this great organization. Dr. Dickie prophesied that twenty more counties in Michigan would go dry in 1910 making a total of fifty dry counties and then state wide prohibition would follow. Dr. and Mrs. Dickie, called the king and queen of Albion, was made life members of the W. C. T. U. at this time the white ribboners, of Albion, paying $20 into the state treasury for that purpose.

Miss Anna Gordon, national vice president, was introduced. She said in referring to Battle Creek, Blessed is the city, who takes care of its girls and boys instead of its saloons and gave a series of moving pictures, scenes and incidents in temperance work in different localities. Mention should be made of the decorations both in the church and business places in the store windows, Welcome W. C. T. U. and bunting was displayed in the church the decorations were beautiful consisting of flags, white and yellow bunting, ferns, flowers and potted plants, district banners bearing various mottos among them, Michigans going dry. No surrender. In the light to the finish. No compromise with sin.

Friday evening's meeting closed the convention, which will go down in history as the most remarkable convention ever held in Michigan, being as many said almost, if not quite equal to the national conventions.

But Sometimes One Comes Along With a Settled Grouch.

"Rarely are bears born ill tempered. They may show some resentment at the time of their capture when but two months old, but this feeling soon disappears, leaving a jolly rogue ever willing to box and wrestle. I once knew a cub that was a regular terror," says a writer in Collier's, "and he never reformed. He would attack anything regardless of its size or strength.

"At the age of three months he would charge at me, snorting, sniffing and striking with his tiny paws, and when I did not protect myself he seized my trousers leg between his teeth and shook it violently.

"At first I thought that he had been abused by his former owner and that by kind treatment he would soon outgrow his temper; but, no, he just had it in him, and he became more and more dangerous as time sped by.

"Finally he grew large enough to be put in with the mature bears without danger of his squeezing between the bars and escaping, and to the surprise of every one he immediately took charge of the den. Old bears twenty times his size, possibly from some sense of honor, if animals have honor, submitted to cuffs and slaps in the face and actually allowed him to snatch food from their mouths without resenting the insult."

Literary Notes

"We Rubiconians always prided ourselves on the fact that Rubicon was the most patriotic town in the state," says a citizen in Woman's Home Companion for July. A hardy individual from Capua once asked for proof. He was snapped up promptly by a leading citizen.

"Proof, eh?" said he. "Why, just come out here with me and I'll show you proof that would convince a man from Missouri. See that ruin down there at the corner—just a chimney sticking up into the air? That was Doctor Hawkins' fine residence. Cost ten thousand dollars. The fire started from a fire-cracker last Fourth. Notice the foundation back of that large house over there? Fine barn burned up there the same day—another fire-cracker. See the gap in that row of cottages down across the railroad? Three of them went up two years ago—fire-crackers or something. Look at the Methodist church there on the corner without a steeple. Maybe you'd think the wind blew it off, but you'd be wrong—Fourth o' July got it—and we had hard work to save the school-house. I could show you lots more if I had time. And then walk about and look at our people. Why, man alive, there's fewer eyes and ears and fingers, not to mention arms and legs, in proportion to the population than in any other town you can find—all gone from fire-crackers, or toy pistols, or bursting cannons, or in some such patriotic way. Your town of Capua isn't in it, I tell you. You lion roaring in his den may be all right in his way, but if the old Grecian spirit isn't frozen in your veins you must see that for pure patriotism Rubicon leads the world." The man from Capua shrunk away.

But the Rubiconians have at last evolved a sensible celebration, which includes a parade, a noise-festival for the little boys, athletic games, a luncheon, dancing, and closes with fireworks in the evening. As told about in the Woman's Home Companion it is a very attractive Fourth.

Dipping Sheep Successfully.

I would not think of keeping a flock of sheep without dipping them, says a New York breeder. Numerous dips on the market have been used, yet we prefer the liquid nonpoisonous dips, for they are more easily mixed with water than those in powdered form. For dipping 100 ewes and their lambs we arranged a triangular apartment in the barn, so as to prevent chasing the sheep as much as possible. One of the points of the inclosure is at a small door. On the outside we have a galvanized tank sunk in the ground, the top of which is on the level with the ground floor. As the sheep escape they come directly into the tank, in which they are kept nearly submerged. The fluid is diluted with seventy gallons of soft water to one gallon of the dip. The sheep are kept in this for at least two minutes. They are then allowed to move up the incline, which contains a water tight floor, so that the drippings will run back into the tank.

Points For the Horseman.

A handful of oilmeal in the horse's feed once a day will act as a good condition powder and put his coat in sleek condition.

The too large collar is about as bad as the too small collar. See that the collar fits. The horses will pull better and there will be no danger of sore shoulders.

Weak points in the brood mare will not appear in the progeny if the sire with which she is mated is strong in the same points. This fact cannot be emphasized too much.

Do not allow your blacksmith to fit your horses' feet to the shoes. See that the shoes are fitted to the feet. By the right kind of shoeing many defects in gait may be overcome, but it takes a blacksmith who understands that kind of work.

Keep the Teeth Right.

A bulletin of the Colorado experiment station says: Remember that the horse's food is not cooked, and therefore his teeth must be in good condition to properly masticate his food. It will well pay every farmer to examine the teeth of all his horses at least twice a year. It is worse than throwing feed away to give it to horses that can neither masticate nor digest it. Poor feed and bad teeth are responsible for three-fourths of all the colics and other digestive disorders of the horse. Horses are worth money. It pays to keep these things in mind.

Shade For Hogs.

If hogs are to thrive in pasture, shade must be provided. Some farmers cut away every vista of shade. The hog loves a cool, damp shade, where he can lie and snooze during the heat of the day. If left in a pasture with no shade he will suffer. Experience of prominent breeders shows, however, that a mud wallow is by no means necessary. If the hog cannot have a clean bath, no bath is preferable, but he is a child of the soil and should have cool, moist ground to lie upon.

Uncle (visiting his student nephew)—Glad to see you hard at work, my boy. What are you doing there?

Nephew—Chemical experiments, uncle—combining acids with metal. By the way, dear uncle, do you happen to have any metal about you?—Meggendorfer Blatter.

Found He Had Some.

A schoolmaster was one day greatly annoyed by not getting satisfactory answers to the questions he put to one of the schoolboys. At last he called the dunce to the front and, handing him twopence, said: "Here's some money. Go and buy some brains."

An English View.

The slang of New York has its origin, of course, in the climate. It is the climate that has produced the terrible doctrine and practice of "hustle," and for people living in a wild chaos of competition, always in a blinding hurry and in the midst of a deafening din, language has to be pitched up high to cope with the circumstances. There is no time to pause nor any place in which an ordinary quiet phrase would be able to reach your ear. Language to produce any effect at all must be as quick and as violent as all else. A phrase that has not the properties of dynamite goes unheeded.—Max Beerbohm in London Saturday Gazette.

QUESTION SHOULD BE STUDIED

Of How Best to Expend Money for Good Roads

MAINTAINENCE AFTER CONSTRUCTION

Is Often Neglected, Which is a Waste of Money

United States Office of Public Roads Will Give all Assistance Asked for—Good Roads Increase Land Values.

Logan Waller Page, director of the office of public roads of the U. S. department of agriculture, has appeared before state legislatures and county boards in various sections of the country during the past few months in response to invitations to tell what methods are best for obtaining funds for road construction and how the roads should be maintained after they have once been secured.

At the present time there are two principal methods of raising funds for these purposes, but Director Page believes that before plans are set on foot for raising funds, much should be said regarding the manner in which such funds should be expended. If the voters of a county show a readiness to spend a generous sum in improving their roads, it is of paramount importance to them to first ascertain what class of roads should be constructed.

It should not be assumed that simply because a county owns quarries from which trap or limestone rock can be secured that the expensive macadam road must necessarily be built. The qualifications of any rock cannot be definitely decided upon until laboratory tests have been held. Much money has been almost thrown away in this country, however, on the construction of rock surface roads, those having the construction in charge neglected to call in the services of expert chemists, and using rock totally unsuited to their traffic or climatic conditions. In many, many cases, the results were disastrous, the roads quickly raveling and going to pieces because the cementing value was lacking.

A county which shows sufficient progress to bond itself in a liberal amount for the purpose of securing improved roads should keep its money intact until its officers have learned exactly what class of roads will best meet its requirements; what type of road it is best qualified to construct and what it can best afford. Those facts can be secured through the aid of the national government, the office of public roads standing ready to give gratuitous advice and to supply skilled highway engineers who are qualified to tell what type of highway would best meet that county's requirements and to demonstrate those decisions by supervising the building of stretches of model highways, after which local officials may take pattern.

Wide-awake state and county officials are now showing the liveliest appreciation of the results which follow a visit by these skilful men, and the demands for their services are so heavy that it is impossible for Director Page to meet more than 20 per cent of the requests being filed in his office.

When county officers learn to appreciate the fact that road building is an art, they will rely more and more upon expert advice and scientific demonstration, and when they have learned what class of roads is desirable, they will construct them and then guard them.

Therein lies one of the most important of all American highway questions. Americans build as good roads as Englishmen or Frenchmen, but having done so, they rest contented with their efforts and let each passing breath of air, speeding automobile, or drenching rain blow or wash the road surface away.

In the countries of Europe, where the well nigh perfect roads are the pride of the citizens and the envy and admiration of visiting Americans, most jealous care is constantly given; a careful day-by-day inspection is made and every depression is quickly filled and all inequalities rolled or tamped

VANPELT WARMS UP

Gives Pointers Regarding Road Building Worth Remembering

Answers to Both Articles Published in Local Papers Last Week.

Charlevoix, Michigan,
June 28, 1909.

My Dear Old Sentinel:—

In your issue of June 23 there is an item which I take reflects on me. You ask, where is, or what has become of VanPelt, the good roads man? I am in Charlevoix shoveling sand, working in a general way and trying to do something that will make a showing and do some one some good in the near future and help build up the prettiest and most beautiful little, beautiful city in the west. I am not paying any attention whatever to roads. I don't use them much at the present time. What is this I hear a little bird at my left say, don't use them much? Yes, that is what I said. I am like the hard swearing man who was taking a load of potatoes to market and the tail board of his wagon was up just enough so that in going up a long hill the potatoes ran out and were scattered along the road. He met a friend at the top of the hill and stopped to chat with him. The other man said, "Where are you going?" and as he gave the reply, "Going to market with these potatoes," he looked back and turned where the potatoes ought to have been and saw the tail board up and the potatoes all gone but he said nothing. His friend remarked, "Bill, do you know I expected to hear more strong cuss words and to smell some brimstone?" "Well," said the man without the potatoes, "the truth is, I can't do the subject justice and there is no use to try." This is about all I can say about roads. The same conditions exist right here in Charlevoix township that exist in Norwood. They have tried mighty hard to spoil roads and have succeeded admirably. Our township has expended on an average of, say $700 per year or, in round numbers, $1500 the last three years and we have this to show for it. The roads positively are not as good today as they were ten years ago and are still growing worse and will continue to do so in any and all townships where roads are worked out by men who do not know how to build them.

Town elections go largely by favors and the good fellows always get the offices, whereas, the best man suited for the different offices should be selected without regard to their being a good fellow or needing the office or any other reasonable excuse, and if there is no man in the township who is capable to build good roads, then, I should say, the better way would be to get a good road builder, from some other place, who knows how to build good roads and will expend the money judiciously, even if we have to pay this man $5.00 per day. It would be much cheaper in the end.

Now you fellows who use the roads and want good roads, get busy and get them. I can stay in Charlevoix and talk to my family in Norwood by phone and not hust the top of my auto by driving there and being thrown up through it in going over the commonois line of "thank you mams" that we find in our roads. I don't like driving spavin horses very well either. Don't drive much any way, except when it comes to the last and die business in Chicago and this we drive at a rapid rate.

Now don't say any more about good roads. Read the articles which appear in the country newspapers which are written by men of experience and profit by them.

WANTED TO SEE WORLD

Vandorn Ritenburg Leaves the Farm to See Sights.

Pine Lake Dragged and Woods Searched—Found at Boyne City

Monday word was sent to this city that a boy named Vandorn Ritenburg was missing from his home upon the peninsula and the officers were asked to keep an eye out for him. He lives with his parents near the Ironton ferry and left in the morning to take the cows to the pasture but did not show up again at home. The parents were alarmed and the whole neighborhood aroused. Search was at once instituted and a large area at the bottom of Pine Lake was scratched over with an improvised drag which, however, failed to bring the body to the surface mainly because it was not there. The officers located him Thursday at Boyne City and sent him home to the farm.

The story he tells is the same old one. He was tired of chasing cows and potato bugs on the farm and wanted to see a bigger slice of the world than was visible from the end of the peninsula. He struck out for Boyne City. He particularly wanted to see a real live train of cars and was also not adverse to taking a ride. He was lofted in his ambition, however, for the reason that he was shy of coin and the conductor was stony hearted. The cows will be glad to welcome him home again.

ADRIFT ON RAFT

Two Beaver Island Nine Year Old Boys Were Last Week

All Day Friday and Friday Night Rescued by Tug Violet

A near tragedy that threw into a ferment for a while the villages and settlements on the islands in this vicinity was the adventure of Kenneth Gallagher and Bertrand McDonough, St. James boys who went to sea on an involuntary voyage on a raft.

Kenneth and Bertrand were playing down at the beach on a raft made of three cedar tiers. This is a favorite sport of the boys who inhabit the islands in Lake Michigan, and some of the more adventurous ones make voyages far from land with the aid of improvised sails and paddles devised from drift wood. It has long been a wonder that some of them have not been caught in a storm too far out to get to shore and been washed off to their death.

This was nearly the fate of the two nine-year-old lads who are the heroes of the latest adventure and rescue. They got too far out, a strong off wind sprang up and developed into a gale. Like the little savages of the South Sea islands, the boys of the Beavers are natural water dogs, and they know how to hold a raft together in defiance of the waves. All day Friday and all Friday night they tossed on the billows, half the time immersed, all the time hungry. "Robinson Crusoe" is a tame effort of the fiction writer, from the way they tell it in a story of comparisons.

A coat, frantically waved, had given the signal of impending danger and need of help, and the plight of the youthful mariners was reported by other boys, but not till the raft had disappeared from view. Tugs started out, and the "Violet" effected the rescue Saturday.

SUCCESS TO THEM

Former Charlevoix Young Men "Make Good" in Canada.

The many friends and acquaintances of Mrs. Moore, formerly connected with the Elston Hotel, will be pleased to learn of the rapid advance of her two sons, Howard and Frank, who left here two years ago to complete their education in Canada.

Howard, the oldest of the boys has successfully completed his second year course in commercial work at the Technical high school, Toronto. He also holds a certificate in fine penmanship, which he secured from a New York college.

Frank, the younger, has passed the entrance examination with first class honors and next year will take a college course.

We extend congratulations.

BAD ROADS CAUSED IT

Dr. Thielen Has Narrow Escape in Auto Accident

Machine Turns Completely Over, Pinning Doctor Underneath it.

"We were coming down Wakefield's hill at a slow speed when we struck the deep sand; the machine skidded and over we went. The next thing I realized was being pulled from under my machine, my whole body feeling as if I had been run over by a steam road roller."

This is the version of Dr. Thielen in relating the facts of his narrow escape Sunday about noon, when he and his driver were returning in his automobile from a professional call at Essex.

The doctor was driving the car at the time the accident occurred. He states that when the machine skidded he tried to right it, but was too near the steep bank and it turned turtle. He was pulled from under the machine by his driver, Oba Trombley, who leaped from the machine before it went over.

A badly dislocated shoulder and numerous minor bruises are the results of the most miraculous escape of the doctor, who was behind the steering gear and unable to get out. The machine turned completely over once and a half, and stopped bottom side up with the doctor pinned under the machine.

Other than a broken top, smashed lamp and badly twisted steering gear, the machine came through the accident in tiny shape.

On the way out to make the call, the doctor took another route to avoid this bad piece of road, thinking he could come down the hill easier than to go up. It is a lamentable fact that such poor pieces of road are allowed to remain unbetered, and this ought to be a lesson to all to take immediate steps to put the roads in better condition

THE HISTORIC GRANT FARM

Now Owned by August A. Busch, of St. Louis

A CHARLEVOIX SUMMER RESIDENT

Rustic Work Done on Grounds by John A. Lynn

Which has Given Him an International Reputation in His Original Line of Work.

One of the oldest and most historic places in St. Louis County is the old Dent-Grant Farm. It is located about twelve miles from St. Louis on the Gravios Road. Its owners, from the first, were people of note, but its chief interest centers in the fact that it was the property of General U. S. Grant during the season of his greatest prosperity. Mrs. Grant, nee Julia Dent, was born and reared on this farm; it was here also where most of the Grant children were born.

Grant's Farm was originally settled by Capt. John Long, in 1807. He was a revolutionary hero, and fought under General Lafayette. From the Longs the farm passed into the hands of Mr. Theodore Hunt, and from Mr. Hunt to Mr. Frederic Dent, Mrs. Grant's father, and then to General Grant, who, shortly before his death, sold it to Mr. Luther H. Conn. Five years ago Mr. August A. Busch, the present owner, acquired the property and vastly improved it, but destroying none of its rustic beauty.

General Grant lived on this farm from the time of his marriage to Miss Dent until shortly before the Civil War, and about 1854 he built the now-famous "Grant's Log Cabin," which is still in a splendid state of preservation.

During the past year John A. Lynn, of this city, the original "Rustic Man," has been working out and putting in rustic work on the farm. In all the designs planned by Mr. Lynn he had the full support of Mr. Busch, every suggestion being carried out. His work on this farm has given Mr. Lynn an international reputation, he receiving inquiries from all over the world in regard to his work.

In this issue we present different views of the work done by Mr. Lynn on the Grant farm and in the future hope to be able to present more views of the work of Charlevoix's Rustic man.

Two requisites, therefore, confront the county supervisors at the ontset—first to ascertain what roads would be most suitable to that particular section, and to provide for funds to expend in their maintenance after completion.

Those are vastly important and the nation's very small percentage of improved roads is due largely to a failure to give consideration to them. Millions of money have been wasted in building roads which local conditions made impracticable and out of all cost proportion to the county's revenue.

There are exceptions to all rules, however, and Pike County, Alabama, stands as a glittering exception to the usual construction blunder. There the county officials had planned to expend a large sum in the building of gravel roads.

W. L. Spoon, United States superintendent of road construction, being sent to make an inspection of the county's road possibilities, learned that 500 miles of important routes needed improvement. He figured that the cost of gravel roads would be $3,000 a mile—plainly a sum greater than the county could be bonded for. Conditions, however, were ideal for sand—clay construction and he strongly urged its adoption. By a legal proviso the county could be bonded for only 3½ per centum of the assessed value of the real and personal property. The plan was decided upon and an issue of $113,000 was voted. One hundred thousand dollars worth of the bonds were quickly sold, being disposed of in $50,000 allotments.

The first allotment brought a premium of $625 and the second one of $825. Forty thousand dollars was at once spent for mules and road-building machinery and work was started.

With the sum remaining, 118 miles of the finest sand-clay roads in the south had been built within two years from the date of the bond issue; a generous sum was still on hand; eight gangs were at work, and the people were so pleased that they stood ready to take up the remaining issue of $43,000 and expend it in the same way.

It is the belief of the director of the office of public roads that such facts should be impressed upon the people of all counties desirous of extending and improving their highways before actual work is under way. When that has been done, he is warmly in favor of the raising of funds by issuing county bonds with the restrictions which the Virginia highway law imposes, viz: that all moneys so raised shall be spent under the watchful supervision of a state highway commissioner, because otherwise the money may be wasted.

Many farmers fear a bond issue as they do the visit of the chinch bug or the Kansas grasshopper, but the benefits they derive from the method of raising money for road improvement are far-reaching and immediate, while the individual tax on each is so small that it is scarcely noticeable. In reality, borrowing money through the sale of road bonds is like buying a house, a farm, or a business on the installment plan. The purchaser receives the object at once and derives the benefits from it while paying for it. As the benefits derived from perfected highways cover long periods of time, fairness and equity demand that the rising generation should bear a portion of the cost and that the increased citizenship, always attracted to the locality by a system of good roads, should also aid in paying for the added benefits.

Besides that, there is a financial wisdom in floating county bonds for road improvement. In many cases those bonds sell at a premium and everybody interested gains a benefit. In some southern states good road bonds have brought a price so high that the premium has wiped out two or three year's interest on the principal. In Bradley County, Tennessee, but a few years ago the supervisors voted a bond issue of $90,000. Those bonds bore interest at the rate of five per cent. So enthusiastic were the citizens for road improvement, and so much confidence did they have in the locality in which they lived, that the premium was $20,000; the cash sales placing in the county treasury $110,000.

It has been ascertained by the office of public roads, the bureau of the Federal Census, and the land and industrial divisions of twelve great railroads, that the building of modern highways immediately enhances the value of the property through which they run to a marked extent. This increase is estimated by the most conservative at $2 an acre, and by the more enthusiastic at $9. All concede, however, that the increase is immediate and inevitable. Place the acreage of the rural portion of a county, therefore, at 200,000 acres and the increased valuation due to the construction of better highways at but $4.50 an acre, and it will be seen that the property holders whose land is to be thus benefited would gain not less than $900,000. So great an increase in the assessed valuation of a county would certainly seem to constitute a powerful argument in favor of a liberal first expenditure.

Literary Notes

Reward of the Faithful Servant.

The Merchant Prince had sent for the Faithful Clerk, who confronted his master tremblingly.

"Jenkins," said the Merchant Prince, "you have been in my employ for twenty-five years."

"Yes, sir," faltered the Faithful Clerk.

"Twenty-five years today, is it not?"

"Yes, sir. Thank you, sir, for remembering it."

"Tut! Tut! You have been an honor to the house."

"Thank you again, sir."

"You have proved yourself worthy of my confidence."

"Oh, sir!"

"You have grown gray in my service."

"Yes, sir."

"Jenkins, as a slight token of my recognition of this act I have a present for you. Pray except this bottle of hair dye!"—Woman's Home Companion for July.

For the Picnic-Basket

"For the picnic luncheon-basket try Huntington eggs," says Woman's Home Companion for July. "Cut four hard-boiled eggs in halves crosswise, remove the yolks, and put the whites aside in pairs, otherwise you will make yourself extra work and trouble. Mash the yolks and add two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, one tablespoonful of vinegar, one fourth of a teaspoonful of mustard, and a few grains of cayenne, and salt to taste; then add enough melted butter to make the mixture of the right consistency to shape. Shape in the size of the original yolks, and refill the whites. Many prefer to omit the cheese and use in its stead finely-chopped chicken or ham or sardines separated into small pieces. Wrap each egg up separately in a square of paraffin paper of the correct size, and pack them in an egg-box (with the compartments), such as comes from the grocer."

THE AGONY OF INDECISION.

Some Women Slaves to the Habit of Vacillation.

I would rather regulate my life by the flip of a penny than suffer the tortures of indecision that I know some women do, says Ruth Cameron in a Pittsburg paper.

"Shall I get straw matting or denim for the new bedroom carpet?"

"Shall I have Mary sweep the front room today and wash the blankets tomorrow or wash the blankets today and clean the front rooms tomorrow?"

"Shall I have roast lamb and asparagus for the special company Sunday, or would it be better to have planked steak?"

Hours and nerves and complexions they wear out swinging the balance back and forth between such weighty questions as these and in the end make no wiser decisions than if they had settled them offhand. Some women make themselves fairly wretched over their wardrobes, such awful opportunity for vacillation they find in choice of material and trimming and make. To others papering and carpeting resolve themselves into a perfect agony of indecision. "I would rather clean that house from top to bottom than pick out a living room carpet again," I heard one woman say the other day. "I do believe I got more tired from tramping around and trying to make up my mind than from all the sweeping and dusting and washing I did." We have just been through the agonies of papering a room in my own home, which perhaps accounts for my warmth on the subject.

It took us two weeks to pick out that paper, and before we ceased wavering between the yellow paper with the poppy border and the pink stripes with the rose border mother almost had to take to her bed.

Indecision is a disease, and, what's more, it is a chronic and a cumulative disease. The more you let yourself be undecided the more undecided you are going to be.

Mental suggestion and mental firmness in following the suggestion is about the only remedy possible.

In the effort to cure myself, for I might as well confess that much of this sermon is directed at my own vacillations, I have formulated three rules.

Perhaps they're worth passing on.

First.—Erase up the arguments slowly and carefully for each side. If they are many and complicated, take a pencil and write them down.

Second.—After having thus gone over the ground make a decision and act upon it at once in some way so that it shall become irrevocable.

Third. When you begin to feel a tendency to regret your course, to wallow in wails of "I might have been" and to tremble at the consequenses that may follow your decision, repeat the following classic stanza:

The cow is in the hammock,
The cat is in the lake,
The baby's in the garbage pail,
What difference does it make?

How to Cleanse Sponges.

Soiled sponges can be quickly freshened by rubbing the juice of a lemon well into them, then rinsing several times, first in hot water and then in cold. An occasional sun bath is excellent, and a thorough washing with ammonia water every few weeks should not be omitted. In using a sponge for a young child, or, indeed, for any one, no matter how carefully it is supposed to be washed, it should be run through very hot water before using.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

They Needed Prayers.

A member of parliament tells a good story of an out of the way country clergyman who did not keep up to date in what was going on in the world. One Sunday he asked his sexton: "Is the prayer for parliament to be used today? Is parliament still sitting?"

The sexton's reply came promptly. "Well, sir, I don't know; but, anyhow, better pray for them, for they're a precious bad lot!"—London Standard.

The cutter's landing party stood at the gangway on the center of the vessel. Six men were stationed on the starboard side of the poop, and six on the port side. Tollemache and a Gilbert who said he could shoot well were told to frustrate any attempt to climb the after part of the ship, while Courtenay, with his fowling piece, would have the lion's share of this work from the spar deck, as he undertook to keep the rails clear for'ard and help the revolver practice if necessary. With him was Suarez, who knew what was expected of him, so the language difficulty offered no apparent hindrance once the fight began. Finally, if the luckless mate got good and fooling, the defenders were to rally to ward the salon companion, where steam jets were ready to spurt with erling blasts along the corridors.

It was a good plan and might have kept at bay an enemy of higher valor than the Alaculofs, provided they were not armed with rifles. Against modern weapons of long range nothing could be done. If Suarez did not exaggerate, therein lay the real danger. Courtenay wished to make sure at the outset of the number of guns carried by the savages. It was also important to know whether their marksmen were distributed or crowded together in one or two canoes. If the latter, he would give those warriors his special attention.

His binocular glasses were not strong enough, so he walked back toward the chart house to procure a telescope. Catching Joey under his left arm, he climbed the short ladder, leading to the spar deck and pulled it up after him, the bolts having been already removed to permit of that being done. Walker was screwing tight the door of the engine room in order to safeguard the fireman in attendance on the donkey boiler. Now that the screwdriving was actually in operation it very unpleasantly reminded Courtenay of the fastening of a coffin lid. Neither Walker nor the man inside could guess the grewsome notion which held the captain in his chilly grip for an instant. Indeed, the engineer looked up with a grin.

"I suppose it's twue, sir, the-aw's goin' to be a fight?" he asked.

"There's a fair chance of one, Walker."

Walker winked suggestively.

"That chap inside thinks he's out o' it," he said, "so that's all wight." An energetic turn of the screwdriver signified that the man from Newcastle held the opposite view. Much as he loved his engines, he preferred to be on deck when the trouble came.

It happened that during this slight delay Courtenay glanced at the northern headland, which Elsie had christened Cape Templar owing to the somewhat remarkable profile of a knight in armor offered by its seaward crags. Possibly had he gone straight to the chart house he might not have noticed a signal fire which was in full blast on the summit of the cliff. It had not been many minutes in existence, and it struck him at once that it was a vehicle of communication between the savages in the approaching canoes and others, yet invisible, who were expected to share in the attack.

He was quick to perceive how seriously this new peril affected his calculations. By the time the nine canoes he had counted were alongside the ship there might be dozens of others ready to help them. He leaned over the rail. "Did you test those flexible pipes this morning?" he inquired.

"Yes, sir, they aw in fine condition," said Walker.

"Try them again, will you? I want to make sure. Our lives may depend on them very soon."

He saw Suarez watching the oncoming canoes. By a touch on the shoulder he called the man's attention to the smoke signal on Cape Templar. A voluble and perfervid explanation in Spanish was useless. Here arose the unforeseen need of an interpreter. Without troubling to analyze his feelings Courtenay was glad of the excuse which presented itself of obtaining a momentary glimpse of Elsie.

"Bring the senorita," he said, and Elsie, wondering why she had been summoned from the salon, ran up the bridge companion. Her face was aglow with excitement, her heart going pitapat. She hoped that Courtenay meant to keep her near him during the fight. She almost doubted Christobal's statement that the captain had given specific orders that she was to remain in the salon. It was one thing that she should wish to avoid him, but why should he wish to avoid her?

The joy in her eyes died away when she found that the captain merely required a translator. The restraint she imposed on herself made her tongue trip. She had to ask Suarez to repeat his statement twice before she was able to put it into English.

"He says that the Indians only kindle a fire on that point when they want the signal to be seen from the sea," she explained at last. "They used it once to his knowledge when some of them had gone to the island out there to kill seals. He cannot guess what it portends today, but he is quite sure that they have many more canoes at command than those which you now see up the bay."

Courtenay could not fail to notice her agitation. His quick intuition was to soothe her.

"I am afraid I my sending for you is such a terrifying alarmed you. Suarez strikes me as a person of nerves. He overrates the enemy. Miss May well, I think you know me well enough to believe that I would not risk all of you, and I am quite in earnest when I tell you that we shall drive off these unfortunate wretches with comparative ease. Why, I had it in my heart to pity them a moment ago."

She was glad he misunderstood the cause of her agitation.

"Suarez is certainly rather dramatic," she said, smiling wistfully. "I ought to have discounted his Spanish mode of address. But is it really necessary that I should remain below?"

"It is. If shots are fired or stones sling at us, the chart house will probably be hit. Ah, yes, I am sure you would risk that and more, but we may sustain casualties, and Christobal ought to have help. You see, I am asking you to act the braver part."

He caught her hand and looked into her eyes. There are so many messages that can be given in that silent language. For a blissful moment Elsie forgot the other woman. Not until she had left the bridge did she realize that Courtenay, too, must have been equally forgetful. And that was very distressing both for her and the unknown. But here she was face to face with him, and in such close proximity that she was unaccountably timid. While her heart leaped in tumult, she forced her lips to answer:

He caught her hand and looked into her eyes.

"You are right. You are always right. I was selfish in thinking that—that I—might"—

There was a pitiful quivering in the corners of her mouth. Courtenay felt her hand tremble.

"Be a brave girl, Elsie," he murmured. "You must go now. Have no fear. We are in God's care. May his angels watch over you!"

"But you—you will not risk your life? What shall we do if anything happens to you?"

She was strung to that tense pitch when unguarded speech bubbles forth the soul's secrets. All she knew was that Courtenay was looking at her as a man looks at the woman he loves. Neither of them paid heed to the presence of Suarez. For an instant they had a glimpse of heaven, but the curiously harsh voice of the Spanish miner fell on their ears, and they came back to earth with a sudden drop.

"The Feathered People are singing their war chant," he said, and his gesture seemed to ask them to listen. They started apart, and it was not Elsie alone who blushed. Courtenay crimsoned beneath the tan on his face and pretended a mighty interest in the doings of the savages. The girl recovered her self control more rapidly. She half whispered the meaning of the miner's cry, whereon Courtenay tried to laugh.

"They will be singing a dirge next," said he, with a jaunty confidence. "Now, Elsie, off with you! Be sure I shall come and tell you when you may appear on deck."

She hurried away. She recked naught of the Alaculof challenge. Though the raucous notes of the tuneless lay could be heard plainly enough, they did not reach her ears. When she raced down the salon companion she found Christobal bending over the small case of instruments he always carried. He straightened himself in his peculiarly stiff way.

"What did the captain want?" he asked, with a suspicious peevishness which for once detracted from his habitual courtesy. The note of distrust jarred Elsie back into her senses.

"He wished me to translate Senor Suarez's explanation of another smoke signal," she answered.

"He told you himself, I suppose, that he wished you to stay here."

"He did more. He drove me away."

"Against your will?"

"No. Am I not one of the ship's company? Is he not the centurion? He says to this woman, 'Go,' and she goeth, nor does she stand upon the order of her going. Oh, please don't look at me as if I were a cracked! Surely one may mingle the Bible and Shakespeare in an emergency!"

"Tear up your cambric handkerchiefs into strips," said Christobal gravely. He spoke objectively. And the situation. He attended to the packed decks and sparkling eyes to the fever of the threatened fight. She applied herself eagerly to the task. Already the Cross and its group of white-robed women were engaging her whole being.

Meanwhile, Tollemache was examining the advancing flotilla. His duties were running each detail of the Alaculof army, but his heart was whispering gladly:

"In another moment you would have kissed her and told her you loved her. You know you would, so don't deny it. And she would have let you!"

So Suarez spoiled a pretty bit of romance by his rattling agitation over some fault of savage tactics, for Courtenay of course would have laughed away the girl's protests that she was usurping that other woman's place.

If the war cries of the painted fighting warriors in the canoes were destined to be justified, the Kansas was in a perilous state. Her vast hull and sheer walls of steel did not daunt them. They came on steadily against the rapid current and spread out into a crescent when within a few hundred yards of the ship. Then three men, crouching in the bows of different canoes, produced rifles hitherto invisible and began to shoot. The bullets ricochetted across the ripples, and Courtenay saw that the savages did not understand the sighting appliances. They were aiming point blank at the vessel in so far as they could be said to aim at anything, and the low trajectory caused the first straight shot to rebound from the surface of the water and strike a plate amidships. The loud clang of the metal was hailed by the Alaculofs with shouts of delight.

The long range firing was kept up for several minutes, much to Courtenay's relief, as Suarez was certain that the Indians' stock of cartridges did not amount to more than 100 at the utmost. The canoes crept gradually nearer, and bullets began to strike the ship frequently. One glanced off a davit and shattered a couple of windows in the chart house. This incident aroused even greater enthusiasm than the first blow of the attack. There was renewed activity among the paddle wielders. Two canoes were not fifty yards from the most southerly floating mine. Courtenay commenced to haul in the slack of one among the half dozen thin cords. He turned to tell Suarez to be ready for the duty which had been intrusted to him when his glance happened to travel toward the mouth of the bay.

Then he learned the significance of that column of smoke on the northern point. A fleet of at least forty canoes was advancing on the ship from the sea. Tide and paddles were swinging the small craft along at a spanking pace. They were already much nearer the vessel than the first batch of Indians, who had very cleverly contrived to enlist the attention of the defenders while the real attack was developing without let or hindrance. It was a smart ruse worthy of a race of higher attainments than the tribe which is ranked lowest in the human scale. The newcomers abstained from firing or stone slinging. They were gathering with the speed and silence of vultures.

Two mines protected the front of the Kansas, and several canoes had passed them. Indeed, Courtenay soon found that some of the assailants were already screened by the ship's bows, but the larger number were clustered thickly round Tollemache's infernal machines. It was well that a cool headed sailor was called on to deal with this emergency. The captain of the Kansas even smiled as he appreciated the full meaning of the trick which his adversaries had tried to play on him, and the man who smiles in the face of danger is one to be depended on.

The six cords were numbered. He dropped No. 2, which he was holding, and seized Nos. 4 and 5. He drew them in, hand over hand, as rapidly as possible, but was careful not to sacrifice a smooth tension to undue hurry. In a few seconds two deafening reports split the air. The glass front of the chart house shook, pieces of the broken panes rattled on the floor, several scraps of iron, bolts, nuts and heavy nails fell off the decks and hatches, and a tremendous hubbub of yells came from the main body of Indians. A couple of heavily charged dynamite bombs had burst in their midst, dealing death and destruction over a wide area. Several canoes near the floating platforms were torn asunder and sank, while men were killed or wounded out of all proportion to the number of craft disabled.

Courtenay at once picked up the governing cord of the mine which he was about to fire in the first instance. He felt that the Alaculof flotilla would act in future on the "once bitten twice shy" principle where those innocent looking little poles showed above sea level, and he must strike fierce blows while the opportunity served. The nine canoes on the south were not clustered around the bomb in the same manner as the others, but they were near enough to sustain heavy loss, and their frightened crews had ceased to ply their paddles, so he fired that shell also and had the satisfaction of seeing two more of the frail craft capsize.

He heard the crash of bullets against the ship's sides. A volley of stones smashed several more panes of stout glass, many arrows were imbedded in the woodwork, but he calmly pulled another cord and blew a single loud blast on the siren. That was the agreed signal to warn those below that they must expect to be attacked from the fore part of the vessel. His shotgun was lying on the table. He took it up and faced forward again. Several canoes were scurrying past and away from the ship as fast as the current and many arms could propel them. He fired both barrels at those within range on the port side. He reloaded, and the sharp snapping of revolver shots told him that Tollemache and the Chilean were busy.

But the Indians were demoralized by the complete failure of their scheme. They had ceased firing and stone slinging; they were flying for their lives. Courtenay wheeled round on Suarez.

"Now!" he cried, pointing to a speaking trumpet. Suarez ran out on deck, put the megaphone to his mouth and roared after the discomfited enemy a threat of worse things in store if they dared to come near the ship again. As he used the Alaculof language, the sounds he uttered were the most extraordinary that Courtenay had ever heard from a human throat—a com-

GREAT IMPROVEMENTS

Have Been Made on Park Avenue This Spring

Dr. Bartlett has a Place to be Proud of Other Beauty Spots

When you start out for an afternoon's walk take a stroll on Park avenue follow the street through to the city park and note the great improvements that have been made on this pretty avenue during the past few months.

One of the most charming situated homes on this avenue is that of our fellow town-man, Dr. L. L. Bartlett. Since moving into their new home the genial doctor has been remodeling, repainting, grading and cleaning up until the home and its surroundings present altogether a different appearance. At the northeast corner of the house a new dining room 12x18 has been erected, entrance to which is made through large double doors, giving seating capacity for thirty-four guests. In addition to this the third floor has been made into five large sleeping rooms, making in the house thirteen large bedrooms with bath and toilet rooms on each floor. The basement has been enlarged, and a laundry will be placed at the north entrance. The old barn which stood in the rear has been made into a fine nine room house, and has been newly painted.

Dr. Bartlett takes great pride in showing the grounds back of the house. The lot extends through to the banks of the river, and from here one gets a fine view of Lake Michigan to the west and of the beautiful summer homes across the river.

It will take but a few minutes to drive dull care away at the Bartlett. People can go there with as much assurance of perfect satisfaction as in the most particular hotels. The Bartlett extends an invitation to all their friends to call at their new home.

Across the street from the Bartlett home is the new home of Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Hines. This is one of the prettiest homes on the street and its well kept lawn adds to the beauty of the avenue.

Following the avenue to the west we pass the beautiful homes of J. L. Crane, W. J. Rachow, D. S. Payton, W. A. Smith, the McCartney residence and other fine residences. Well kept lawns, beautiful flower beds and neatly built homes has made Park Avenue one of the prettiest streets in Charlevoix.

How about that coal stove? You had better Phone 193 we will look after your stove troubles. 184-f

WOMAN IS MISSING

Efforts are Being Made to Locate Petoskey Bazar Proprietress.

Miss Gertrude A. Cowles, proprietress of one of Petoskey's summer bazars, is missing and all efforts to locate her so far have proved unavailing. She had been teaching school in the far south during the winter and on her way north stopped at Detroit. She left there some time ago and has not been seen since. A lot of goods are stored in her salesroom, new boxes of goods are arriving and no arrangement having been made with the renters of the building these are at a loss as to the disposition of the goods. The officers both here and all through southern Michigan are endeavoring to locate her, but the only result has been the finding of a portion of her baggage at Flint, which clew, however, has led to nothing.

Yes we store and take care of your stove troubles Phone 193. 184-f is not the only professional woman who can boast of her success as a cook. Myrtle Reed, the famous novelist, is just as famous for her culinary achievements as for her literary success, and Edna Kenton, for whom Richard Watson Gilder predicts great success in American fiction is a wonderful cook. Mary Roberts Rinehart and Anne Warner French are others in the long list of literary ladies who also shine at the cook stove as well as at the desk.

While it may be the reaction to the simple life that attracts them to cookery, the stars themselves explain their interest by the declaration that cooking is just as much of a fine art as writing. They say that it is a matter of brain work as well as of manual skill. And every woman who has made a success of cooking, whether or not she has of writing or of acting, knows that this is the case.

Success in baking depends on the materials chosen as well as on the right temperature of the oven or the exact measures of quantity. You may by chance get the oven right, but if you have poor material you cannot possibly achieve a triumph of culinary art. You can't bake good cake or good muffins or good gingerbread or good biscuits unless you have good baking powder. If you have perfect material, you will have perfect results. Calumet Baking Powder, which received the highest award at the World's Pure Food Exposition, is the best baking powder on the market, and it sells at a moderate price.

A new counterfeit $5 note, so crude in workmanship that it cannot escape detection before the eyes of a careful handler of money, has just been discovered and reported to the secret service bureau. The note purposes to be one of the series of 1907 and bears a portrait of Andrew Jackson. It is a poor photo-mechanical production on a piece of paper. No attempt was made to imitate the silk threads of the genuine and all the fine work is badly blurred. Boyne Citizen.

The latest invention to hang in the family dining room is the gum board. It is a neat little circular board, plain, or decorated, fastened to the wall. The name of each of the family is painted on the circumference, and marks the spot where the gum is left until wanted. This saves carrying the gum to bed and getting it in one's hair or swallowing it in the night. It is obvious that the gum board supplies a long felt want, and he who invented the new fad will have the best wishes of the young ladies.

Michigan now has an official post card and is a card that all citizens of this state may well be proud of. At the left hand side of the card is a column of strength, at the base of which is a clustered fruit and grain. From the cap of the column a red steamer bering the words "Michigan, 1835," reaches in graceful lobls across the top and at the upper right hand corner is the state shield and coat of arms. The legion on the card was composed by the state librarian, Mrs. Mary C. Spencer. It reads as follows:

"Here's to our lake-encircled state—
Our Michigan, so strong, so great;
Her mineral wealth, her waving grain,
Her home where peace and plenty reign;
Greatest of states since states began,
We pledge to thee, our Michigan."

George E. Simons was seriously injured in the Antrim Iron Co.'s saw mill at Antrim last week. In attempting to pass under a shaft an unprotected set screw caught his clothing at the back of the neck and whirled him rapidly around. He became unconscious after the fifth trip and his his life was saved only by a fellow workman who saw the accident and jumping against a belt threw it off the pulley on the shaft. Simons was badly injured about the neck, chest and hips, the muscles being badly torn and swollen. The tightening of the clothing around his neck choked him into unconsciousness and he had a close call from death. This is the third time time Simons has been the victim of an accident in this saw mill

It is regarded as strange a guy wire should become so charged with electric current.

"This is going to be a great year for Michigan beans," said S. M. Piper of Grand Rapids. "There is good money in the crop, which in itself is an encouragement to grow them. Then the backward spring in many districts made it impossible to plant oats and beans will be put in instead. Michigan holds the banner for beans, both for quantity and quality, and according to my information the year will surpass all previous records." Mr. Piper is agent for a bean thresher, and is posted on crop conditions in that line.

W. A. Elliot, a prominent farmer of Lake county, is trying an experiment upon his farm this year which may mean much to farmers of sand land. He put out clover and alfalfa seed this spring inoculated with bacteria provided by the government. The bacteria come in a small sealed tube, the contents of which are poured into a gallon of water in which a tablet has been previously dissolved. The seed is thoroughly soaked in this and then spread to dry, and when sown is mixed with a quantity of clean dry sand. The principal of the inoculation is the formation of nodules upon the roots of the plant which insure more food for the plant and a surer growth. The government report states that the average of several hundred experiments upon sand land, for which this process is especially adapted, has resulted in 19 successes out of 20.

DEATH TO DANDELIONS

Horticulturist Department at Bozeman Issues Directions for Killing the Pests.

The following directions for killing dandelions have been sent out by R. W. Fisher horticulturist at the agricultural college at Bozeman.

Iron sulphate or copperas as a spray solution for the eradication for dandelions has been tested by several experiment stations in the United States with more or less success. When the spray solution is properly made and applied the dandelions can be killed without injury to blue grass or white clover, except that the leaves of the white clover may be spotted a little by the iron sulphate solution, rarely enough, however, to disfigure a lawn. By keeping the lawn closely cut and well watered the clover and blue grass will rapidly recover from any injury which might result from the spraying.

One good spray pump will be sufficient for several lawns as it takes only a short time to spray a lawn. The spray solution cannot be successfully applied with a sprinkling can as the large drops will not stay on the leaves. Spraying should be done on a day when the wind is not blowing when the grass is dry and can be kept dry for 12 or 24 hours after spraying. The lawn should be well watered several hours before the solution is applied, long enough in advance to permit the grass leaves to dry and still have the roots in soil moist enough so the lawn can go a day or two without water in order to give the spray solution a chance to do its work. If water lawn should be well watered several hours before the solution is applied, long enough in advance to permit the grass leaves to dry and still have the roots in roil moist enough so the lawn can go a day or two without water in order to give the spray solution a chance to do its work. If waler is applied too soon after spraying, the iron sulphate will be washed off and no results will follow.

Spraying should be done about every six weeks or whenever the dandelion leaves show a green color, and by keeping the leaves killed by spraying with iron sulphate whenever they start to grow, the roots can be entirely killed, as it is impossible for the roots to live more than one season without green leaves. Spraying made at the experiment station with the iron sulphate solution resulted in killing all the leaves ordandelions, without injury to blue grass and with only a few spots on white clover which in no way disfigures the lawn. Where the dandelions are thick the lawn will look bad for a few days after spraying because of dead leaves on the dandelion plants. The spaces where the dandelions are killed out should be seeded at once with blue grass seed in order to fill up the vacant ground and prevent weeds from germinating. The iron sulphate or copperas as it is commonly known can be purchased for a few cents a pound in quantity and is used at the rate of 1½ to 2 pounds per one gallon of water. The solution should be applied soon after the iron sulphate is dissolved as there is a chemical reaction which takes place soon after it is dissolved and if left standing too long it lessens its power to kill the dandelions. The iron sulphate solution is not poisonous to handle, but will discolor iron, stone and clothing and reasonable care should therefore be taken in applying it about houses where there are iron fences and stone foundations and walks.

If the following instructions are followed out, good results will follow.

Procure a good spray pump, one that holds about three gallons and can be carried while spraying.

Spray when the leaves are dry and can be kept dry for several hours after spraying.

Spray with a fine mist which can be done only with a good nozzle under high pressure.

Use iron sulphate at the rate of 1½ to 2 pounds per gallon.

Do not let the solution stand more than 3 or 4 hours after mixing.

Strain the solution through a fine sieve or cloth into the spray can so that no material will get into the pump to clog it up.

Spray about every six weeks or whenever the dandelions start into growth.

Keep the lawn grass well watered so that the grass can overcome by vigorous growth any damage resulting from the spray solution.

Do not spray more than is necessary to kill the dandelions.

Further information in regard to lawn spraying can be secured by writing the horticultural department of the experiment station at Bozeman, Montana.

A Beautified Park.

The Michigan State Fair grounds at the present time has the appearance of a great city park. The recent rains have produced a luxuriant growth of grass, shrubs and flowers, that make the place in every direction. A joy even at this time of the year.

Attendants are constantly at work mowing the grass, trimming the plants, and at the same time installing shrubs and flowers that are planned to produce a most gorgeous effect during the fair next September.

The rose bushes are just preparing to burst into bloom which will produce an inspiring effect during the next few weeks.

Nursery companies are already preparing for the great fall exhibit and have many men at work arranging flower beds and shrubs to attract attention when the time comes.

Car loads of gravel and cement are being shipped into the grounds for long stretches of cement walk that will take the place of muddy thoroughfares. This is an improvement that will be greatly appreciated by the general public. Besides eliminating a large amount of muddy walk, dust will also be done away with.

At the present time a new horse barn—240 feet long—is being erected. It will be one of the finest in the country and a great convenience to horsemen and others who will exhibit stock at the coming state fair. This structure was started early and will be fully completed long before the fair opens.

Other features are contemplated which will add to the convenience of the great institutions.

BUSINESS MEN'S DAY.

Detroit Wholesalers to Entertain Michigan Retail Dealers.

Wednesday, September 6, will be "Wholesalers' day" at the Michigan State Fair and the Detroit Wholesalers' association has arranged a program of entertainments that will give the visitors an extremely delightful time. On this occasion merchants from all parts of Michigan and the surrounding states will be guests of the Detroit organization, which will see that nothing is left undone for their enjoyment. The Michigan State Fair and the city of Detroit has a reputation for doing things and the visitors on that day will be treated to surprises at every turn.

The Wholesalers' association will have a tent on the grounds with free telephone service to visitors, who thus will be able to talk with friends back home.

The evening will be known as "Wholesalers' night," for which a special entertainment will be prepared, including a magnificent horseshow and a general vaudeville performance which will take place in front of the grand stand. A grand display of fireworks, including many large pieces, will conclude the evening.

Michigan retail merchants say that Detroit is one of the best places in the country in which to buy goods. About everything under the sun can be found there. The shops, mills and wholesale houses are numerous and the proprietors cater to the very highest class of trade. This fact was demonstrated a year ago when five thousand visiting merchants attended the annual meeting.

It is expected that this year's attendance will exceed that of 1908. The railroads are interested in the event and will furnish cheap rates into Detroit from every part of the state.

Real Indian Village.

The American Indian is gradually disappearing and his mode of life is becoming more interesting each day, to the general public. The management of the Michigan State Fair, realizing the educational features that lie in the Indian village, has secured an attraction of this sort, which is promised to be one of the leading features of the Midway at the coming State Fair, September 2 to 10.

This is a real Indian village and consists of "Chief Two Stars" and his followers, consisting of one hundred persons.

The Indians will live at the Fair grounds in tepes. In the same wild style that existed on western plains fifty years ago.

These Indians will eat, sleep and appear in a semi-barbaric style that will be interesting to every visitor at the grounds. This attraction will be as fascinating to adults as to the children. The Indians will execute war dances, shoot with arrows, ride bucking broncos, rope cattle and do everything that is so common on the western reservations.

The State Fair of Today.

The state fair has become recognized as an auxiliary in helping to build up the general agricultural interests of live stock and agricultural districts. The incentive of exhibition contest and friendly competition at the Michigan State fair, which opens September 2 and continues until September 10, will stimulate and encourage in the mind of Michigan stockmen and agriculturists, a desire the following year to do something better.

The fair influence is not confined to one line or one branch of agricultural industry, but extends to every department of home life, farm and industrial enterprise. It is sufficiently broad to take in every feature of manufacture and production even to the educational accomplishments of the public schools of the state.

The Michigan State fair has become the great clearing house institution as it were, for the breeder, the feeder, the producer, the scientist, and in fact every branch of industry to be interested in an intelligent and appreciative public. It is here where the [illegible] the best [illegible] the skill of his hand the work of the product of whatever nature to test the merit and its value when placed in comparison with the work and efforts of others. The State Fair is an educational institution and a means of congregating together in a systematically arranged exhibition, the best of everything the state has produced.

GREAT RACING AT THE FAIR.

Fastest Animals in the World Will Meet September 2-10.

No single feature of a State Fair attracts more people on its own accord than the racing, if it is of sufficient merit. That this fact is well known by the powers that have been and those that are in the Michigan Agricultural Society is shown in the completeness of the [illegible]. The steel grand stand, the mile track, the spacious and healthful stables, representing in all an outlay of over $100,000, show what is thought of the harness horses at the Michigan State Fair.

There is no more complete plant down the line of the grand circuit than that just outside of Detroit, where the big fair is held each year. The track was rebuilt last year at a cost of $10,000 and now presents the composite surface, so successful at Memphis, the pattern after which other tracks are cut.

The fact that at the State Fair of 1908 no less than nine horses beat 2:10 in winning heats on the track and at the blue ribbon meeating that year a number of world's records were demolished shows what a fast track Michigan has. It is the talk of the country among racing men, and is one of the only cases where the same track is used for the State Fair and the grand circuit, affording the fairgoers an opportunity of seeing horses race on the fastest piece of dirt out of doors.

The equipments are perfect. Such is the growth of the popularity of the sport of the sulky that each year sees additional demand for stabling, and this summer a new barn with a capacity of fifty has been completed. In all 300 horses can be housed in roomy box-stalls in the speed barns, and because of the general desire to stroll down and take a look at them the directors of the society have had laid a continuation of the concrete walks, which now run past the cattle, sheep, swine and speed barns—an excellent idea.

In the past the fair has been fortunate in attracting a good class of horses, and there are reasons why there will be an improvement this year. A new fair at Kalamazoo opens on August 30, and in connection with it there will be a big race meeting. The Kalamazoo stakes have attracted an unusual number of horses, and from that city the horses will come to Detroit, where the State Fair race program opens September 6 and continues for five afternoons. The State Fair is a member of the Michigan circuit; other states will contribute, so from all sources it promises to assemble a lot of fast and clever race horses.

In addition to the fifteen races scheduled for the five afternoons there will be a great attraction on September 9. Dan Patch, 1:55, the unbeaten champion of the world, will race against Minor Heir, 1:59½, his most formidable rival. They will go one heat, the idea being to lower the world's record below two minutes, which the trainer of the horses says he will be able to do if the weather and track are right. It will be the most spectacular event ever known to the light harness turf, solitary exhibitions against time failing to a shadow in comparison with this struggle from wire to wire.

The program, with the added attraction, is one of the greatest ever offered by a state fair and will serve to keep Michigan's yearly outing in the forefront. The regular race card for the fair is as follows:

Monday, September 6—2:10 pace; purse $500; 2:18 trot, $500; 2:16 pace, $500.

Tuesday, September 7—2:30 pace, $500; 2:12 trot, 500; 2:22 pace, $500.

Wednesday, September 8—2:24 trot, $500; free-for-all pace, $500; 2:30 trot, $500.

Thursday, September 9—2:24 pace, $500; 2:16 trot, $500; 2:13 pace, $500.

Friday, September 10—Free-for-all trot, $500; 2:19 pace, $500; 2:25 trot, $500.

Prices Have Been Reduced.

Admission to the grandstand at the Michigan State Fair this year will be reduced to twenty-five cents, the former price of fifty cents being considered too high. One general price, therefore, will be charged for both the grandstand and bleacher seats, when the fair is in progress from September 3d to September 10th.

It is believed that the public will appreciate this move on the part of the Michigan State Fair management and that more persons will avail themselves of this convenience at the big exhibit. These seats are indispensible for those who wish to thoroughly enjoy the races, the horse show, the fireworks and many other attractions that can be seen to advantage from this part of the grounds.

THE BANK THAT DOES THINGS FOR YOU

To Quiet Restless Calves.

The old time English farmers had a custom of keeping veal calves quiet when milk was scarce. In such a case balls were made from wheat flour with sufficient glu to form it into a paste. The balls were about the size of a walnut and were given to the calves a quarter of an hour after each meal. Instead of bawling and fretting the calf would lie quiet and sleep most of the time. This plan, says Hoard's Dairyman, might be followed with a nervous, restless calf with profit.

For Lice on Hogs.

A swine breeder says that a good thing to do in the hog lot is to put down some short posts, around which some old tow sacks are fastened. Saturate these thoroughly every once in awhile with kerosene, and when the hogs rub up against the posts to scratch the oil will help to keep them free from lice.

Subtle Self Praise.

Once when Moltke heard himself compared to Caesar, Turenne, Marlborough, Wellington and others he remarked, "No; I have no right to rank with such great captains, for I have never commanded a retreat," which at the same time conveyed a subtle compliment to himself.

Bismarck was equally subtle when he was asked whom he thought to have been the oldest plenipotentiary at the congress of Berlin. "I don't know about the oldest," she replied, with a grim smile, "but the next oldest was certainly Lord Beaconsfield."

pound of hoarse, guttural vowels and consonants ending in a series of clicks—and the stentorian power of his lungs must have amazed the Indians.

Courtenay saw that the two fleets were combining forces about 500 yards to the westward. They were close inshore, but none of the savages landed, nor did they head for the more remote Otter creek. As he was anxious to keep them on the run, he resolved to try the siren again. He judged rightly, as it transpired, that they would fear the bellow of the fog horn even more than the flying missiles which had dealt death and serious wounds so lavishly.

He knew sufficient Spanish, eked out by signs, to bid Suarez hold the siren cord taut for a minute. While the Kansas was still trumpeting forth her loud blare of defiance he ran down the bridge companion. Mr. Boyle and the tiny garrison of the port promenade deck received him jubilantly. They had escaped without a bruise and owing to their position were able to witness the Indians' retreat.

He raced across to starboard and found that by unfortunate mischance a Chilean fireman in Tollemache's detachment had been shot through the brain. The poor fellow was prone on the deck. It was only too evident that a doctor's skill could avail him naught, so Tollemache had decided that he should not be taken below. The incident marred an easily won victory. Courtenay was assured in his own mind that none of the men had been injured, seeing that he and Suarez, who occupied the most dangerous position, were untouched. This fatality was a mere blunder of fate, and it grieved him sorely.

Even while he bent reverently over the unlucky Chilean's body the deafening vibration of the fog horn ceased and he heard Elsie's glad cry from the salon:

"Oh, my, here comes Joey! That means that Captain Courtenay has left the bridge."

The girl's joyous exclamation, her prelude to a paean of thanks that the dreadful necessary slaying of men had ceased, was a strange commentary on the shattered form stretched at the commander's feet. Among the small company on board it had been decreed that one at least, after surviving so many perils, should never see home and kin again.

He gave orders that the dead man should be carried to the poop to await a sailor's burial. Then he turned and, with less sprightly step, descended the main companion. In the salon he found Elsie and Christobal watching the stairs expectantly. The girl had the dog in her arms, and Courtenay perceived for the first time that Joey's off fore paw had been cut by the broken glass which littered the floor of the chart house.

"Then the attack has really failed?" was Elsie's greeting. "I saw some of the canoes turn and scurry away. That was the first good sign, and then Joey came."

"You saw them?" repeated Courtenay, his bent brows emphasizing the question.

"Yes. I was looking through one of the ports. Was that wrong?"

"Which one?"

She pointed. "That one," said she, wondering that he had never a smile for her.

"Then you must obey orders more faithfully next time. A man was shot dead by a stray bullet not three feet above your head."

She paled, and her eyes fell before his stern gaze, which did not deceive her at all, for she read the unspoken agony of his thought.

"I am sorry," she murmured, "not so much on my own account, though I shall be more careful in future, but because some one has suffered. Who is it—not one of our own people, I hope?"

"A fireman, I think his name is Gama. You have hardly seen him, I fancy, but I regret his loss exceedingly. It must have been the merest accident."

The captain of the Kansas was certainly preoccupied or he would never have failed to inquire the extent of Joey's injury. Nor would either he or Elsie have forgotten that Christobal was not "one of our own people," though the girl might protest hotly against any invidious twisting of the phrase.

The Spaniard missed nothing of Courtenay's solicitude for Elsie's well being nor of her shy confusion. Christobal was under no sort of doubt that unless another "accident" intervened he had lost all chance of winning this woman's love.

But he swallowed the bitter knowledge and said:

"If you undertake to hold the dog, Miss Maxwell, I will bind his paw."

"Oh, my ducky darling little pet! Did I actually forget all about his dear wounded little foot? And he came hopping in so bravely, too, carrying himself with such a grand air. Come, then, Joey, dear! Let us see what has happened. Yes, this is the doctor, but he won't hurt you. He is so good and kind to little dogs. He will wrap up the bloody part until it is quite nice and comfy."

CHAPTER XIV.

On his way back to the deck the captain encountered Suarez. The Spaniard led the Englishman toward one of the peepholes in the canvas screen. Sure enough, the canoes were making off toward Otter creek. In the marvelously clear light it was easy to see the threatening arms held out toward the ship by a few men who stood upright. Even their rancous cries were yet audible. Courtenay was glad he had not missed this demonstration of hatred. It argued the necessity of continued watchfulness.

The general attitude of the crew was one of real annoyance that the fight had not been carried on at close quarters. The Kansas bore tokens in plenty of the battle. Many bullets and arrows had struck the ship, the canvas was torn in several places, a number of port lights were broken, and the open decks, fore and aft as well as the spar deck, were littered with stones. He picked up some of these missiles, man's earliest and latest projectile. They were round and heavy. A few bore the red streaks of oxidized iron; some appeared to be veritable lava, although the action of water had made them "smooth stone out of the brook." He showed one to Tollemache, who seemed to possess a good deal of out of the way knowledge, and the latter instantly pronounced the specimen to be almost pure copper veined with silver.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Dr. Jordan began his address by quoting from Franklin: "Wars are not paid for in war-time—the bill comes later!" This topic, he said, presented a part of the cost of war which is too often overlooked—a great fact that "looms up so large that most men fail to see it."

He told of seeing on one of the battlefields of France a heap of skulls twenty feet high—the skulls of soldiers, plowed up by the peasants who were tilling the field. The sight, he said, is repeated on many European battlefields.

"Those are skulls of young men from eighteen to thirty-five, the best and strongest and bravest of the young men of the land, chosen for the armies because they were strong and without blemish—in a measure. These lost their lives in war, while the weak, the diseased, remained at home to become the parents of the succeeding generation, the great widening wedge of posterity."

The decreasing birth rate of France, the decreasing stature and vitality of the French people, Dr. Jordan declared to be the price of France's many wars, and the same is true, he said, of every nation in proportion as it has wasted its young manhood in war. He told of his personal study of the Swiss in certain cantons which for many years hired their young men as soldiers to other nations, as compared with the other cantons of the same country—the results going to prove his former statement.

The United States has suffered in a similar way because of the waste of life in the Civil war. Dr. Jordan spoke at some length in elaborating this statement, and closed his address with the quotation from Franklin with which he began—"Wars are not paid for in wartime—the bill comes later."

A Diplomatic Postponement.

"I thought you were going to be married this month," said the tall girl.

"I had expected to be," said the blue eyed girl, "but I have put it off three months because my birthday comes this month, and if I get married then my wedding anniversary and birthday will come right together in future years and I'll get only half as many presents, because everybody will make one present do for both occasions."

How to Clean White Felt Hats.

One girl whose income is so small that her fur coat is the best she can afford to wear the light colored hats that are so becoming to her keeps them clean with tailor's chalk. She lays in a supply of this chalk, which can be bought for a few cents and in different colors. Should a spot appear in a pink hat, for instance, it is immediately covered with pink chalk and laid in a dark place for several hours or, better yet, overnight. When the chalk was brushed off the spot usually comes along. A milliner is responsible for a somewhat heroic treatment of light felt hats. She says that when they become dirty she always rubs the surface with the finest sandpaper that can be found. Strange to say, this does not roughen the felt and does remove the dirt.

How to Make Gruel For Invalids.

Comparatively few cooks know how to make appetizing and wholesome gruel for invalids. One that is particularly nourishing and may be quite delicious is made from sago. Put two tablespoonfuls of sago into a double boiler and add a pint of cold water. Boil until it thickens, stirring constantly to prevent lumpiness or burning. Just before taking from the stove add a little sugar if sweetening is liked, and when cold flavor it with a tablespoonful of sherry. If wine is not used a little nutmeg can be sprinkled over the top before serving.

BEARS GENERALLY JOLLY.

But Sometimes One Comes Along With a Settled Grouch.

"Rarely are bears born ill tempered. They may show some resentment at the time of their capture when but two months old, but this feeling soon disappears, leaving a jolly rogue ever willing to box and wrestle. I once knew a cub that was a regular terror," says a writer in Collier's, "and he never reformed. He would attack anything regardless of its size or strength.

"At the age of three months he would charge at me, snorting, sniffing and striking with his tiny paws, and when I did not protect myself he seized my trousers leg between his teeth and shook it violently.

"At first I thought that he had been abused by his former owner and that by kind treatment he would soon outgrow his temper; but, no, he just had it in him, and he became more and more dangerous as time sped by.

"Finally he grew large enough to be put in with the mature bears without danger of his squeezing between the bars and escaping, and lo the surprise of every one he immediately took charge of the den. Old bears twenty times his size, possibly from some sense of honor, if animals have honor, submitted to cuffs and slaps in the face and actually allowed him to snatch food from their mouths without resenting the insult."

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm grange met in regular session Saturday evening June 26, 1909. Called to order at 8:30 by Worthy Master St. John.

As all the committee on applications were not present the worthy master appointed Bros. Keal and Ranney to fill vacancy. The committee reported favorably and J. H. Milford was balloted on and accepted.

Recess after which Will Crawford, John Bancroft and Ethel Bancroft were initiated in the third and fourth degrees. Initiation was followed by our fourth degree supper which we all enjoyed.

Lecturers hour was carried out with songs, discussions and recitations. On the question "What are we going to do the Fourth," Brother H. J. Olney went on record as being opposed to large picnics which make a great deal of work for a few.

It was decided to have an informal picnic where the grangers may come and bring their friends. This picnic will be held Saturday July 3.

During the lecturers hour sister Lutie Robinson who has been attending the Agricultural College, gave an interesting talk on that institution describing the situation of the college, the campus and gave a brief outline of the course of study and of the woman's course in particular.

Owing to the death of Mr. Charles H. Conley our attendance was not large. Mr. Conley was closely related to several of our members and had himself applied for membership and had been accepted, but, owing to sickness, had never been initiated. The funeral was held Sunday June 27 at the hall. Rev. Grigsby officiating. Thirty members present. Three visitors.

If we had good roads leading into Charlevoix, every man who has anything to sell and has to bring it to Charlevoix could make an average of $3.00 more per day hauling over the good roads than he can hauling over those at the present time. Long stretches of good roads can often be made by simply draining the land by the side of the road, but in many instances instead, they haul a lot of mud, or earth that becomes mud the first time it rains, and in the places where this soft mud has been taken out are large pools of water which sink through and undermine the road. I have in mind one place which for many years was called "Uncle Park McIntyre's quarter, Section 24." About three or four miles north of Norwood at the bottom of a little hill there was always, with the exception of a year or two that Bill Wiles was road commissioner, either, in wet weather, deep mud holes, or in extreme dry seasons, deep "thank you mams" and both of these conditions could be remedied by digging a drain on the east side of the road which could have been done with a team and a scraper in about an hour. Very truly yours,

GEO. H. VANPELT.

Equally strong complaints can be made of two new pieces of road in Charlevoix township, one at Wakefield's hill, where Dr. Thielen came near losing his life a few days ago, and the other on the Petoskey road leading to Bay City. Wake up your men who want good roads.

Charlevoix, Michigan,
June 28, 1909.

My Dear COURIER:—

My attention has been called to the condition of the main road to Norwood, both by experience in driving over the road and by your pertinent article in the COURIER of June 23, "Good reasons for kicking."

An enthusiastic business man, as well as an equally enthusiastic automobilist in Traverse City, said to me, "Why don't you get busy on the road question? You used to write some good articles on good roads and I always read them with great pleasure, but, it does not seem to me, that the roads are as good now as they were ten or a dozen years ago. What have you to say about that?" "Well, I replied, it is a sad and lamentable fact, that, as near as I can figure it, in the last ten years we have spent about $7,000.00 in making them worse and another bad feature is, that not only have thousands of fine elm and maple trees been destroyed by the sides of the roads which, if they had been thinned out and allowed to grow, would, in a few years, have made the road to Norwood one of the most beautiful drives in Northern Michigan or any other Michigan. Also fine, large, old trees have been wantonly cut down, thus spoiling nice, shady resting places for tired horses as well as tired humanity. And so the work goes on, no, I can't call it work, destruction of beauty spots instead."

I wonder why the farmers and city merchants do not elect men for road commissioners who know how to build good roads and in townships where there are no good road builders, why they do not engage the services of a man who has made it a study and a business. Lots of good road ways could be made good roads by simply draining the roads but instead, they haul in a lot of mud, or earth that becomes mud the first time it rains, and then the water, standing in pools by the sides of the road, sinks through and undermines the road. I have in mind such a place on Uncle Park's place, two or three miles this side of Norwood. There has always been either a deep mud hole or deep "Thank you mams" ever since I came to this country twenty-five years ago, except two years when Bill Wiles was road commissioner.

Yours Truly,
GEORGE H. VANPELT.

NAMES ARE NOW THE SAME

Boyne City Succeeds in Getting Post Office of Same Name.

After years of effort on the part of the citizens of Boyne City the post office department has been made to see the injustice of keeping Boyne City on the post office list as Boyne. Postmaster Newville has received official notice that on July 1st the name would be changed to Boyne City. This is, indeed, good news for it will do away with a great inconvenience under which all have suffered for a long time.

The Postmaster had to be reappointed for it seems that his appointment for Boyne was not good for Boyne City. This also means that he will have to furnish new bonds and go through all the formality of a regular appointment.

ROAD DRAG SEASON.

Any Month If the Conditions Are Right For Its Use.

The road drag is like the manure spreader—in style any month in the year if the conditions are right for its use. Other machines are put in the shed to wait their season, but the road drag should always be ready to hitch to if we are to use it to the best advantage. The accepted time for the use of the drag is when the roads are drying up after the rains. It is surprising what an immense amount of good can be done the roads in an hour at such a time. Enough dirt is brought in to keep the road well rounded up, the water is allowed to run off, and the mud is puddled and plastered down so that the surface is quickly dried and compacted ready to shed the next shower a little better. Some people seem to have a wrong conception of the time to drag. I have seen one of our trustees out enruling (?) the township money after the roads had been dry a day or two. He seemed to think the mission of the drag was to fill up the ruts. At any rate, he would drive merrily along, leaving in some places hardly a track among the clods.

About the most satisfaction we ever realized from dragging the roads came from a job done in the mud just before the last freeze in the fall. How can you tell when to do it? Just guess at it and keep trying. If it thaws the next day there is no harm done. And when you do hit it you surely feel like a public benefactor as you watch the teams go gliding by on your pavement to bring up with a bump on your neighbor's rough road. The spring is the time to use the road drag if you want to do some lasting good to the highway. The dirt is soft and easily worked then, and a few trips over the road with the drag, cleaning out the ditches and rounding up the surface, will do more good than a gang of men with the grader in the fall. The best job I ever did with the drag was to round up the track on a bad clay hill just as the frost was going out. That hill was good all summer.—C. J. Kelsey in Homestead.

MOLASSES FOR ROADS.

Of Great Value In Improving Highways When Mixed With Lime.

Molasses mixed with lime and oil is being experimented with by the United States department of agriculture in roadmaking, and this combination promises to prove of great value in bettering the highways in certain sections of the country.

Last fall the experts of the United States department of agriculture made several experiments on the streets of Newton, Mass. One that attracted notice on the part of authorities on street construction and no little ridicule was what was dubbed the "molasses road."

The street commissioner selected a difficult piece of road on Summit street, with a steep grade and a sharp curve—just the spot for quick destruction of a road by the automobile and heavy traffic and an equally advantageous place for observation of the effect of the strong wind.

A preparation of molasses, lime and oil was mixed with a small amount of cement and spread on the surface hot. The liquid in the mixture percolated to the substratum of rock and made a surface of from two to three inches of heavy binding material. That section has passed the tests of winter, and today the surface is so hard that considerable force is required to dent it with a pickax.

It is not slippery. It gives a firm footing for horses, and automobiles do not skid. On this section of Summit street are located fine residences and a large school for girls, and today, with the windows open, no irritating particles of dirt are driven into the dwellings.

Any one who takes a look at Summit street is not likely to gibe at the "molasses road." It is said to be less expensive than street watering.

Poetically Put.

"We'd begun to think it would never come to anything," Mrs. Dove said frankly, "for Sister Sue is forty and Mr. Jenkins is forty-nine.

"But they're married at last, and the funny part of it is that they seem as happy as if they hadn't been—well, what we used to call courting for seventeen years."

"Ah, a romance of the middle ages!" Mrs. Dove's caller politely observed.

MILITARY SCIENCE AND DRILL

One of the Regular Features at Agricultural College

AS DESCRIBED BY CHARLEVOIX STUDENT

Annual Inspection Occurred a Few Days Ago

Very Pleasant When the Sun was Shining Brightly—A Fly's Paradise—A Warm Battle While Ammunition Lasted.

One of the regular features of the Michigan Agricultural College is the Cadet Corps. Military drill and the study of military science is obligatory in each of the regular courses of study. They have a regular uniform and a full soldiers equipment including rifles. The United States government stations a regular commissioned officer of the United States army at the college, who is at the head of this department and is instructor of military science and drills. Each year there is inspection by a regular officer of the United States army and upon the report from this inspector depends the amount of aid which the United States government furnishes the college for the training of the students in this branch. This inspection occurred last week. We are permitted to give a description of it from a letter written by one of the Charlevoix students to his parents.

"Among the most important events last week were the United States military inspection which was on Thursday and the May festival on Friday.

The last occurrence would probably interest you more than the former, but on account of the fact that I attended the inspection and did not go to the festival, I will have to omit the latter and tell you about the former.

It came on us rather unexpectedly for we had been told that Friday was the earliest day the inspector could be here, but somehow he changed his plans and we were notified to be on the drill grounds, dressed to kill at one o'clock Thursday afternoon. Of course we were there with our hair cut and brushed till it shown like the brasses on our belts, our shoes blacked in the best possible manner, our faces shaven, our uniforms pressed and cleaned, clean white gloves and a clean white military collar. This is saying nothing about our guns. (Ned and I put three hours on ours in cleaning them.)

I must tell you the kind of an afternoon it was so that you can have the complete effect. It was one of those afternoons when the sun shone. The temperature was about ten degrees higher than the kitchen on a baking day in summer. No air moved and not a speck of a breeze was there. Add to this the thickness of our uniforms and the freedom one has when he is inside one of them and you can imagine why our collars melted like butter in a frying pan. Yes, they just wilted while the sweat ran down our sleeves (?) and off our manly brows. Oh, it was glorious! We all agreed to that afterwards while we sat under a shade tree cooling down.

I can outline the formations briefly to you. We first formed in company front, each battalion forming one leg of a right angle. The lines were as straight as a picket fence. In front of each company stood the captain and in front of the center of the two battalions were the two majors. The reviewing officer (Inspector) stood out in front of both battalions and out of the way of our manenvers. Then we marched past the inspector by companies, in "company front" headed by the band. Our next movement was to line up in company front and be inspected, the inspector passing in front of each man both in front and rear ranks looking at the guns and sizing us up as to soldierly appearance. He passed by me like a shot so (thank goodness) I didn't have any trouble. He asked questions of the cadets whenever he felt like it and about anything he thought of. One he asked to name the head of the tobacco trust (he suspected him of having a chew in his mouth) and the fellow replied immediately "Taft."

After our inspection we had company competition drill in which Company "A" didn't land even third. There were reasons but of course it would sound bad to give any because then we would be "knockers."

The next feature was a dress parade when both battalions lined up in one line (of two rows) and stood at "parade rest" for twenty minutes while the band marched up and down the length of the line. Don't forget that the sun was still shining and pouring down on us with all its radiance and splendor, not a bit of it wasted. Then "parade rest" is anything but rest. You have to support yourself on one foot and never move a muscle, not even turn your head or raise or lower your eyes. This of course is the flies paradise, for they know that we can't move and take advantage, unfair advantage, I say. Well a few more quick changes and presto, a battle is begun. All at once off goes one company at double time to the front (along the river bank) and begins to fire on the enemy. Another company follows and then another. The air begins to vibrate with musketry and smoke begins to form in clouds. Company "A" was the last to be sent to the front. Half of us were wounded with fear before before we started but bravely we took our places on the firing line and fired in squads, lying flat on our bread baskets. The roar was very real when you got right in it, so loud that you couldn't hear your own gun when you discharged it. We kept on firing for about fifteen minutes and then our ammunition gave out and we were forced to beat a hasty retreat to the armory, where we deserted the army and changed our clothes for civilians to avoid further engagement. All through the night however, the occassional crack of a picket's (?) rifle was heard assuring us that our guards were not asleep but prowling around shooting off the ammunition they had left over. It is too bad you couldn't have heard and seen it all for it was seen by a large crowd which remained all the afternoon."

COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Held at Methodist church Wednesday and Thursday

MUCH ENTHUSIASM SHOWN IN WORK

Old Officers Were Re-elected—M. H. Robertson, President

Steps Taken for More Complete Organization of the County—Will Meet at Boyne Next Year—Delegates to State Convention

The tenth annual session of the Charlevoix County Sunday School association was held in the Methodist church in Charlevoix Wednesday and Thursday.

The convention was called to order at 3 o'clock Wednesday by President Robertson, who presided throughout the sessions. Rev. R. A. Wright, pastor of the church, conducted the devotional services and called upon Rev. G. J. Rea to offer prayer. Mrs. Heston read the minutes of the session held in East Jordan one year ago.

Mrs. P. D. Campbell, of Charlevoix, was first on the program, with a paper on "The Sunday School and Temperance," after which the remainder of the afternoon was occupied by the children of the public schools, in charge of two of their teachers. These exercises were especially interesting and pleasing, and a vote of thanks was given the little folks and their instructors.

Wednesday evening's devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. W. W. Lamport, of East Jordan, and included a solo by Mrs. W. J. Rachow. Addresses of welcome were then given. In behalf of Mayor Wilbur, who was absent, Acting-mayor Glassford welcomed the delegates to the city. Rev. F. D. Ehle, of the Baptist church, spoke for the churches, A. F. Bridge for the Sunday schools, Mrs. H. A. Putnam for the Missionary societies and Mrs. H. P. Parmalee for the W. C. T. U. The response was given by Rev. F. M. Taylor of Boyne City.

The address of the evening was given by Rev. A. D. Grigsby, of East Jordan, who chose for his subject "Shirkers, Jerkers and Workers." The address was well received and drew forth at least one hearty amen from a "Mother in Israel," which seemed to take the speaker somewhat by surprise, for he said he was not used to that at home.

Rev. G. J. Rea, of Boyne, conducted the devotional of Thursday morning. During the forenoon papers and addresses were given by Miss Agnes Rodger on "The Home Department, E. S. Stacks, of Charlevoix, on "Duties of Parents to the Sunday School," and Rev. F. M. Taylor on "The Relation of the Sunday School to Missions." Mrs. John Burns, of Charlevoix, led in a discussion of "Methods of Work in the Primary Department," during which several other primary teachers were called out and catechised as to their plans and successes.

The Thursday afternoon devotionals were conducted by Rev. F. M. Taylor. The session was devoted quite largely to business although a model adult bible class was conducted by Rev. H. A. Putnam, of Charlevoix, and Rev. G. A. Weaver, of Petoskey, gave an address on "Needs of the Hour in Sunday School Work."

Boyne City was chosen as the place of the next session.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of M. H. Robertson, of East Jordan, for president; E. S. Stacks, Ernest Peaslee, A. F. Bridge, of Charlevoix, F. E. Boosinger, of East Jordan, and E. A. Riegsegger and S. C. Smith, of Boyne City, vice presidents; Mrs. M. E. Heston, of East Jordan, secretary-treasurer. Four delegates were elected to the state convention to be held in Saginaw November 17-19, namely, M. H. Robertson, William Sloan, S. C. Smith and E. S. Stacks. The convention also voted to pay $15 into the state work for the year.

Steps have already been taken for a more complete organization of the county during the year and it is probable that most if not all of the townships will organize before another convention.

Thursday evenings devotionals were in charge of Rev. H. A. Putnam. The special musical features were a solo by Harker Kirby, of Charlevoix, and a trio by Mr. Kirby and Messrs. Wilkinson. Two addresses of more than ordinary interest were given by J. E. Henderson, of Cadillac, on "Teachers' Meetings," and by Judge F. W. Mayne, of Charlevoix, on "The Law and the Lawbreaker." Each was full of line sayings and helpful suggestions.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY BEST

Is the Verdict of Department of Agriculture Expert

That the farming lands in Charlevoix County are superior to those of any other county in Northern Michigan is once more borne out, this time by J. C. McDowell of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. Mr. McDowell is making a canvas of the farming lands of Michigan to obtain data for information of immigrants coming to this country.

Mr. McDowell has covered all the eastern and northern counties and on Friday and Saturday of last week, in company with Truant Officer Bashaw, he covered Charlevoix County. He was surprised at the number of excellent farms already developed, the quality of the soil, and the small amount of waste lands, stating that in all the counties he has yet visited, Charlevoix County contains the least.

The farming lands of Charlevoix County produce any crop that can be successfully raised in Northern Michigan, in vegetables and grains, and all fruits are far superior, apples and plums challenging the world for quality. —East Jordan Herald.

NEW HIGHWAY LAW

Passed by the State Legislature at Session Just Closed

Repeals All Former Laws and Adds Several New Interesting Provisions

The Fox highway bill was passed by both houses of the legislature before adjournment. The new bill was the longest introduced in either branch of the legislature, covering 187 printed pages, and its provisions concern every farmer. There are a great many laws relating to country roads—more than 100 in all. Some were enacted a half-century or more ago, and some contravene each other. The Fox bill repeals them all and re-enacts the best of all of them that are not obsolete. In addition there are not many new provisions. The most essential ones are: All country roads are placed on a uniform system, and must be surveyed and marked with monuments every 80 acres and recorded in the permanent record in the town in the own clerk's office.

Farmers are forbidden to drain their fields into the highways where the drainage would likely to cause washouts. The highway commissioner is empowered to acquire by condemnation proceedings gravel pits for building roads.

Where there is a dispute over a road that is dividing the line between the township and the municipality provision is made for settlement by the highway commissioner and the mayor or president.

When a street of a municipality extends into a township, the town must make the road the same width as the street.

All roads hereafter laid out shall be uniform width.

All bridges and culverts hereafter built must be strong enough to carry 12 ton.

Rural delivery letter-boxes must not be placed nearer than 15 feet from the center of the road.

Townships are allowed to have one to four overseers, to spend the repair tax, the township to definitely determine the number.

At the option of the overseer of highways a taxpayer may work out his road tax.

Township boards of fence viewers shall comprise the overseer of the district, the highway commissioner and two justices of the peace.

In the spending of highway money the township board and the highway commissioner must work in harmony with each other.

If you are fond of good music and a good laugh don't fail to see the Vandeville at the Bridge Theatre Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights of this week. 23-1-t

In our work in physiology the common house fly has been studied in connection with various communicable diseases. The following is one of the papers prepared on this topic.

THE FLY.

Since the prevention of contagious diseases has been made a subject of national importance scientists and physicians have made statements concerning the house fly. This insect has been one of the greatest agents in the spreading of tuberculosis and other dangerous and fatal diseases.

They breed in the most filthy places, in alleys, barnyards and other places where refuse is found.

On their legs are countless hairs that catch millions of germs. The fly carries these germs into homes. It crawls on the floors and ceilings and on all things in the house thus depositing these germs. They often get on the food and when this food is eaten the germs are carried into the system.

It is very necessary that the fly be exterminated.—It seems almost impossible to do this but they can be checked to a great degree.

In the cities steps are taken to keep the streets and yards free from refuse. This affair is in charge of the city.

In homes the fly can be kept out by persistent effort. Screens on doors and windows are of great value in keeping flies out.

On the farm care should be exercised in cleaning the barns and all out buildings.

Literary Notes

Marriage as a Business Proposition.

A unique plan for putting married life on a business basis is outlined in the Woman's Home Companion for June. Says this magazine:

"The first matter to consider is the amount of assets available. This, of course, amounts to exactly what the outside world considers the services of the producing partner to be worth. This income must be divided to meet the various expenses of the business under a general classification as follows:

"First: General operating expense. This is the most important department of all, and includes food, servants, fuel, light, rent (or interest and taxes.)

"Second: Sinking fund. This is also a most important account, and should not for any reason be overlooked. Upon it depends absolutely the prosperity of the firm through periods of financial depression. It includes savings-bank deposits and life-insurance premiums.

"Third: Repairs and depreciation. This is often considered a part of the operating expense, but it is better kept separate. It includes depreciation of the plant, and equipment, such as dishes, cooking-utensils, furniture, bed and table linen.

"Fourth: The Contingent Fund. This includes church dues, charities, theater-tickets, telephone and books and magazines.

"Fifth: Emergency Fund. This includes doctor, druggist and dentist.

"In order to transact business on a sound basis, all of these funds must be considered. What remains of the capital may be divided between the partners as a salary. From their salaries the partners must pay their personal expenses of clothing and incidentals. The size of the salaries therefore depends entirely upon the economical management of the affairs of the firm. It is unwise to raise salaries at the expense of the sinking fund, though this is often a temptation. In case the partners feel that their salaries are not large enough, it is better to appoint an investigating committee to eliminate petty graft and extravagance. They should examine carefully the operating expense. It is sometimes economical for a domestic firm to build its own plant, instead of hiring one, and it is often possible, by engaging in outside industry, such as kitchen-gardening or poultry raising, to reduce the food expense, and save money in the emergency fund."

Got What He Could.

The great specialist's patient, after many weeks of treatment, had at last been declared cured of an "incurable" disease, and with a grateful feeling he asked the physician the amount of his bill:

"That depends, my dear sir," said the specialist. "Whenever I treat a man I always make it a point to determine his occupation and how large a family he has to support. Then I make out my bill accordingly. May I ask what you do for a living?"

"I am a poet," replied the patient soulfully.

"In that case," said the physician, "if you will give me the money in cash now, I'll be a dollar and a half."—Judge.

The Fate of Foglio.

What is said to be the most extraordinary feat of criminal vengeance on record happened at Algiers in 1800. A man named Foglio was arrested by the French police at the instance of the Italian government. He was suspected of complicity in a Sicilian murder crime, and it was known that he was a member of the Mafia. In jail he weakened and promised to tell the whole story on condition that his life was spared. Two mornings later his jailer, visiting the cell, found Foglio on the floor, stabbed to the heart. The dagger was still in the wound, and on the body lay a scrap of paper with the words, "So perish traitors," in Italian. To this day the mystery of that death wound has never been solved.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Anti-Cigaret Day in Sunday School.

Following the suggestion of our national superintendent of the department of Anti-Narcotics, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, and in accordance with the appointment of the International Sunday School association, we will observe the next quarterly Temperance Sunday as Anti-Cigaret day. The date is June 27, and Sunday school workers would do well to begin at once to plan for the day.

Announcement of the day may be made through our department circular, entitled "Anti-Cigaret Day," which also suggests some plans for observing the day and gives a list of programs and helps to be obtained. This information would be gratefully received by Sunday school superintendents and the temperance department superintents, as well as our own W. C. T. U. workers.

We suggest the plan so successfully carried out in southern California and some other states, viz: Each Sunday school prepares a short anti-cigaret program which is given during the Sunday school hour. Then, in the afternoon, several schools unite in a grand anti-cigaret rally, the program of which shall be a repetition in turn of the programs given by the several schools in the morning. To make this plan most interesting a prize can be offered for the best program and awarded according to the decision of competent judges.

A prize essay contest on "Why sign the pledge against tobacco," would also be an excellent method of enlisting all the Sunday schools. The usual plan of an essay contest is adapted to the Sunday school as well as to the day school. For those who desire a special program for an anti-cigaret rally we have a new and attractive program, entitled "Old Glory in Peril." As the title suggests, it has a touch of patriotism which is suitable and timely, as it is the nearest Sunday to the Fourth of July, the day on which we also try to emphasize Christian patriotism. The above program has an exercise which may also be used in the Sunday school. Other new material prepared for Anti-Cigaret Day is: A responsive reading, entitled "Dangerous Habits," for use in the opening exercises of the Sunday school; an anti-cigaret song, entitled, "Dare to be Free"; an illustrated anti cigaret talk for primary and junior workers; three new gem leaflets,—storiettes for children; two illustrated anti-cigaret envelope leaflets, entitled respectively, "Follow Me" (the Cigaret Captain, and telling where he will lead); "How it Grows" (the "Cigaret-Habit" tree). The latter will be useful for a chalk-talk. The memory text-card is desirable for primary and junior grades.

The Quarterly Budget now goes to many superintendents of Sunday schools as the gift of the W. C. T. U. As a result a large number of subscriptions for the year have been received from pastors and Sunday school workers. The Budget for June Temperance Sunday is distinctively anti-cigaret, though it will also contain suitable helps for schools not desiring to observe Anti-Cigaret Sunday.

The Quarterly Temperance Lesson Leaflet gives cigaret facts as well as a presentation of the temperance teaching points of the lesson which is found in Romans 13:8-14.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75c.

A Monument to a Horse.

There are some very curious monuments to animals scattered over the countryside. The one with the most remarkable story crowns Farley mount, near Winchester. Underneath it lies buried, as an inscription on the exterior records, "A horse, the property of Paulet St. John, Esq., that in the month of September, 1733, leaped into a chalk pit twenty-five feet deep a-fox hunting, with his master on his back, and in October, 1734, won the Hunters' plate on Worthing downs and was rode by his owner and entered in the name of Beware Chalk Pit." This inscription, which is a copy of the original, was restored by the Right Hon. Sir William Heathcote, Bart., in 1870. A duplicate is in the interior, which is provided with three seats intended for the accommodation of wayfarers.—Wide World Magazine.

CARE OF FEATHER BOAS.

How to Easily Curl and Keep Them In Good Condition.

"How do I manage to keep my feather boa in such good condition? I will tell you the secret of it," said a dressy little matron as she shook out the fascinating ruff she had taken from her neck. "I never think of putting it away in the good sized box in which I keep it, where the dust and dampness cannot reach it, without first shaking it out and seeing that it is perfectly dry. In winter I always hang it near a register, so the warm air will hasten the process a little without doing any harm. Then if I find the tiny plumes losing their curl I curl them a bit myself.

"There is a knack in doing that, and I will give you the benefit of the lesson that was taught me by a professional. I take a good sized calling card and cut a hole in it about an inch in diameter. I slip one end of the boa through this—oh, yes, it can be done—and then, taking a fruit knife, with the back of it I curl the parts of the boa that need attention, judging between those done and those not done. You will find it does not take nearly so long as you might think. Then, too, if you are called away from your task the card will tell you just how far you have gone with the work. Those that are curled have been pulled through the opening—all on the other side of the hole are yet to be attended to. It may, as I say, sound complicated and difficult, but it is really very simple and, as you can see for yourself, highly satisfactory."

A contributor has had the curiosity to look up Mr. J. H. Reid's "Burns Concordance" and measure the amount of space devoted to certain words. In the result he found that Burns uses the word "heart" more than any other, the quotations under this word filling no fewer than six of the closely printed columns. "Lass," "friend" and "heaven" come next, each having about two columns.—Glasgow News.

THE CAPTAIN OF the KANSAS

By LOUIS TRACY,

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY EDWARD J. CLODE

CHAPTER VI—Continued.

With this Parthian shaft of humor he vanished toward the forecastle whence the ubiquitous donkey boiler through one of its long arms would shoot forth the stockless anchors at the touch of a lever. Tollemache, who had already glimpsed the coast, strolled out on deck and bent well over the side in order to look more directly ahead. He could see one-half only of the view, but that sufficed.

"A respite," he growled to himself—"penal servitude instead of sudden death."

And indeed this was the true aspect of things as Courtenay discovered when he had successfully brought the ship past three ugly reefs and dropped anchor in the lackwater of a small sheltered bay. He speedily abandoned the half formed hope that the Kansas might have run into an ocean waterway which communicated with Smyth channel. The rampart of snow clad hills had no break, while a hasty scrutiny of the chart showed him that the eastern coast of Hanover Island had been thoroughly surveyed. Yet it was not in human nature that he should not experience a rush of joy at the thought that by his own efforts he had saved his ship and some at least of the lives intrusted to his care. He was alone when the muzzle of the alpaca in the hawse pipes sounded in his ears. The Kansas had plenty of room to swing, but he thought it best to moor her. Believing implicitly now that he would yet bring his vessel into the Thames, he allowed her to be carried round by the fast flowing tide until her nose pointed seaward and she lay in the comparatively still water inshore. Then he dropped the second anchor and stepped forth from the chart house. His long vigil was ended. Some of the cloud of care lifted from his face, and he called cheerily to Joey.

"Come along, pup," he said. "Let us smuggle Mr. Christobal's cookery. You have shared my watch; now you shall my breakfast. We have both earned it."

It was in his mind to knock loudly on Elsie's door and awaken her. Therefore he was dimly conscious of a feeling of disappointment when he saw her in company with Christobal leaning over the rail of the promenade deck and evidently discussing the weird beauty of the scene spread before her wondering eyes. They heard Courtenay's approaching footsteps almost as soon as he gained the deck.

Instantly she ran toward him, with hands outstretched.

"Let me be the first to congratulate you!" she cried, her cheeks mantling with a rush of color and her lips quivering with excitement. "How wonderful of you to bring the ship through all those awful reefs and things! No; you must not say you have done nothing marvelous. Dr. Christobal has told me everything. Next to Providence, Captain Courtenay, we owe our lives to you."

Courtenay felt it would hurt her were he to smile at her earnestness. But he did say:

"Surely it is not so very remarkable that I should do my best to safeguard the ship and such of her passengers and crew as survive last night's ordeal."

"I shall never understand how I came to fall asleep," said Elsie. "I remember feeling very tired. I sat down for a moment, and that ended it. The next thing I heard was a rapping on my door and Dr. Christobal's voice bidding me hurry if I would see the entrance to the harbor."

The two men exchanged glances. Courtenay laughed so pleasantly that it was good to hear.

"Yet there was I up aloft, maneuvering the ship in the firm faith that Dr. Christobal was busy in the cook's galley," said he.

"Ah, we have news for you!" cried Elsie. "One of the poor fellows who was knocked on the head during that terrible fight for the boats was the master cook himself. He is better now, and breakfast can be ready in five minutes. I'll go and tell him."

She ran off, and Joey scampered by her side, for he knew quite well where the kitchen lay.

"Bromide is useful at times," murmured Christobal, watching Elsie until she had disappeared. Then he turned to Courtenay.

"I suppose you have seen nothing of the boats?"

"No sign whatever. And I could hardly have missed them if they were here. They may have escaped, but I doubt it. The sea ran very high for a time, and the Kansas scraped past so many reefs that it was almost impossible for each of the three boats to have done the same."

"Even if one or more of them reached land there is small likelihood that they would turn up in this particular bay?"

"That is true, especially if they used their sails. The Chileans who got away in the lifeboats would know sufficient of the coast to make a northerly course, while my parting instructions to Malcolm were to keep to the north all the time."

"I wish now that poor Isobel Barling and the others had not left us," said Christobal sadly.

Courtenay was about to say something, but checked himself. He was not blind to the aspect of affairs which Tollemache had summarized so pithily. It might yet be that those who remained had more to endure. Then Elsie summoned them to breakfast, which was served on deck, as the saloon had been temporarily converted into a hospital.

Before sitting down Courtenay paid a brief visit to Mr. Boyle. Christobal had bidden him not to allow the wounded mate to talk too much, complete rest for a few hours being essential. But Boyle's pallid face lit up so brightly when the captain stood by his side that it was hard not to indulge him to some extent.

"Huh," he said, his gruff voice strong as ever, "Christobal was not humbugging me when he assured me you were all right. Where are we?"

"In a small bay on the east of Hanover island. I have not taken any observations yet, and there is no hurry, old chap. You'll be out and about long before we leave again."

Boyle studied and closed his eyes.

"I heard the anchors go, and then I knew that all was well. You're the luckiest skipper afloat. Huh, the bloomin' Kansas was lost not once, but twenty times."

"Are you in pain, Boyle?" asked Courtenay, placing a gentle hand on his friend's forehead.

"Not much. More stiff than sore. It was a knockout blow of its kind. I can just recall you hauling me out of the scrimmage and"—

"It will be your turn to do as much for me next time. Try to go to sleep. We'll have you on deck tomorrow."

Courtenay noticed that there were only four other sufferers in the saloon. Three were firemen injured by the explosion. He had a pleasant word for each of them. The fourth was a sailor, either asleep or unconscious, and Courtenay thought he recognized a severe bruise on the man's left temple where the butt of his revolver had struck hard.

When he returned on deck he learned that two other members of the crew, in addition to the cook, were able to work. Walker had set one to clear up the stokehold. His companion, a fireman, had relieved Mr. Tollemache. Indeed, the latter had gone to his cabin and was the last to arrive at the feast, finally putting in an appearance in a new suit and spotless linen.

Christobal protested loudly.

"I thought this was to be a workers' meal," he said. "Tollemache has stolen a march on us. He is quite a Bond street lounger in appearance."

"Dirty job stoking," said Tollemache.

"I seem to have been the only lazy person on board during the night!" cried Elsie.

"Do you know what time it is?" asked Courtenay.

"No; about 10 o'clock, I fancy."

"It is not yet half past 4."

The blue eyes opened wide. "Are you in earnest?" she demanded.

He showed her his watch. Scarce four hours had elapsed since she had waited in the captain's cabin, amid the drenching spray and tearing wind, while he took Isobel and Mrs. Somerville and the shrieking maid to the boat. The corners of her mouth drooped, and tears trembled on her eyelashes. She sought furtively for a handkerchief. Knowing exactly what troubled her, Courtenay turned to Christobal.

"Are you in pain, Boyle?" asked Courtenay.

"This island ought to be inhabited," he said. "Can you tell me what sort of Indians one finds in this locality?"

Christobal frowned perplexedly. "I fear I do not know much about them," he said. "Behold those hills there one sees a few canoe Indians. I have heard that they are somewhat lower in the social scale than the aborigines of Australia."

"Are they?" said Courtenay. He looked Christobal straight in the eyes, and the doctor returned his gaze as steadily.

"That is their repute. They live mostly on shellfish. They do not congregate in communities. A few families keep together and move constantly from place to place."

"They are called the Alaculof. They use bows and arrows with heads chipped out of stone or bottle glass," put in Tollemache.

"Oh, you have been in these parts before?" cried Courtenay, regarding his companion with some interest, while the Spaniard surveyed his rival doubtfully.

"Yes; was on the Emu, wrecked in Cocklarn channel."

Now, the story of the Emu is one of those fierce tragedies which the sea first puts on the stage of life with dire skill and then proceeds to destroy the slightest vestige of their brief existence. But such things leave dibbling memories in men's souls, and Courtenay had heard how twenty-seven survivors out of a muster roll of thirty who escaped from the wreck had been shot down by Indians untinished in the forest. Elsie was listening to the conversation, so the captain did not carry it further, contenting himself with the remark:

"That will be useful if we are compelled to go ashore. You will have some acquaintance with the ways of our hosts."

Tollemache having nothing to say, was not given to the use of unnecessary words. Elsie was conscious of a certain constraint in their talk.

"Please don't mind me," she said quietly. "I know all about the loss of the Emu. If we fall into the hands of the Alaculof tribe we shall be not only killed, but eaten."

Each of the men admired her coolness, but Tollemache, who had been quietly scrutinizing the nearer hills, gave painful emphasis to this grewsome topic by exclaiming:

"There they are now—smoke signals!"

Sure enough, thin columns of smoke were rising from several points on the land. It could not be doubted that these were caused by human agency. They were not visible when the party sat down to breakfast. The appearance of the ship was their obvious explanation, but not a canoe or a solitary figure could be seen, though Courtenay and others at various times during the day searched every part of the neighboring shore with field glasses and powerful telescopes.

After an all too brief burst of sunshine the Land of Storms again justified its name. Giant clouds came rolling in from seaward; the mountains were lost in mist; the glaciers became sullen, rock strewn masses of white brown ice; the fresh greenery of the forests faded into somber belts of blackness. Though it was high summer in this desolate region, heavy showers of hail and sleet alternated with drenching rain. At low water, though the Kansas floated securely in a depth of twenty fathoms, a yellow current sweeping past her starboard quarter showed how accurately Courtenay had read the tokens of the inlet. Many a swollen torrent and perhaps one or two fair sized streams at the head of the bay contributed this flood of fresh water.

To Elsie and the doctor were intrusted the daylight watch on deck and the care of the sick. For the latter there was not much to be done. The cook undertook to feed them, and Frascuelo, the wounded stevedore who had been discovered in a state of collapse, soon revived and was practically able to look after himself. The others, under Walker's directions, were hard at work in the engine room and stokehold, for there alone lay the chance of ultimate escape.

The two sentinels conversed but little. The outer war of the elements was disturbing, and Christobal, though unfailingly optimistic in his speech, was nevertheless a prey to dark forebodings. Elsie, worn out by the strain of the preceding twenty-four hours and notwithstanding her brief sleep in the morning thoroughly exhausted for want of rest, was persuaded to retire early to her cabin. She lay down almost fully dressed. Somehow it was impossible to think of a state of unpreparedness for any emergency.

She was soon sound asleep. She awoke with a start, with all her nerves a-quiver. Joey was tearing along the deck, barking furiously. She heard two men run past her door with ominous haste. Then, after a heart breaking pause, there was some shooting. Some one—she thought it was Courtenay—roared down the saloon companion:

"On deck, all hands, to repel boarders!"

With a confused rush, men mounted the stairs and raced forward. She knew that nearly all of those not on watch were sleeping with the injured men in the saloon, and now she understood the reason. The ship was being attacked by Indians and not altogether unexpectedly. The savages had stolen alongside in their canoes under the cloak of night. Perhaps they were already on board in overwhelming numbers. Poor girl! She murmured a prayer while she hurriedly drew on her boots and ulster.

There seemed to be no end to the evils which assailed the Kansas, and she dreaded this new terror more than the mad fury of the seas. But if the men were fighting for their lives and hers she must help too. That was clear. She had a weapon, a loaded revolver, which she had picked up from beneath a boat's tarpaulin lying on the spar deck. She opened her door and peered out. She could not see any one, and the rattle of a hailstorm overhead effectually dulled any other noise. But several shots fired again in the fore part of the ship were audible above the din of the pelting hail. So she ran that way, with the fine courage of one who fears, yet goes on, and her eyes pierced the shadows with a keener despair in them, for what could so few men do against the unseen watchers who sent up the thirty-four smoke columns she had counted?

CHAPTER IX.

QUICKLY as Elsie had reached the deck, the warlike sounds which disturbed her rest had ceased. Save for the footsteps of men whom she could not see, the prevalent noises were caused only by wind and sleet. While she was hurrying forward as rapidly as the darkness permitted, the lights were switched on with a suddenness that made her gasp. The dog began to bark again, but it was easy to distinguish his sharp yelps of excitement and defiance from the earlier notes of alarmed suspicion. In fact, Joey himself was the first to discover the stealthy approach of the Indians. Courtenay and Tollemache, who took the middle watch, from midnight to 4 a. m., had failed to note the presence of several canoes on the ink black surface of the bay until the dog warned them by growling and ruffling the bristles on his back. The night was pitch dark. The moon was not only hidden by the hills of the island, but frequent storms of rain and hail rendered it impossible while they raged to see or hear beyond the distance of a few feet.

In all probability as the canoes bore down from windward Joey had scented them. He also gave the highly important information as to the quarter from which attack might be expected. Three men at least had gained the deck, but the prompt use of a revolver had caused them to retreat as silently and speedily as they had appeared. That was all. There was no actual fight. The phantoms vanished as silently as they came. The only external lights on the ship were the masthead and side lights hoisted by Courtenay to reveal the steamer's where abouts in case one of the boats chanced to be driven into the bay during the dark hours. There was an electric lamp turned on in the donkey engine room and another in the main saloon, but means were taken to exclude them from showing without. If the Indians meant to be actively hostile, lights on board would be more helpful to the assailants than to the assailed.

When the captain and Tollemache followed Joey's lead, they discerned three demoniac figures vaguely outlined by the ruddy glare of the port light in the very act of climbing the rails. They fired instantly, and the naked forms vanished. Both men thought they heard the splashing caused by the leaping or falling of the Indians into the sea. By the same satisfactory radiance Courtenay made out the top of a pole or mast sticking up close to the ship's side. He leaned over, fired a couple of shots downward at random, seized the pole and lashed it to a stanchion with a loose rope end, a remnant of one of the awnings. A small craft, even an Indian canoe, would be most useful, and its capture might lead to scare the attackers.

Telling Tollemache to mount guard, he raced back to the saloon hatch and

The damage is reported as light. Stoves were toppled over and small fires started in some cases, furniture, etc., was upset and dishes rattled and broken. No injuries or loss of life is reported.

The state oil inspector calls attention to accidents of a serious nature that are happening as a result of pouring gasoline in tubs of hot water for washing purposes. Gasoline emits a highly explosive vapor at 70 degrees temperature, the heat of an ordinary room. In a tub of hot water the vapor is correspondingly increased. The room is at once filled with gas and is quickly exploded from any artificial light (electric excepted,) stove or heater in the room and the result is usually serious injury to life and property.

As there has been quite a number of inquiries as to when the new laws passed by the recent legislature will go into effect it might be well to state that the new constitution provides that all acts except appropriation bills and those which pertain to emergences and public safety become effective 90 days after the adjournment of the legislature. This will put all the new enactments in force on August 21 of this years.

The census shows that in 1887 the total number of divorces granted in the United States was 27,918 and in 1906, 72,062. The total number granted in twenty years was 945,625. Certain of the states granted divorces as follows: Pennsylvania, in 1887, 1,007, and in 1906, 3,027; New York, in 1887, 1,012, and in 1906, 2,069; North Dakota, in 1887, 57, and in 1906, 320; Ohio, in 1887, 2,003, and in 1906, 1,871; Kentucky, in 1887, 909, and in 1906, 2,050; Illinois, in 1887, 2,983, and in 1906, 5,913; Massachusetts, in 1887, 752, and in 1906, 1,540; and Virginia, in 1887, 305, and in 1906, 1,971.

Without waiting for the formality of an election the village of Grawn, Grand Traverse county, has quietly ousted its two saloons. The saloons quit business May 1, their bonds not having been approved and in the month that has passed, two soda fountains have replaced the thirst parlors. The villagers seem to be perfectly satisfied and the fountains are doing a much larger business, it is said, than the saloons did.

As a preliminary to the most expensive publicity campaign this state has known the West Michigan Development association has secured an exhibit space of 1,500 square feet at the Land congress to be held at the Coliseum in Chicago next November and an arrangement has been made with a newspaper association for the preparation of many pages of "plate matter" which will be issued to the smaller newspapers throughout the state, setting forth in picture and story the advantages of Western Michigan. A fund of $10,000 will be raised for the publicity work.

The only changes made in the game laws at the session of the legislature just closed, was to protect black bass from February 1 to June 15, limit size to not less than 10 inches and allows not more than ten to be caught in one day. All dams must be equipped with suitable fish shutes. Protects all fur-bearing animals from April 1 to October 31. Trout season was changed to May 1 to September 1.

CLEANING THE HARNESS.

Method of a Horseman For Making the Leather Look Like New.

Nearly all farmers, liverymen and other concerns that use harness have as many ways of cleaning the same, but in my experience of thirty years and trying various ways the following is the best and will keep the leather free from gumming, writes a horseman in the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.

Harness should be thoroughly cleaned once a year and oiled, preferably in the spring. Take the harness all apart and soak the parts in a washtub of lukewarm water, with a handful of washing soda in it. Let the harness soak for fifteen or twenty minutes, then scrub the parts with an ordinary scrubbing brush on a board.

When the leather is nearly dry use edge blacking. Get half a gallon from any harness maker. If you cannot get it, then take half a gallon of vinegar and put 4 keyes of iron in it for three or four days until the fluid is a deep golden color.

Give the leather a good coat of the fluid. When it dries blue take a cotton cloth and rub the harness thoroughly, after which take a quart of neatsfoot oil and half a pint of kerosene. Mix and warm and then give the leather two coats, using the oil freely. When the oil has dried in thoroughly sponge with white castile soap. Use the imported soap, as the domestic has not the right kind of oil in it.

Harness treated in this way can be made to look like new by running a harness maker's pricking wheel over the stitching. Harness can then be kept looking well by going over it frequently with the castile soap and sponge.

ROUND BARNS.

Some of the Advantages Claimed For These Structures.

While round barns are not numerous in this country, those who own them claim they have many advantages over the square ones. The illustration, from the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago, shows a round barn on a successful Vermont dairy farm. The barn is ninety feet in diameter, having stanchions on the ground floor for about seventy-five head.

A round silo holding nearly 400 tons extends from the ground to the roof under the cupola. There are no crossbeams except those supporting the floor above the cows, so nothing is in the way when storing hay.

The separator and power room is located behind the inclined road leading to the upper doors. Economy of lumber and convenience in feeding are claimed for this style of barn.

A Washington dairyman who has erected a round barn says of it: "The advantages I find in a round barn are many. The main ones are, first, economy of labor in getting feed to the cows; second, 40 per cent more space for material required; third, a more equal division of light, and, fourth, a more uniform temperature and purity of atmosphere, and last, but not least, a round barn is the only one that is tornado proof.

"Any one who contemplates building a round barn should secure the service of a good builder who has built a round barn before or one who is familiar with higher mathematics as applied to building."

Tubercular Cows.

The presence of tuberculosis is generally considered as something that will only impair the value and healthfulness of milk and cream. Dairymen seem not to have recognized the fact that tuberculosis shortens the life of the cow and reduces the profits in proportion to standing of disease. A tubercular cow cannot be made an economical or an abundant producer. This is a point upon which dairymen may well give attention. To protect himself against tuberculosis the dairyman must protect others. The obligation of one man to another will not justify the maintenance of tubercular cows.

When Inbreeding Is Practiced.

If inbreeding is to be practiced it would be better to use only a part of the herd. Then if the results are not what are looked for the rest of the herd remains to carry on the former line of breeding. The breeding herd is a swift moving tide of life, and the character of the entire herd will change in five years, although individuals live for years. If one entire season is a failure it leaves a gap which is hard to fill.—P. A. Campbell, University of Maine.

Anthem Titles.

A certain Edinburgh organist, who "posts up" his Sunday service lists at the church door, had recently a very practical illustration of the risks that may attend the shortening of anthem titles. The late Dr. E. J. Hopkins of the City temple wrote an anthem, "I Will Wash My Hands in Innocency."

The organist in his haste no doubt set this down as "I Will Wash—Hopkins," and was surprised when next day some wag sent him a cake of soap "to help wash Hopkins!"—Glasgow News.

THE SHEPHERD.

Have a hospital pen where the sheep that give evidence of being sick can be isolated and treated. Many a contagious disease can in this way be kept from spreading in a flock.

Woven Wire Best For Fence.

Fences for sheep should not be less than three feet high, with just every sixteen feet, and preferably of woven wire with a single barbed wire at the top. Barbed wire is apt to cause the loss of wool, because sheep when in full fleece are frequently crowded through, especially if the wires are not stretched tightly.

Facts About Sheep.

From records kept at the Wisconsin experiment station of 240 ewes covering a period of five years the following conclusions were drawn:

Shropshire ewes appear to be more prolific than any other breed. Ewes six years old produce the largest percentage of increase, while young ewes have the greater percentage of single lambs. The percentage of ram lambs increases and the percentage of ewe lambs decreases as the age of the ewe advances. A ram is at his best at two or three years of age. The age of the ram does not have any effect on the sex of the offspring. Ram lambs average about one-half pound heavier at birth than ewe lambs. The larger the ewe the greater the percentage of increase, while the ram has no effect on the lambs in this respect.

Feeding Sheep.

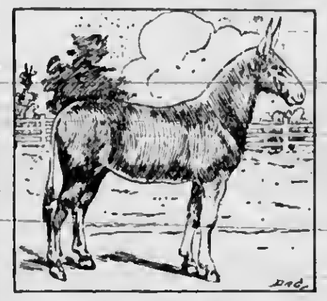
It is always advisable in feeding sheep not to feed too much corn. Clover, hay and corn in equal parts by weight should be given during the fattening period. Except for fattening purposes it is better not to feed sheep on corn at all. Corn is said to contain about 60 per cent of starch and 6 per cent of oil, both being very digestible. Oil makes fat, and the starch produces heat and also fat. On account of its heat producing power it is inadvisable to feed corn. Because of there not being any great quantity of protein in corn it is necessary to feed something else with it, either clover or alfalfa.

SELECTING A JACK.

Points to Be Considered In Purchasing a Well Bred Animal.

The high prices which have prevailed for some time in the mule market have prompted many farmers to look into the subject with a view to turning their attention to the production of this valuable draft animal. Considering the perplexities connected with the purchase of jacks, the following suggestions from a Missouri breeder cannot be otherwise than interesting and valuable:

"I wish to call the attention of all those in the market for a jack to some pertinent facts regarding the purchase of such an animal for breeding purposes. My experience covers an extended period in the business, and I therefore feel qualified to speak. A jack under fourteen hands high cannot be registered. It is also important to see that the color is black and that the points are white, as, if the animal answers to any other description, he is ineligible to registry. The buyer who would be discriminating in the selection of a jack should carefully look over his conformation and give special attention to his underpinning. He should have a good hoof and a wide heel, and it is always well to look for big bone, heavy head and ears.



A WELL BRED JACK.

Besides this, the buyer should assure himself that the animal is a proved breeder. When you have secured these points in an animal you can be pretty sure of getting your money's worth.

"As in all lines, there are tricks which every man who starts out to buy a jack should know in order to protect himself from being made the object of untrustworthy dealers. Ordinarily it is a very easy matter to swindle the average jack buyer, as nine out of ten who are out to purchase know nothing about the requirements of a good animal, and invariably they are taken advantage of. There are a good many breeders in the business who are practicing the policy of selling direct to the buyer instead of letting their productions go to the large cities and there be retailed out to buyers from different parts of the country. This plan of buying direct from the breeder has every advantage, and I would recommend it strongly. There are a good many things regarding the purchase of a jack which cannot be explained on paper, and therefore the buyer who would get the most worth of his money should use some discrimination in the choice of those whom he patronizes."

Lack of Water Lessens Milk Flow.

Don't let the cows shift for themselves in the matter of water. They must have all they want of such a temperature as will induce them to drink enough to supply their needs. Many a cow "falls down" in her milk production because she is starving for water, the water being either difficult of access or too cold to be palatable.

Honesty is the best policy, although it may have the deferred dividend clause attached.—Judge.

CARE OF FROCKS AND WAISTS

How to Keep Them Clean and Tidy With Little Trouble.

Don't in the interest of cleanliness turn your frocks inside out before hanging them away. As the outside is looser than the lining, this method of hanging prolongs crease and quickly rights the set of the skirt.

If the gown is very delicate in color, put the skirt on a hanger and inclose it in a bag of blue muslin. Take care that the bag hangs from the hanger and not from the skirt itself, as the weight may wrinkle it.

If a sachet is attached to the hanger the skirt is pleasantly scented.

Waists may either be hung in bags or, preferably, should be laid in boxes or bureau drawers, with each bow stuffed with tissue paper and the sleeves also filled with it. Cover the waists with blue muslin and, if possible, do not put another waist directly on top of an under one. With a little contriving this can be managed by overlapping them so the rushable parts are free.

See that all spots are covered with French chalk before boxing or putting away and that all necessary stitches are taken. This may take three when one is tired, but it prevents at the end of the day which is a hurry to wear the frock again. The chalk can be easily shaken out when the gown is brushed, it has a wonderfully cleansing effect, with little trouble.

How to Keep White Hair White.

There is nothing more beautiful and soft than snowy white hair. If it is snowy, but if it is yellow and streaked it is far from pretty. Some women who have never been considered more than passably good looking are decidedly pretty after their hair turns white, and for this reason, if for no other, too much cannot be said against dyeing one's locks. White hair is becoming to almost all women, and when well groomed it is a thing of loveliness.

Hair tonics containing glycerin are likely to discolor the snowy strands. Eggs make an excellent shampoo for silver tresses, and a little ordinary wash bluing should be added to the last water that the hair is rinsed in. An excellent shampoo that is preferred by many white haired people is made by dissolving an ordinary cake of castile soap in a quart of water and allowing it to boil down to a pint. When it is cool add one pint of bay rum, one tablespoonful of borax and thirty grains of bisulphate of quinine. This not only is cleansing, but the borax and quinine make it a tonic benefit to scalp and hair.

How to Wash White Silk.

If one desires snowy whiteness, silk should never be allowed to become badly soiled—that is, so that the silk is yellow. Dust the garment and wash in rather warm, not scalding hot, water with white soap. Rinse well, the last water being quite blue. Hang up and allow to get just dry enough to press nicely with a warm iron. If this is followed out, white silk will stay white. Care must be taken with the blue water not to have it too blue and get blue enough to help the silk retain the "crow" shade. Should silk merely need sponging, no iron should touch the surface. If rolled while damp on a broomstick, it will dry in a day or so. When there are grease spots, apply the time honored remedy, powdered magnesia, to the wrong side under a cold pressure, then after some hours rub off, and if the silk is not wholly cleansed apply again.

How to Keep the Neck Pretty.

To keep the neck pretty one should be very particular about her collars, for tight collars bring on endless ills from a beauty standpoint and a dark line very difficult to remove, to say nothing of the headaches and flushed faces. To remove the dark collar line about the throat apply peroxide of hydrogen with a bit of absorbent cotton. Dab it on at night after thoroughly washing the neck. Leave it on all night, then wash off in the morning. Repeat this treatment until the stain disappears. Another way to get rid of the unsightly collar line is to rub cold cream well into the throat and allow it to stay on all night. In the morning bathe with cold water and use a good soap.

How to Clean Furs.

The fur pieces that are badly soiled can be cleaned by heating salt and cornmeal in a dishpan until it is warm to the touch, rubbing this through the fur. When brushed out the pieces will be free from dust. If the lost lining is greasy rub the satin part with a sponge dipped in any liquid cleaner. White fur can be cleaned with flour and salt. Often the skin can be beautifully cleaned by merely covering it with dampened fuller's earth, leaving it on the satin until it is dry enough to be brushed off. Do not use water to clean it or it will shrivel the hide.

How to Iron Embroidered Collars.

When ironing stocks for the neck or embroidered linen collars iron them on a thick towel which has been folded three or four times and laid on the board. Stocks ironed in this manner will appear like new, and if you iron the embroidered linen collars on the wrong side on this folded towel the embroidery pattern will stand out in bold relief.

How to Wash Handkerchiefs Easily.

To wash handkerchiefs easily place the handkerchiefs to soak overnight in salt water that is so strong it is nearly a brine. In the morning lift the handkerchiefs out with a slick and rinse in warm water, after which it will be an task to wash them in the usual way.

IN CASE OF A FIRE.

How to Gather Up and Save Household Goods.

Having had experience in several fires, the writer of the following article has learned many things that would be well for every one to remember when a house is on fire. Be sure no child or pet animal is shut in any room. Save, first of all, the money and valuable papers unless they are in a fireproof safe. Next in importance is the wearing apparel. The easiest way to save it is to tie up bundles of clothes in the quilts from the beds. Empty the closets and bureau drawers in this way. It is quickly done, and the bundles are convenient to carry. In each bundle some breakable object, such as a clock, mirror or picture, may be placed and will usually escape unbroken. Empty satchels and bags are handy to gather up the silver in, and if the keys happen to be with them so much the better.

If you have valuable bric-a-brac, take a clothes hamper or basket into the parlor and pack the delicate things between the cushions that are always plentiful about the house. Choice bits of cut glass or china may be hastily packed in a basket between tablecloths and napkins. Pillows, mattresses and rugs can be thrown from the upper windows and carried away by those below, thus saving time. Books are difficult to save on account of their weight unless you are so fortunate as to have sectional bookcases, when two careful people can carry them out unharmed.

How to Make Columbia Cake.

To make a Columbia cake, mix in the usual way four ounces of butter, one pound loaf sugar, three-quarters pound of flour, a cupful of milk, three eggs, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar and half a teaspoonful of carbonate of soda and then divide the mixture into two portions. Divide one part again into two portions and bake in two shallow round tins. Add to the other half a cupful of raisins, seeded and chopped, a tablespoonful of golden syrup or good molasses if procurable, one-quarter pound citron and one teaspoonful each of cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg and allspice and an additional spoonful of flour. When well mixed pour into a round buttered tin the same size as the others and bake. The plain portions will require about fifteen minutes in a fairly hot oven and the fruit portion a few minutes longer. When all are done and while still hot, place the fruit cake between the two plain layers, spreading a little currant jelly on the top of each. When cold cover with white icing and ornament according to taste.

Convict Labor In Building of Roads.

At a recent meeting of the national good roads board, held in New York city, Senator C. T. Lassiter of Virginia outlined the method of building roads with convicts in the Old Dominion. C. Gordon Neff, the chairman of the board, has decided to make a canvass of the entire United States to find out which states employ convicts in the building of roads. This will be followed up later with an effort to get other states to use convict labor in road building. There is a general movement to abolish convict labor in lines of the industry where it interferes with organized labor, but in no section of the country does organized labor object to the use of convicts in the building of good roads.

summoned assistance. The others searched the ship in small detachments, but the Indians were gone. It was manifest that none beyond those driven off at the first onset had secured a footing on deck. Then, taking the risk of being shot at, Courtenay ordered the lights to be turned on, and the first person he saw clearly was Elsie. He was almost genuinely angry with her.

"What are you doing here?" he demanded.

She was learning not to fear his brusque ways. He was no carpet knight, and men who carry their lives in their hands do not pick and choose their words.

"I thought you were in danger, so I came to help," she said calmly.

"You must go back to your cabin at once."

"Why? Of what avail is the safety of my cabin if you are killed?"

A woman's logic is apt to be irritating when one expects a flight of arrows or, it may be, a gunshot out of the blackness a few feet away.

"For goodness' sake, stand here, then!" he cried, seizing her arm and compelling her to shelter behind the heavy molding which carried the bridge. Then he quitted her for a moment in order to dispatch a Chilean sailor for a lantern and a long cord. He wished to investigate the captured canoe.

The lantern was brought. Courtenay stood on the lowermost rail and carefully paid out a rope to which the light was slung. He was far too brave a man to take undue risks. He was ready to shoot instantly if need be, and by his instructions Tollemache and Walker kept watch as best they could in case other canoes were lying close to the ship.

Any doubt in this regard was dispelled in a singular manner. The flickering rays of the lantern had barely revealed the primitive craft lying alongside when a voice came from the depths, crying in broken Spanish:

"Don't shoot, senors! Spare me, for the love of heaven! I am a white man from Argentina!"

Christobal and Elsie alone understood the exact significance of the words. Courtenay of course knew what language was being spoken, and it was easy to guess the nature of the appeal. But the lantern showed that the canoe was empty. In the center lay the Fuegian fire, its embers covered with a small hide. The pole, fastened to a crosspiece in the thwarts, was not a mast, but had evidently been shipped in order to give speedy access to the deck by climbing.

Then Courtenay caught sight of two hands clinging to the stern of the canoe. He swung the lantern in that direction, and an extraordinary and even an affrighting object became visible. A caricature of a human head was raised slightly above the level of the water. It was crowned by a shock of coarse black knotted hair tied back from the brows by a fillet of white feathers. An intensely black face, crossed by two bars of red and white pigment, reaching from ear to ear and covering eyelids, nose and lips, was upturned to the watchers from the deck. The colors were vivid enough notwithstanding the sheets of rain which blew in gusts against the ship's side, dimming the dull light of a storm proof lamp, to convey a most uncanny effect. Nor did Courtenay remove either his eyes or the revolver while he said to Christobal:

"Ask him who he is and what he wants."

The answer was intelligible enough:

"I am a miner from Argentina. I have been among these Indians five years. When their attack failed I thought there was a chance of escape. For pity's sake, senor, help me instantly or I shall die from the cold."

"Have the Indians gone?" asked Christobal.

"Yes. They thought to surprise you. When they come again it will be by daylight, as they are afraid of the dark. But be quick, I implore you. My hands are numb."

There was no resisting the man's appeal. A rope ladder was lowered, and a Chilean sailor went down to obedience to the captain's order, though he disliked the job and crossed himself before descending. He passed a rope under the fugitive's armpits and with aid from the deck hoisted him aboard. The unfortunate miner gave proof of his wretched state by promptly collapsing in a faint, with a sigh of "Madre de Dios!"

His only garments were a species of waistcoat and rough trousers of untanned guanaco hide. The white skin of his breast and legs, though darkened by exposure, showed that he had told the truth as to his descent, notwithstanding the amazing daubs on his face. His hair, stiffened with black grease, stood out all around his head, and the same oily composition had been used to blacken his forehead, neck and hands.

Some brandy and hot water, combined with the warmth of the saloon, soon revived him. He ate a quantity of bread with the eagerness of a man suffering from starvation.

Christobal brought him to the chart house, where most of the others were assembled, and there questioned him.

It was a most astonishing story which Francisco Suarez, gold miner and prospector, laid before an exceedingly attentive audience. As the man spoke so did he recover the freer usage of a civilized tongue. At first his words held a hoarse, guttural sound, but Dr. Christobal's questions seemed to awaken dormant memories, and every one noticed, not least those who had small knowledge of Spanish, that he had practically recovered command of the language at the end of half an hour.

And this was what he told them: He, with three partners and a few Indians from the pampas, had set out on a gold prospecting expedition on the headwaters of the Gallegos river. They were disappointed in their search until they crossed the cordillera and sighted the gloomy shores of Last Hope inlet, leading into Smyth channel. There they found alluvial sand and gold bearing quartz, yielding but poor results. Unfortunately some natives assured them that the metal they sought abounded in Hanover island. They obtained canoes, voyaged down the long inlet, crossed the strait and struck inland toward the unknown mountains beyond the swamps of Ellen bay.

After enduring all the hardships entailed by life in such a wild country they blundered into a gully where a brief analysis of the detritus gave a result per ton which was not to be measured by ounces, but by pounds.

White men and Indians alike caught the fever. They accumulated a useless hoard, having no means to transport other than their own backs, and then, all precautions being relaxed, the nomad Indians, whom they despised, rushed the camp when they were sleeping. They were nearly all killed by stones shot from slings. Suarez was only stunned, and he and a Spaniard, with two Indians, were reserved for future slaughter.

"The others were eaten," he said, "and their bones were used for making fires. I saw my friend Giacomo felled like a bullock, and the Indians as well. By chance I was the last. I had no hope of escape. I was too downcast even to make a fight of it when, at the eleventh hour, the mad idea seized me that I might please and astonish my captors by performing a few sleight of hand tricks. Dios, how they gaped! They had never seen the like. All the tribe was summoned to watch me."

Then the poor fellow began to cry.

"Holy mother! Think of me playing the fool before those brutes! I became their medicine man. I fought and killed my only rival, and since then I have doctored a few of the chief men among them, so they took me into the tribe and always managed to procure me such food as I could eat. They gave me roots and dried meat when they themselves were living on putrid blubber or worse, because they kill all the old women as soon as famine threatens."

Courtenay broke in on the Spaniard's recital with a question of direct interest.

"Ask him, Christobal, why he said those devils would come again by daylight."

"Because they have guns and can use them," was the appalling answer given by Suarez. "They secured the rifles belonging to my party, and one of them who had often seen ship's officers shooting wild geese understood the method of loading and aiming. They will not waste the cartridges on game, but keep them for tribal warfare, and they think a gun cannot shoot in the dark. Tonight they only attempted a surprise and made off the moment they were discovered. Tomorrow or next day they will swarm round the ship in hundreds and fire at us with rifles, bows and slings. They do most harm with the slings and arrows, as they hold the gun away from the shoulder, but they can cast a heavy pebble from a sling quite as far and almost as straight as a revolver can shoot."

"How do they know the ship will not sail at once?" demanded Courtenay.

Suarez laughed hysterically with the mirth which is akin to tears when the query was explained to him. He looked bizarre enough under ordinary conditions, but laughter converted him into a fair semblance of one of those

ROAD WORK IN ENGLAND.

Method of Maintaining Highways and Filling Up Soft Spots.

It may interest many to learn how road maintenance is carried out in Great Britain and Ireland. All roads and bridges are under the direct charge of the county surveyor, who is in all cases a qualified civil engineer, with assistants under him to see to the detail work. He divides the roads of the county into sections, as seems best to him, for maintenance purposes. These several sections are advertised locally in the newspapers and by other means, and tids are invited for their maintenance for six or twelve months, says James Johnston of Douglas county, Neb., in the Breeder's Gazette of Chicago. These bids are opened on a certain day by a board of county commissioners, assisted by the county surveyor. The lowest bidder gets the work, but no bid is accepted until the successful bidder puts up a bond signed by two solvent sureties that the work will be performed. Should the contractor fail to do the work the county surveyor can have it done and sue the bondsmen for the work and costs. All bidders for this work have specifications of the work to be done on the several sections of road. How long the section is, how many tons of metal are to be broken and put on, cleaning, keeping the water tables clear and the grass off the road—all these are specified, so that he knows exactly what he has to do. The matter of putting on the metal is looked after very closely indeed. The contractor has to put all the material on the roadside. The surveyor or his assistant comes and measures it and then marks it with slaked lime, so that it cannot be interferred with until it is put on the road. Farmers are always the contractors for this work. The roads everywhere are always in good condition. There are many soft spots over there—bog and low lands, with rain every day and sometimes twenty-four hours at a time—but the heaviest autos can spin along the bog roads and in the rainiest weather with no damage to the road.

They have no difficulty with the soft bottoms in Ireland. They simply throw in rock, and the softer the spot the bigger the rocks, until they make it a hard spot and then put the small stuff on top. A mistake will surely be made if bricks are thrown into soft spots. They are simply no good for the purpose intended.

It is to be hoped that the people of the United States will stop spending time and wasting money in shoveling dirt into the soft spots, but will go to work like men of business and build roads.

NEW KIND OF ROAD MATERIAL

Salt and Alkali Scale From Boilers Used In Parts of Kansas.

The farmers in central Kansas as well as the people in the towns have been interested in good roads for several years, and in Ellsworth and its vicinity one can see almost any kind of a made road.

At one or two places in Ellsworth county there are short roads where treatment has been given similar to the pavement on Douglas avenue in Ellsworth. Here there are two blocks that fool four-fifths of the visitors to the town. The treatment of this street was commenced about two or three years ago, consisting of coarse and fine cinders in layers, then a covering surface of salt and alkali scale.

The water in this country is very hard, and in all the steam boilers at the salt mills and other factories a sort of alkali forms which must be removed frequently, and this, with the salt and alkali scale that forms in the salt pans, is used on Douglas avenue. It forms a hard crust and makes a most excellent street. It is a success on the most busy thoroughfare of Ellsworth, and if the supply was not so limited the farmers would use it for the rural roads and more of the streets of Ellsworth would be paved with it. The salt and alkali crust on Douglas avenue is now about three inches thick, and this lies on three inches of coarse cinders and three inches of fine cinders. It makes a pretty street, in appearance being like an asphalt pavement before it becomes dirty.

Cost of Oiling Roads.

A recently published report of the Boston park commission is interesting. In 1906 twelve miles of road were treated with oil to keep down the dust, and the result was so satisfactory that in 1907 the whole extent of more than forty miles was treated in this way. Mr. Putnam, the engineer, has carefully calculated the cost, and he says that the annual cost of sprinkling a thirty foot roadway was $189 a mile, whereas the cost of oiling the same roadway thirty feet wide was $375. In addition to laying the dust, the asphaltum in the oil had a binding effect on the surface of the road and very materially lessened the cost for repairs. The oil is put on in an emulsion in which fifteen pounds of soap dissolved in fifty gallons of water are mixed with a hundred gallons of crude oil, the whole being agitated to the proper point of emulsion, and then 150 gallons of this are mixed with 450 gallons of water and sprinkled on the roads. The plan has given the very best satisfaction in Boston and might be tried elsewhere with correspondingly satisfactory results.

If the Scot who has stayed at home cannot play the game of curling as well as his sons who have settled in Canada, what he lacks in skill is made up by love of the sport. Curling is of the Scot. It is ingrained in his nature, deeper than his religion or his financial interests. It has been known to make a Scotsman break the Sabbath and a dollar bill.—Canadian Courier.

A "Queer" Preacher.

Rev. Mr. Hargrove, to whose memory is a slab in the church at Catsbogo, Leicestershire, England, was "a little queer." It seems that the reverend gentleman died in January, 1886, leaving all of his property, valued at $3,500, to a railroad porter.

This queer old preacher kept one servant of each sex, whom he locked up every night. His last employment of an evening was to go the rounds of his premises, let loose the dogs and fire off his gun. He lost his life in a curious manner. Starting out to let out his servants, the dogs fawned upon him and threw him into a pond of water. The servants heard his cries, but, being locked up, could not render assistance, so the old man was drowned.

When the inventory of his property was taken, he was found to be the owner of 80 gowns, 100 pairs of trousers, 100 pairs of boots, 400 pairs of shoes, 80 wigs (although he had plenty of natural hair), 50 dogs, 96 wagons and carts, 30 wheelbarrows, 240 razors, 80 plows, 50 saddles and 222 pickaxes and shovels. He surely was "a little queer."

"Are there degrees of rank in the servants' hall?"

"To be sure. Maids who have charge of dogs won't associate with maids who look after children."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm grange met in regular session Saturday evening, May 20. The worthy chaplain, secretary and lady assistant steward were absent. Committee on social presented an account of $8.40 as proceeds from the social. The committee on the fence reported that the fencing had been shipped. The committee was instructed to hire such persons as could be necessary to build the fence and to have it put up in the best possible manner.

Moved and carried that we meet at 8:30 sharp local time.

Lecturer's hour was then carried out with songs and a discussion. Is a manure spreader a paying piece of machinery? It was the general opinion that it was.

MAINTAINING STONE ROADS.

Protective Value of Wood Meal Mixed With Oil and Tar.

One who is interested in road building and thinks he knows how to maintain a macadamized road in a thoroughly effective and cheap way says:

"If my observations are correct the destruction of a road starts in the following manner: Small stones or pebbles are loosened by the wheels of vehicles and scattered over the road, leaving little holes therein. Now, as long as the wheels had iron tires these little stones were ground or crushed by those wheels, and the holes in the road were filled again with their dust, the rains playing perhaps a good part in packing and filling the material.

"With the soft wheeled automobile all this changed for the worse. The rapid revolution of the broad wheels and the suction caused by them and by the low bodies of the machines loosen the little stones more easily and quickly, and as there are hardly any iron wheels left to grind and crush the loose pebbles the small holes soon become plentiful, and before long they grow into large ones and ruts.

"To sprinkle the roads with liquids is quite ineffective to prevent spalling. It must be something that has a body that will bind the particles of the road, fill all holes and protect the surface. It must be solid enough to be strewn on the road. There are probably many ways of producing such a road protector, and many ingredients might be used for it, but one of the best, I think, would be wood meal—that is, ground sawdust, ground hay or straw, ground cornstalks or any such article which is cheap and plentiful and which can easily be ground to meal and which will float and not clog up the sewers if used in the city. This meal should be soaked in or mixed with oil or with a mixture of oil and tar or any other suitable binder, so that it will not only protect and keep intact the roads, but also lay the dust. If used on asphalt it would give a good footing for horses, which is sorely needed."

AUTOS FOR ROAD WORK

Kansas Farmer Uses One While Dragging a Public Highway.

BETTER THAN A HORSE TEAM

Machine For Pulling the Drag Makes Faster Time—Reform the Motor Car Has Brought About In Improvement of Roads.

When the motor car first found its way to the Kansas farm it appeared a luxury. Soon it became a not uncommon pleasure and then a necessity. And a necessity it is today, especially in the Kansas wheat belt, where more cars are to be found on the farms than in any other part of the west.

Many farmers have them and a majority of those who are not so fortunate have the motor car fever in a most virulent form. The farmers confess that this fever can be checked only by a failure of the wheat and corn crop or by the desire of every farmer being gratified—by having a car at his disposal.

The machines are now so thick on the Kansas prairies in some sections that one traveling over the rural roads will count at least two motor cars in every five vehicles passed in a day's drive.

There is probably not another machine found on the farm today that can be put to so many practical uses as the motor car. There are very few things to do on the farm except the tilling of the soil, in which the car cannot be brought into practical use. It is valued by the farmer for its speed probably more than any other quality, as the farmer is learning more and more to value his time, just as the man in the office or the factory.

To the north of Salina a dozen miles or so there is a public road which shows that it has been well taken care of. The effect of the King drag is to be seen for more than a mile along one farm, and it is not an uncommon sight on that road to see a farmer with his touring car spinning along at the rate of six to eight miles an hour with a large King drag following, attached to the machine with a chain. This farmer has used the drag for some time, but more frequently in the last few months than ever before. He prefers a car for the drag to a team of horses because he makes better time.

Sometimes it takes two men, one to run the car and the other to weight the drag. A heavy weight will answer the same purpose as the second man, but it is a custom for the farmers to work the roads together, and it comes naturally since the advent of the motor.

It is seldom that the farmer's car is seen at the garage. The farmer is so accustomed to making his own repairs that he naturally falls into the job with the car. He finds it just as easy as repairing his harvester, his cultivator or his bicycle. Perhaps he may have a slight difficulty with some of the electrical parts of the engine, but when he has seen it repaired once he never has the same difficulty again, at least not to such an extent that an expert has to see it.

The public roads in central Kansas are such that a touring car can be taken out almost any time. Mud cuts no figure with the farmer, and this is one feature that makes his car of such value to him. The town man will not run his machine in the mud, but the farmer doesn't care much. However, the farmers are talking good roads now more than they ever did before, and this is one reform the motor car has brought about. Already in many of the public roads the little gullies have been filled up and the little knots have been cut down. More than a year ago the Salina motor club began the advocacy of good roads. The farmers were not in general sympathy with the motorists, and they were slow to take hold of the scheme, arguing that the roads in central Kansas were not so bad. They knew the object was to make it easier riding for motorists and especially for the tourists from eastern cities, who desired to spend the summer in Colorado, making the trip overland.

The farmer, as a rule, laughed at the idea then, but now he is right in line. If he doesn't own a car now he expects to some day, and he is in hopes the roads will be made better before his machine arrives on his farm.

More roads were dragged last year than ever before in the history of Salina county, and it is safe to say that the present year will be a record breaker in this line of work.

The motor car of the farmers is influencing good roads in another way. The dealers are the most active good roads advocates in the state. One of the principal motor dealers, for instance, makes it a business to deliver a good roads lecture with every car. The dealers have been farmers, and they know the subject from the standpoint of both sides. Farmers get the idea at the very beginning, and they never go behind the new doctrine.—Kansas City Star.

THEATRICAL

A Child of Enthusiasm

When once you have tasted of the happiness of making others happy, you will cease to worry about Heaven, this is one of the theories of Edwin Milton Royle's Hero, Jack Paden, in "My Boy Jack," which will appear at Charlevoix Theater, Wednesday, June 8th.

Jack Paden is one of those light hearted people who are always looking for the sunshine. He is an optimist, he always looks for the bright side of things, and if the side that's up isn't bright, he turns it over, polishes it and makes it bright. Jack, while working for success, thinks success and thereby achieves great results, he is a genius, a child of enthusiasm, given to action, and crowned with persistence. His utter lack of selfishness, his self denial, his tact, his talent, his ability to do the right thing in the right place, his concern in the welfare of others, his self abnegation in love, make him one of the most unique characters that any dramatic writer has ever drawn, and Eugene Moore's impersonation of Jack Paden is winning golden opinion wherever he has appeared.

Musical treat at the Bridge Theater last half of this week. Manager Spencer announces that he will hold forth at the Bridge Theater, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights of this week with a program of vaudeville and animated pictures that bids fair to surpass anything ever before seen in Charlevoix.

The feature act on the bill will be the "Two Lambrettes" French musical monarchs. The instruments used in their act are of great variety and of the very best quality representing an investment of nearly one thousand dollars. Combining this with their natural musical talent and lifelong study and we have an act that ranks among the best on the American vaudeville stage today. They play organ chimes, saxaphones, cornets, clarinets, musical lyre, violin, guitar and banjos.

TWO LAMBRETTES

The single on the bill is the popular "Band-box Cutup," Jack Dresden, songs, stories, dancing and impersonations.

Presenting this program together with the best moving pictures and you see a show worth twice the price.

A change has taken place in the management of the Majestic, Stephen H. Juhasz having been appointed house manager and John Murrel stage manager. More and better acts than ever are promised the patrons of this popular house. The result of American league games are made a feature.

PUT BULLET THROUGH HEART

Terrible Deed of William McParland Friday Night

FIRST SUSPICION WAS MURDER.

Probably a Case of Premeditated Suicide

So All the Evidence Would Indicate—Officers Villgaot in Tracing Out The Many Rumors Afloat.

Saturday morning the citizens of Charlevoix were shocked to hear that William McParland, one of the best known young men in the city, who had been employed by George Eagleton, had been found dead at Bay Shore with a bullet through his heart, and circumstances made it difficult to ascertain whether it was a case of murder or suicide.

Investigation brought to light the following facts; the night before McParland, Al Hendricks, and Misses Eva Maitland and Abbie Raybine left the city to attend a dance at Bay Shore, arriving there about ten o'clock when the girls went into the hall. While Hendricks was putting out the team, McParland went back of the hall. Shortly afterward a shot was heard, and, on searching in the direction from which the sound came the body of McParland was found.

Dr. Armstrong was summoned from Charlevoix, but, owing to several suspicious circumstances, such as the direction in which the bullet entered the body being a most difficult one for a self-inflicted wound, the finding of the revolver, with which the act was committed, a distance of fifteen or twenty feet from the body, it was thought best to summon the officers.

About eleven o'clock, Under Sheriff Weikel and Coroner Wilkinson were notified of the finding of the body and the suspicious circumstances which might indicate that murder had been done.

They immediately went to the scene and taking into consideration these facts, also the fact that the parents of the young man were certain that the handwriting of the letters found on the body, was not that of the deceased, decided that justice demanded that an inquest be held. Coroner Wilkinson impanelled the following jury, Henry A. Ward, Samuel Long, Samuel F. Shantz, Charles E. Hancock, Jacob Mindel, and Frank VanSchoick.

At the inquest it was brought out that Miss Maitland and McParland had been lovers for quite a while and had their disputes and that on the way over he had informed her that it was the last time they would be together.

In view of all the circumstances it was thought best to adjourn the inquest until two o'clock this afternoon for further investigation.

Since then the officers have continued their investigations, which at this time seem to leave no doubt that it was a case of premeditated suicide, it having been found that the gun with which the fatal shot was fired was borrowed from Lee Scroggie, McParland having made several requests to borrow the same, saying he desired to shoot a dog. Friday, he again saw Mr. Scroggie, who informed him that he hadn't the gun with him but he could get it of his mother which McParland did, there being two cartridges in the revolver which he said was enough.

On his person two letters were found, one to his mother and one to Miss Maitland which read as follows:

Dear Mother:

I will write you a few lines for the last time. I want you to forgive me for anything I have ever done to you. I thank you for what you have done, I know I did not do right by my folks. I am sorry. When you get this I will be stiff. Live a life so you will not go where I will. As for my marrying Eva Maitland you see I am not going to, not that I did not like her. I would have given my life for to help her. No one liked her better than I did. Give my love to Pauline, Eagleton and all. I bid you farewell for the last time. Don't think about me Have a good time as if I were with you.

From your son,
WILLIE MCPARLAND.

Charlevoix, July 2.

Dear Eva:

I will write you a few lines for the last time in my life. You will never know why I took my life. You were the only girl I ever loved, Eva, remember it. Don't show this to anyone. Now you will have a chance to go with someone.

If I had lived, you would have been my wife,—that is,—if you were willing. Tell your mother I said good-bye. I will choke off for the last time. Be good to yourself and if you can't be good be as good as you can. From the best friend you ever had or ever will have.

WILL.

The funeral was held at the house Monday, Rev. H. A. Putnam assisted by Rev. F. D. Ehle officiating.

All the circumstances of the case indicate that it was a case of premeditated suicide, brought on by worry over his love affairs which had unbalanced his mind. The vigilance of our officials in ferreting out the suspicious circumstances is to be commended, as in case of this kind all rumors need to be sifted out to distinguish the true from the false.

As we go to press the jury has just brought in the following verdict:

"We find that William McParland came to death by a revolver shot fired by his own hand."

ROADS OF NORWOOD

Officials Object to Condemnation Thom

Good Roads are in Process of Construction Fast as Possible.

Supervisor Bugbee, of Norwood informs us that the recent comments which we have published in regard to the roads in his township does an injustice to the officials and voters of Norwood.

The piece of road complained of is a new road laid out to avoid two bad hills and the commissioner last fall expended, under the direction of the township board, all the funds which the tax payers would allow. This spring the gravel was put on and the road is in process of construction, but is not as yet thouroughly packed, when the road is packed down it will be a road that any township can be proud of. Mr. Bugbee further informs us that Norwood is not one whit behind any township in the desire to have good roads and is building them as fast as possible.

The COURIER is glad to print the above as by the agitation of the question we set the people thinking and secure what is the most valuable asset of any community—good roads.

IMMENSE TRAVEL

The Michigan Resorts are Doing the Biggest Business in Their History.

"The greatest year of summer travel Michigan roads have ever seen!"

This is the statement of Passenger Agent A. J. Gray of the Pere Marquette. And it doesn't sound much like hard times.

"We have never had such early summer traffic," said Mr. Gray. "Our early trains have been loaded regularly. The northern resort hotels are nearly booked full already. The business is a revelation. Northern Michigan reports are going to do the banner business of their existence.

Nor is the only activity in this one direction. Hundreds of Michigan people are going west and most of them to the Seattle exposition. Scarcely a day passes that a good-sized Michigan party—with Grand Rapids people in it—does not head for the Pacific coast. Then again our short haul business from Illinois into the lower Michigan resorts is breaking all records. Things are looking up and conditions everywhere are most satisfactory"—Grand Rapids Herald.

ALFALFA CAN BE GROWN

A Crop Which Would Mean Much to This Region

The Traverse City Record is enthusiastic over the culture of alfalfa, and believes it can be grown as readily as hay. It says:

Mr. Robinson, cashier of the Peoples bank, has an interesting specimen of alfalfa which was grown on the farm of William Heimforth west of the city. This alfalfa had grown from one root which was hard as the root of a small tree and had multiplied and sent out roots which in turn had multiplied and sent out more roots until a large shrub three feet high had been the result.

These plants will grow on any land and do not require the moisture that hay and clover do, but the roots which are very hardy will go down into the ground until they find the moisture they require, sometimes going as far as 60 feet or more. Last year Mr. Heimforth stated that in a field where the clover and hay were burned and dead from the drouth there was a root of alfalfa which sprung up there and which the drouth had not affected in the least, and was the only green thing in the field. It has been proven that there is a strata of water which comes nearer the surface here than in any other territory in the state, and the raising of alfalfa could be successfully carried on in this territory and would mean the salvation of this part of the country if the farmers could be induced to take it up. It is the thing for the barren hills on which the timber has been cut down and when once started increases every year, the plants growing to enormous proportions. The plant has a purple blossom very much like red clover in form and is far ahead of clover in wintering stock.

CHANGE IN BANK FORCE

Mr. Strong Returns to Lake Odessa—R. S. Jackson New Assistant.

Richard S. Jackson, for seven years with the First Commercial Bank, Pontiac, Michigan, has engaged with The Charlevoix State Savings Bank as assistant to the cashier.

Mr. Strong who has been with the bank during the past year will shortly return to his home town, Lake Odessa, Mich., where he will resume his former position. Mr. Strong has made many friends since coming to Charlevoix and while we regret to lose him we are glad to know he is going back among old friends and in a village that is home to him and his family.

Mr. Jackson entered the field of Michigan bankers some seven years ago at Pontiac, Michigan, the same city where Cashier Rochow started in a few years before him and they have been in touch ever since. Mr. Rochow having known him since boyhood and coming well recommended as a strong and capable bank man, the change is a pleasure and mutually agreeable all around.

ADVERTISING SPACE IS LIMITED

No Posters Nor Advertising Permitted in Territory of Condidate.

Newspapers Cannot Charge Higher Than Regular Rates—Treating is Made Unlawful.

We print below the provisions of the new primary law in reference to advertising. These will prove of interest, as very few people know anything about them. The design is evidently to restrict the expenditure for advertising to reasonable sums.

A candidate cannot circulate any printed matter or advertisement about himself larger than two and one-fourth inches in width and four inches in length, excepting postal cards and letters. No lithographs or such printing containing a likeness of the candidate larger than one and one-half inches in width by two inches in heighth may be circulated, excepting in newspapers of bona fide publication three months prior to the date of the advertisement, where a cut of the same size may be run, provided that more than ten per cent of the accompanying printed matter is in larger type than regularly used by the newspaper in its editorial column, excepting therefrom the name of the candidate and the office for which he aspires. No rate shall be charged higher than the regular highest rate on the newspaper's card. No advertisement shall be printed in any publication except a newspaper. The candidate may not post or cause to be posted within the territory within which he is a candidate any campaign card, banner, handbill, poster, lithograph, half-tone engraving, photograph or any advertising matter.

It is also unlawful for a candidate to treat to any intoxicating beverage after he has announced himself or filed his petition, or to allow any of his friends to set them up on him or in his interests.

The direct primary system is made mandatory upon all parties as far as the nomination of governor, lieutenant governor and United States senator are concerned. Primary day is the first Tuesday after the first Monday in September. Enrollment day is the first Monday in April.

The primary law must be submitted to voters throughout the state generally in April next or to any time subsequent, on a petition of 20 per cent of the qualified voters of the question of the nomination of party candidates for city offices in cities of less than 70,000 population. An election shall be held the first Monday in April to determine whether the system shall apply in the nomination of circuit judges and all county officers.

The law is mandatory upon all parties in these provisions:

Nomination of governer, lieutenant governor and United States senators.

Nomination of congressmen.

Nomination of senators and representatives to the state legislature.

Delegates to the county conventions.

Merchants and Manufacturers

Owners, trainers and others who have followed the work of trotters closely are of the opinion that the record for the $10,000 Merchants & Manufacturers' stake is in danger of being lowered in the twentieth renewal of that classic, which occurs at the state fair grounds, Detroit, during the week of July 26. This race has been the feature of the annual blue ribbon meetings since its inauguration in 1880, and it must be said that the outlook for great speed and racing is brighter this year than at any bygone grand circuit opening in the City of the Straits.

The M. & M. is not only larger than usual this year, but it contains more fast horses than have taken part in any one renewal. Sonoma Girl set the record at 2:09¼ when she beat Highball two years ago, and while it is asking much of a green trotter to even equal that mark, the early work of the candidates indicates that a number of them have the ability. One of the entrants, Denver, a gray gelding foaled and developed in Michigan, trotted a mile in 2:08 the middle of June. Another beat 2:09, and half a dozen came between that and 2:11. This is exceptional work for the season, and as all of the horses now are sound and full of life, there is every reason to look for something sensational when they meet on the big track at Detroit.

Trainers have not been urging their horses to these great flights of speed in June, but the trotters and pacers are so far advanced that the task is well within their powers. Evidently Detroit is going to set the pace for the whole country this year and leave little than even later meetings can better.

How to Cure Hiccoughs.

There is a young woman who suffers great discomfort, sometimes sharp pain, from an occasional attack of the hiccoughs. She tried all the prescribed remedies, from deep breathing to plums fresh and preserved, without success. Nothing availed, the pain often lasting an hour or more, until she tried aromatic spirits of ammonia, a teaspoonful diluted in a little water. The relief was instantaneous. All subsequent attacks have been cured by the same means. The trouble is acute form is somewhat out of the ordinary, but the annoyance it entails makes it worth while to pass this hint along.

How to Treat Linoleum.

The way to prolong linoleum's period of usefulness is to keep it clean. Dirt ground into the finished surface by the tread of feet is the floor covering's greatest enemy. Linoleum needs no soap, ammonia or strong cleaning agents. A simple wiping with a cloth just moist with warm water is all that is needed. Once or twice a year give the linoleum a wiping of good furniture polish to renew its smooth surface.

How to Know Cooking Measures.

Young housekeepers are often at a loss when a recipe calls for a cup of anything to tell what kind of cup to use or how much a cup measures. The accepted measure is a stone kitchen cup and means that cup filled to the brim. It is equal to one-half pint. A cup of solid butter, milk, chopped meat or granulated sugar is equal to about half a pound. A cup of sifted flour is equal to one-quarter of a pound.

How to Brighten Your Piano.

Take a basin of lukewarm water, wet a piece of soft cheesecloth in it; then pour a few drops of kerosene oil on the cloth and rub lightly over your piano. Keep repeating until you have been all over the surface; then take a dry piece of cheesecloth and polish until it is glossy. Your piano will look like new and that dull, smoky look will all disappear.

WIDOW PLIMPTON'S ANSWER.

She Had Waited a Long Time For the Question.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

Gilbert Butler whistled softly as he strode along the road that bright May morning. When the white gate of the Plimpton farm gleamed in the distance he paused for a brief instant, and the whistle died away into silence.

"She loves me. I know she does. It's nothing but sheer contrariness to keep me dangling along. I swear I'll settle this matter today or"— Gilbert paused and swallowed hard. Then his big brown clinched fist fell to his side and he resumed his walk.

The Widow Plimpton sat on the step of the side porch making flower wreaths—heaps of yellow eyed dahlias, dark green ivy and box, an armful of purple lilies, a mass of syringa blooms and a few very early roses which the hot month had forced into flower.

"Good morning," said Gilbert Butler from the stone wall.

Widow Plimpton raised a sweet face to his, a face framed in dusky hair with cheeks like pink roses and golden brown eyes. "Good morning, Gilbert," she said gravely.

"IT'S ALL RIGHT NOW, THEN, AIN'T IT?" HE ASKED.

"Going to the cemetery, I see," said Butler disagreeably."

"Of course. It is Memorial day."

"You go there every Sunday, too," said Gilbert quickly.

Anna Plimpton crimsoned indignantly. "Why shouldn't I?" she asked haughtily.

"It's a heathenish custom. Ain't I enough that George Plimpton should have got killed down there in Cuba fighting those Spaniards and then I be brought home and buried with military honors, and just because you're his widder"—

"Because I am his widow I shall continue to express my love and respect for his memory by visiting his grave as often as I please. You must be very small minded, Gilbert Butler, to grudge a few flowers to a dead soldier."

Gilbert reddened to his ears, and his blue eyes flashed ominously. "I don't grudge the flowers, Anna," he said with slow deliberation, "but it seems to me if you could spare a little kindness to some folks that are alive, meaning myself, it would make more real happiness. George, he's been dead nine years, and I been coming to see you for five of 'em."

Widow Plimpton rose to her feet and daintily shook the broken leaves and stems from her white gown. Then she slipped four wreaths over her arm and descended the steps."

"I'm going up to the graveyard now, Gilbert. Will you go with me?" she asked gently.

"I can't," he said almost roughly. "You're not treating me fairly, Anna. If I were dead up there in the graveyard you'd come and put flowers on my mound, but just because I'm alive you grudge me one bit of happiness. You have never given me an answer to that question I asked you."

Anna Plimpton bit her red lip reflectively. "If you will go home and think the matter over quietly perhaps you may discover why your question may not have been answered."

She went out of the gate and disappeared up the white path that led to the cemetery on the hill.

Gilbert stared after her with fascinated eyes until she disappeared among the clustering cedars; then he took her advice and went home.

All that day he wrestled with the problem. What reason could there be for Anna's withholding that long delayed and coveted "Yes?" Was he not industrious, of good habits, possessed of comfortable means and not ill looking? And there wasn't another living man whom Anna had favored with her smiles, and yet—

"By thunder!" he exclaimed at last. "It must be because I'm so all fired mean spirited as to be jealous of a dead man. She's seen it right along and despised me for it."

He sat there an hour and thought deeply. At last he went into the house and opened the door of the sitting room.

In the square bow window luxuriating in the waning sunlight were Aunt Heppy's calla lilies. Twelve stately plants they were, and each one bore two snowy blossoms, twenty-four in all. Aunt Heppy had nursed them tenderly all winter, and now—they were rewarding her care.

Deliberately he drew out his knife and cut the lilies from the plants. As he turned away with his arms full of the long stemmed beauties the door opened and Aunt Heppy's horrified eyes fastened upon him.

"Gilbert Baker, are you crazy?" she shrieked.

"I guess I am," said Gilbert dryly as he reached into his pocket and drew forth a five dollar bill. "I've got to have these, Aunt Heppy. You take this money—the sewing society's sees the lilies anyway—you won't miss 'em."

He was gone, and Aunt Heppy sank into a chair and looked dazedly from the five dollar bill over to the denuded plants in the window.

"For the land's sake! The boy's crazy!" she ejaculated at last, tucking the money away in her pocket.

Just as the red sun dipped behind the high cemetery hill Gilbert Baker toiled wearily up the white path. In his arms he held a rude wooden cross, to which he had clumsily tied the calla lilies. Some of the snowy bloom was marred by his awkward fingers, but [illegible] gate.

And even then Gilbert Butler did not realize that he had not asked the proper question.

Thinking of Her.

In the "Recollections of a New England Town" is the story of Mr. Bush, an inventor and a very studious man, who sometimes became so absorbed in thought as to forget both place and people. His wife was a notable housekeeper, but she did not always go to church. One Sunday she accompanied her husband thither, and glad and proud was he. But when the service was over he walked away home, leaving her behind. Mrs. Brush was grieved.

"My dear," she said when she reached the house, "I don't know what people will think. You came away without me. It was plain to see that I was entirely forgotten."

Mr. Bush looked at her in comical dismay. "Forgotten, my dear?" said he. "Oh, no. I don't think that's possible. Why," a brilliant idea striking him, "now I remember. I was thinking of you all the way home. I was thinking what a good dinner you'd give me!"

Brillat-Savarin's Sleepy Sisters.

Brillat-Savarin, the French writer, had two spinster sisters, who found as much pleasure in sleeping as the author of the "Physiologie du Gout" found in eating. They lived in the country and were in the habit of passing ten months of the year in their beds, leaving them only to prepare for the annual visit of their brother, who invariably arrived on Oct. 1. He remained with them until the end of November, when they bade him farewell with the words, "Goodby till next year, Asthieme; we are going back to bed." This somnolent regime agreed with them admirably, for they both lived to a great age, one of them, Pierrette, attaining her hundredth year. Pierrette's end, according to her brother's biographer, was worthy of her life. She was sitting up in bed eating her dinner and, not being served quickly enough, screamed, somewhat angrily, "Bring the dessert." When the servant brought it she found her mistress dead.

"Why, you've got the grip, old man."

"I have not. I can't afford to quit work and go to bed. This is merely a darned bad cold."—Exchange.

How to Keep Gold Embroidery Bright.

Gold embroidery is apt to cause many misgivings when a satin evening gown decorated in this manner is brought under review. However carefully the dress has been protected by soft tissue paper—opaque, black paper which is sold for the purpose—the smallest hole where air could enter will have had the effect of tarnishing the embroidery. To clean the gown is, however, fairly simple, ordinary stains being easily removed by rubbing the satin all over with stale bread-crumbs which have been sifted with a little powdered blue. To remove crumbs and powder a thorough shaking will be necessary, together with flicking with a clean handkerchief, the rubbing being repeated where necessary. For the gold embroidery there is nothing so useful as crimson velvet. A small piece should always be kept at hand, and both before the commencement of the season and also on taking off the gown each time it is worn the velvet should be rubbed briskly over the surface until the original sheen is reproduced.

If horses could speak there would be a general outcry against the mangers in use, says the Farm Journal. Most of them are set too high and are too deep, besides being tight on the bottom instead of slatted to let the dust and hay seed through. Dust in one of the horse's worst enemies and often injures his breathing apparatus, causing him misery for life. Every manger should have a hayrack in front of it, and this should have a slatted bottom. The horse that gets his hay in this manner, pulling it through a rack level with the manger, will not breathe dust and will not have dust in his stall.

The captain saw to the reverent burial of poor Pietro Gama, entered full details of the fight in the ship's log and helped Walker to search the suspected coal for a further supply of dynamite, as the utility of the surface mines had been demonstrated beyond a doubt. He thought it possible, given the necessary time, to rig a device which would be practically invisible. A fresh set of dummy poles, which the Indiana would probably avoid in the event of a second attack, might deflect the canoes into the area of new mines laid at sea level.

Their utmost diligence brought to light no further supply of the explosive. Evidently the prepared lumps of coal, each containing a stick of dynamite, which were placed in the bunker at Valparaiso had been conveyed on board by one man, so it was more than likely there was not another ounce of the stuff on the ship except the three specimens first discovered. These, water soaked and useless, were locked in a drawer in the chart house.

While scrutinizing the bunker Courtenay found a grimy piece of paper, crushed into a ball and amalgamated with coal dust by means of the glue or other substance which had been used for making the bombs intended for the destruction of the furnaces. He examined it carefully, believing it had the appearance and texture of cartridge paper. He placed it in his pocket and, while changing his clothes before joining the others at supper, came on it again with a certain surprise. He plunged it into a basin of hot water, and it yielded its secret. It was the outer wrapper of a stick of dynamite. It bore the circular stamp of the manufacturers, the Sociedad Anonyma de las Coslas del Pacifico. This in itself meant nothing. The same company probably supplied hundreds of mines with the five pound boxes in which dynamite is packed, and if the stamp were the only clew none could possibly say when or where it had been issued for use.

But miners are apt to be careless. Men accustomed to dynamite will handle it with an astounding disregard for danger, and here was a case in point. Some Spanish overseer, evidently at a loss for a memorandum tablet, had scribbled hieroglyphics with an indelible pencil on this particular wrapper. It was clear that the figures and abbreviated words referred to the development of a cross bending and the position of certain lodes, but Courtenay was quick to see that the official who made those notes would recognize them; hence the mine or store from which the package had been stolen or bought could be identified. Such evidence was of highly circumstantial value. Courtenay put the wrapper in the same drawer as the cartridges, entered in the log the time and manner of its discovery and forthwith dismissed it from his mind.

It was almost dark when he went on deck. The wind was keen and chilly. It whistled through the broken windows of the wheelhouse and seemed to have in it a promise of bad weather. But a glance aloft and at the sky beyond the southern headland—Point Kansas, as it was called on board—reassured him. The far flung arc overhead was cloudless. The stars of the southern hemisphere, vivid and bright, though less familiar than those of the north, were reflected in the black water. The ship was so still, the surroundings so peaceful, save for the plash of tiny waves created by the breeze, that he was almost startled when a soft voice came from the lower deck:

"Where in the world have you been, Captain Courtenay? Joey is fretting for you, and I have carried him all over the ship in vain search."

His heart jumped with gladness. Elsie was awaiting him at the foot of the companion. Be sure he was by her side without needless delay. The dog wriggled in her arms, so she said:

"I don't think he ought to run about. His dear little paw is rather badly cut, and there may be more broken glass on the deck."

"I hope not, for our Chileans' sake," laughed Courtenay. "I heard Mr. Boyle telling them to sweep it up, and they were hard at work when I went to my cabin."

"Oh, is that where you hid yourself? No wonder I could not find you. Of course Joey knew where you were. How stupid of me!"

"Please don't call yourself names, Elsie. You don't deserve them. And, by the way, may I address you by your Christian name? It slipped out today unawares. Not that I feel like apologizing, because I don't. There are times when the least speaks, not the guarded tongue."

Luckily the darkness covered the hot blush which leaped to her cheeks. She gave a nervous little laugh and strove desperately to parry this wholly unexpected assault.

"I shall be delighted if you always call me Elsie. It sounds friendly, and I think our circumstances warrant a true friendship."

"Excellent! I suppose you know that my name is Arthur?"

"Yes, but I had no notion of that sort of exchange. You are the captain, and a very serious sort of captain at times. I feel like a little girl when you look at me and tell me not to be naughty, so 'Elsie' sounds all right, but I simply dare not call you 'Arthur.' Just imagine what a sensation it would create in the saloon! I should feel creepy all over. And hadn't we better be"—

"Elsie," said he, with a tender note in his voice which thrilled her like a chord of exquisite music, "I want to tell you something. The knowledge is forced on me that there is another man on this ship who wishes to make you his wife, but I, too, love you, and I see no reason why I should stand aside for any man on God's earth until you tell me with your own lips that you prefer him to me."

"Oh!" gasped Elsie and "Oh!" again, but not another word could she utter, she who had been so voluble a moment ago. The bittersweet pain of hearing his sudden avowal was almost overpowering. Her ideals of honor and truth were shocked, but she was a woman as well as an idealist, and she was stirred to the depths of her soul by the knowledge that she had won the man whose love she craved.

"I want you to listen to me, Elsie," he said, with a passionate intensity that stilled the rising storm in her bosom. "Dr. Christobal may have pleaded his own cause already. It is not for me to cavil at him for doing that, but I cannot lose you without a word. Whether you marry him or me or neither of us, I shall love you forever. I want you to know that. It is no new discovery to me. I think my heart went out to you when I carried you in my arms through the gale, and since that hour you and I have had experiences denied to most men and women ere they reach the conclusion that they are fit mates for the voyage of life. Do you feel that, sweetheart? Have we known each other ten days or ten years?"

His face was very near to hers now. His arm was around her neck. It was quite dark where they stood in the shadow of the bridge. He could not see the tears in her eyes, but he heard her broken answer:

"Are you—quite—fair—in using such words to me?"

"Fair, Elsie! Fair to whom?"

"Because—oh, how can I tell you? Are you free to—to speak to me in this way?"

"Elsie, I am pledged to no other woman, if that is what you mean. Who has been telling you otherwise?"

"No one. Indeed—indeed, I alone am to blame. You will be angry with me, but I could not help it."

She could say no more. If she had uttered another syllable just then she would have broken down completely. Courtenay placed his hand under her chin and lifted her unresisting lips to his. He kissed her twice and laughed softly, with a glad confidence that sent a wave of delight coursing through Elsie's veins.

"Sweetheart," he whispered, "I am sure you would not have allowed me to speak so plainly if you were going to send me away. Now, I don't want you to bind yourself irrevocably tonight. That would certainly not be fair. I don't know why I am to be angry or what it was you couldn't help, and I don't care a red cent. All I want to know is this—if the Kansas brings us both back to the outer world once more, have I as good a chance of winning your love as any other man?"

"But I must tell you. I could not look you in the face if you did not hear it. When I was left alone in your cabin the second time and the sea came in, a packet of letters fell out of some clothes which I picked up from the floor. There was one from your sister. I hardly knew what I was doing, but I saw her name, 'Madge,' and I read a few words on the half page above her signature."

His left arm was now so well established that his hand touched her cheek, and he found it wet with tears.

"What wild conceit has crept into your pretty little head?" he cried in amaze, unconsciously raising his voice somewhat. "A letter from my sister! She is the most straightforward woman breathing, I assure you. Never a line has she written to me which could bear any construction such as seems to trouble you. Why, on the contrary, Madge has often chaffed me for being so like herself in giving no thought to matrimony."

"It is horrid of me to persist, but I owe it to you to tell you what I saw. She alluded to your 'affianced wife' and said that 'under no other circumstances,' whatever they were, would she receive her."

Then Courtenay laughed again, and Elsie found it was absolutely essential if Joey were not to be crushed that her head should bend a little forward, with the obvious result that it rested on Courtenay's shoulder.

"I must show you the whole of that letter," he cried, "and the others which are tied up in the same bundle. You will see me blush, I admit, but it will not be from a sense of perfidy. But there is one thing you have forgotten, Elsie." And his voice dropped to a tense whisper again. "In telling me your secret, which is no secret, you have given me my answer. Your heart must have crept out a little way to meet mine, dear, or my sister's words would not have perplexed you. So that is why you have avoided me during the past few days! But there! Now, indeed, I am not acting quite fairly. It is unfair to ask you to confess when I want you to wait until we are clear of our present difficulties before you decide whether or not you can find it to your liking to make a poor sailor man happy."

Joey was a highly accommodating dog under certain conditions. He had curled up so complacently that Elsie found she could hold him quite easily with one arm. So the other went out in the darkness until it rested timidly on her lover's disengaged shoulder.

"It is easy to confess that which is already known," she murmured. "Whether we are fated to live one day or fifty years, it will be all the same to me, dear."

She lifted her face again to his and would have returned the kisses he gave her were it not that they lost their one sided character this time. There was a chance that Joey might have been partly suffocated, though to all appearance he meant to die a willing martyr, had not Suarez leaned over the upper rail and asked in his grating accent if he heard the senor captain's voice below.

Boyle had cornered Christobal in the saloon.

Elsie, all tremulous and rosy and profoundly thankful for the darkness, withdrew herself from Courtenay's embrace and answered the Argentine.

"Ah," said Suarez, "I am glad you are there, too, senorita. Will you tell him that I am very hungry and that I have not been relieved at the proper time? I have been waiting half an hour or more."

"There," cried the captain, squeezing Elsie's arm; "that comes of using so many unnecessary explanations. I ought to have adopted the recognized Jack tar method and just grabbed you round the waist without ceremony. I wonder where Boyle is. He and Christobal take the first watch, and it must be two bells or later. I will hunt them up. Goodby, sweetheart; meet you at supper in ten minutes."

It was a strange and peculiar fact that Boyle had cornered Christobal in the saloon and had insisted on telling him various remarkable anecdotes concerning the one legged skipper of the Flower of the Ocean brig. It was still more odd that when Christobal yielded to unwonted and melancholy silence after learning from Suarez that the senor captain had been talking to the senorita for a very long time on the promenade deck Boyle should feel inclined to sing. And then, with a chilling inspiration, Christobal knew why the chief officer had caused him to miss the hour for relieving the watch. Boyle had seen those two together and had planned to leave them undisturbed!

The Spaniard was a dignified man. He had inherited from his English mother a saving sense of humor. It was intolerable that the pleasant relations existing between the few survivors on board the Kansas should be disturbed by reason of any failure on his part to acquiesce in Elsie's right to bestow her affections where she listed. He wondered if the girl had come on deck after supper. Her habit was to retire early, as she rose soon after the sun. He had seen her for a moment only in passing out of the saloon, and there was a suspicious brightness in her eyes for which solicitude on the dog's behalf would hardly account. Why not put his fortunes to the test that night and have done with it? Yes; that was the right course.

So it was on the cards that Elsie would be the amazed recipient of two proposals in one evening, which is a better average than most women are favored with in a lifetime. Christobal had entered the chart house with the fixed intent of warning Boyle that he was going below for a moment to ask Miss Maxwell to come on deck when a hurried step on the bridge companion caused the imminent words to be withheld.

It was Courtenay, who had run up from the saloon to procure those fateful letters which had so nearly parted Elsie and himself. He had laughingly refused to tell her their history. That would spoil their effect, he said. She must take them to her stateroom and read them at her leisure. Then she would see their true inwardness, and his feelings would be spared, as he could not deny that the majority of them had been written by ladies.

On his way he looked into the wheelhouse. There was no light in the interior. Boyle, wrapped in a heavy coat, was seated in the most sheltered corner.

"All quiet?" asked the captain in his brisk way.

"Nothin' doin', sir," answered Boyle.

"I expect you are both feeling pretty tired. Tollemache and I propose to relieve you at six bells."

"But why?" demanded Christobal. "It is you who have passed an exciting day. I am ready to mount guard until dawn. Tollemache can join me now if he likes, as Mr. Boyle ought to be in bed."

"I'm all right," said Boyle gruffly. "I am only sitting here because my back is stiff."

Courtenay glanced at the somber shadow of Point Kansas, silhouetted against the deep blue of the seaward arc.

"Suarez has retired to roost," he said. "He seems to be quite assured that the Indians will never deliver a night attack."

"Today's hammering should teach them to leave the Kansas alone in future," said Christobal.

"I hope so, but Suarez and Tollemache agree that they are most persistent wretches. Now, Boyle, you must obey the doctor. I am going back to the saloon to give Miss Maxwell some documents I wish her to see. Then Tollemache and I will relieve the pair of you. All right, Christobal. I promise to take my share of the blankets in the morning. I shall be ready for a nap at 4 o'clock. At present I feel particularly wide awake."

He went to the cabin. They heard him unlock the door and enter. At that instant a startling hail came from two sailors stationed on the poop.

"Indians!" they yelled.

The three men were on the spar deck a second later, straining their eyes into the black vagueness of the water.

"Indians!" shouted two other sailors on the forecastle, and from the spar deck it seemed to be possible to distinguish several black objects moving toward the ship.

"The siren, Boyle!" cried Courtenay, striking a match. At once the swelling note of the fog horn smote the air and thundered away in tremendous sound waves. Soon a hissing, fiery serpent ran up the port wall of the chart house, and a fine star rocket soared into the sky. It illuminated a wide area of the bay and revealed a number of crowded canoes darting in on the ship from all sides. Courtenay grasped the line connected with the remaining mines and hauled for dear life. Already the Indian rifle fire was crackling with vivid spurts of flame, and stones and arrows were beginning to patter on the deck and hang against the steel plates. Two of the dynamite bombs exploded with the usual din, but it was impossible to ascertain their effect owing to the yelling of the Indians.

The loud summons of the siren brought all hands from below. Arms were hastily secured, the fore and aft awnings closed, and Walker made shift to hammer the engine room door tight. The increasing violence of the stone slinging showed that the Alcutots meant to press home this time. What-

Extinct.

"Bessie," said the teacher of the class which taught all about birds—in the school prospectus it was called the "ornithological division"—"give me the name of one bird which is now extinct."

Bessie wrinkled her brows.

"What's extinct, please?" she asked.

"No longer existent," explained the teacher. "Can you name one?"

"Yes," piped Bessie readily. "Dick."

"Dick—Dick?" repeated the teacher. "And what kind of bird is a 'Dick,' please?"

"Our canary," answered Bessie. "The cat extincted him."

Marquis.

The designation marquis is the second in the five orders of English nobility. The term originally indicated persons who had the care of the marches of a country. The word marches is the plural of mark, which in its political sense signifies boundaries. Such were the lands on the borders of England and Scotland and of England and Wales.

Early Football Players.

Football was for many years the national game of Florence. The season was from January to March, and the ladies and gentlemen of Florence and the populace as well were wont to assemble on the Piazza Santa Gloce to witness the game, which was called "calcio," from the word meaning "to kick." The last game was played in 1739.

The Rubber Tree.

The "India rubber" plant—Ficus elasticus—is a great tree in the tropical countries in which it flourishes, often reaching as much as a hundred feet high. Imposing, indeed, it looks in such conditions, with a vast leafy crown extending over forty or fifty feet outward on each side of the massive trunk and with immense buttressing roots twisting and winding along above the ground in such a way as to lead the natives of India and Ceylon to call it the "snake tree." Sometimes these roots grow up into the trees and make the tree look like the banyan, to which, it may be mentioned, it is botanically related.

ever their dread of the fiends who roam the world in the dark, they had conquered it, and this latest phase in the stormy history of the ship threatened to be its most trying one.

Courtenay, who seemed to be everywhere at once, lighted torches which were fastened to the empty davits in readiness for a night alarm. He had used the last rocket on board, but the flares would burn for fifteen minutes at least. By their light the defenders were able to shoot or smash the skulls of several savages who climbed up roughly contrived grapnels fashioned out of bent sticks and thongs of hide. But there were only thirteen men to repel an attack which developed at fifty points simultaneously. Ere the torches flickered in their sockets the savages had swarmed over poop and bows. They were tearing at the canvas shields and sweeping the hurricane deck with showers of missiles. Tollemache was injured, and Walker. Courtenay had his forehead cut open. Suarez fell insensible while he was bellowing curses through a megaphone in the vain hope of frightening the determined enemy. Two Chileans were down, one struck with a stone and the other shot through the lungs.

So at last the Kansas was in the grip of a savage and implacable foe. Courtenay while hauling a steam hose to the weakest point, the after part of the promenade deck, met Christobal. He clutched the Spaniard in a way there could be no mistaking.

"Go below!" he muttered in a terrible voice. "I cannot leave the deck. You must go. And, for God's sake, don't tell her! Let her die without knowing!"

CHAPTER XV.

WHEN Christobal descended to the salon he found Elsie holding the excited dog. It was instantly perceptible that she was not aware of the grave position of affairs on deck. She knew, of course, that the Alsculof menace had become active again, but the first attack had been beaten off so easily that she was sure this later effort would fail.

The dog was better informed. His alert ears told him that there were strange beings on board. He struggled so resolutely that Elsie freed him just as the Spaniard reached the foot of the stairs. Forgetting his wounded paw and all a-quiver with the fine courage of his race, Joey galloped up the companion and disappeared. Elsie was much distressed by her four footed friend's useless pugnacity.

"I could not keep him back," she said, "and I am afraid he runs some risk of being hit. Do you think he will go to the chart house? That is so exposed. Captain Courtenay is not there, is he?"

"No. I left him a moment ago close to the salon entrance."

She listened intently. Her imagination led her astray, it was so hopelessly on the wrong tack.

"There does not appear to be so much stone throwing now, but I suppose I ought not to go on deck," she cried.

"It is not to be thought of, Miss Maxwell. Indeed, the captain asked me to come and bear you company."

"Just fancy those horrid Indians venturing to approach the ship tonight after the dreadful lesson they received this afternoon! And what will poor Senor Suarez say? He was so positive that they would never come near us after dark."

"I saw him also on the promenade deck," answered Christobal quietly. "He had very much the semblance of a false prophet."

The Spaniard meant to meet grim fate with a jest on his lips. He had seen Suarez lying dead or insensible close to the rails. In fact, the unlucky Argentine was only separated by the thickness of the ship's deck from the table near which Elsie was standing. Unless he were speedily rescued he would bleed to death.

"Ah, I heard Joey barking. He has gone aft," cried Elsie. "And what is that?" she added, moving suddenly toward the center of the salon. She had caught the fierce hiss of steam, and she was well aware that steam would only be brought into use if the Indians were endeavoring to climb the ship's sides. Not yet had it occurred that they could possibly be on board.

"Some of our friends the enemy have come near enough to be scalded," said the man coolly. "That should soon drive them away. You are not frightened, I hope?"

"Not a bit. My only regret is that I am not permitted to help in the defense. It must be irksome for you, Dr. Christobal, to be stationed here when the ship is in danger. I am certain you would prefer to be up there with the others."

"Thank you for saying that. I wish you were able to read all my thoughts as accurately."

His right hand went to the pocket in which he had placed the revolver. The stock appeared to have a peculiar clumsiness as his fingers closed around it. Though he was proud of the iron nerve which had won him repute in his profession, he almost prayed now that it might not fail him at the last. What a horror, to be compelled with his parting glance to see this bright and gracious woman crumple up on the deck!

He heard ominous sounds from the fore part of the vessel. The revolver shooting had ceased, for the convincing reason there were no more cartridges. Courtenay's double barreled gun was being fired as quickly as he could reload it, and the sharp snap of one of the rifles in the Indians' possession was recognizable as coming from the poop, the remaining marksmen having preferred to fire wildly from their canoes. But Christobal knew that a deadly struggle was in progress on the fore deck. Tollemache, Frascuelo and three Chileans were engaged in a hand to hand fight with nearly a score of savages. The doctor could distinguish the cries of the combatants, the irregular stamping of boot shod feet.

He wondered why the girl, with her acute senses, did not grasp the significance of the yells and trampling on the deck until it occurred to him, with a quick pang, that she was listening for one voice alone. Owing to her ignorance of the desperate nature of the conflict raging overhead she had ears for nothing further.

He placed a hand on her shoulder. She turned and looked at him. There was a gravity in his eyes which startled her.

"Elsie," he said, "you believe in the efficacy of prayer, don't you? Well, then, pray now a little. I shall be glad to think when this time of danger has passed that we owed something to your invocation."

It was in his mind that he must shoot her within a few seconds, and the immeasurable agony of the thought reflected itself in his face. He had no notion that she would give his words a more direct significance than he intended them to bear. But a strange, hoarse yell of triumph, the war cry of an Alsculof leader who had hauled himself to the bridge and found it undefended, warned her in the same moment that all was not well with the defense.

She sprang toward the salon stairs.

"Do you hear that?" she cried in a ringing voice. "There are Indians on board. Come! We must not stay here when our friends are fighting for their lives."

Christobal knew that this active girl would readily outstrip him in a race to the deck. She was already several feet distant, but he must detain her, no matter what the cost. If she fell into the clutches of the ghouls then overrunning the Kansas she might not be killed, but only wounded, and her sufferings would be inconceivable ere the end came.

"You are wrong," he shouted, with convincing vehemence, "but if you wish to see for yourself at least allow me to go first."

While he was speaking he ran forward. She thought he meant what he said and waited for him. Then he caught her right arm firmly in his left hand.

"Let us wait here a moment or two," he breathed.

IN CASE OF FIRE.

How to Save Property and Escape From a Burning Building.

One's ability to extinguish a starting fire or to escape if caught in a burning building depends upon intelligence and self control. If the blaze is just starting throw water on the material that is burning—not at the blaze. One bucket of water will do more good if thrown on by handfuls or with a broom than if dashed on at once. A small fire may be smothered with a rug or blanket or beaten out with a broom.

If you cannot put out the fire in a minute yell "Fire!" and then, if in a city, call the fire department. Every one living in the house should know the telephone number to be used for getting the firemen, and it should be on the wall for strangers to use. There is no time for looking in the directory, even if one should not be too nervous to find a number. Every one should know where the nearest fire alarm box is and how to use it.

Do not leave the door open when you run out to give an alarm. If the doors and windows are closed when a fire starts one can always get the firemen there in time to put it out while it is in only one room. The fire soon consumes all the oxygen in a closed room and may die out if it gets no fresh air.

If awakened in the night by the smell or cry of fire, don't dress. Wrap yourself in a blanket or quilt from the bed and get out the quickest way you can. Shut the doors you pass through. After calling for help try to ascertain the extent and the situation of the fire. You can tell if it is best to try to carry out the household goods. If the fire is on the first floor it is very dangerous to go above, because the heat and choking smoke rise.

One can often get out through a hall filled with smoke by going on his hands and knees when he would fall choking if he ran. The smoke is the thickest at the ceiling. Holding a wet towel or anything made of flannel or even a coat collar over the mouth greatly lessens the danger of injury to the lungs or death from the carbonic acid gas in the smoke.

Most fires start in the first floor or basement of a building and burn a hole up through the roof. In a house the flames travel by the stairways; in a big store or hotel they go quickly up the elevator shaft. After reaching the top the fire spreads and slowly goes down.

Feeding the Calves.

If a number of calves are to be fed see that every one gets the feed it ought to have. Do not have an arrangement that will enable the large ones to eat what the small ones ought to have.

DAIRY BARN ADVANTAGES.

Dairymen about to remodel their barns or build new ones may get some points from the following description of the dairy barn of the Michigan Agricultural college:

The illustration shows the swinging gate and the chain arrangements to the stalls for dairy cows at the college. The hinged partition is to give the milker more room than a single stall affords as well as to protect him from the animal in the neighboring stall. The piece of chain extending from post to post at the rear is to prevent the cow from backing out when the milker enters. On one end of the chain is a hook which is fastened to a clasp on the post. When a cow is to be milked the hook on the chain in the adjacent stall is removed to the loop in the center of the hasp, when the gate swings open, allowing the milker to enter the stall.

The particular feature of this stall is an iron pipe which runs through all the stall partitions at a point four inches back from the rear of the manger and thirty-five inches above the cement floor. The pipe is to prevent the cow from moving forward in the stall and dropping manure on the platform.

It took three years' work and thought to complete the calf stanchions and mangers now in vogue at the college. While the principle of the stanchion is not new, special attention has been placed to the application and adjustment of the features. The appliance can be arranged to accommodate a calf from birth to twelve months of age. Calves are confined in the stanchions at feeding time only. Provided they are given access to outdoor yardage the stanchion method of feeding permits a maximum number of calves to be kept in a minimum amount of space and in a clean, healthy and thrifty condition. The average size of the four calf pens in the dairy barn, including manger space, is 15 by 12 feet. Each pen accommodates eight calves up to five or six months of age. There are two pens 10 by 15 feet in the grade herd barn, accommodating six calves each.

The bottom of the manger is eighteen inches wide, consisting of two inch hemlock, which is placed six inches above the floor. The front of the manger is built on rather than against the bottom, and it thus leaves the inside bottom measurement of the manger sixteen inches. When feeding, the calf's neck is eight inches above the bottom. It is thought unwise to have the part of the manger over which the calf feeds higher than fifteen inches above the floor, and even this is too high for a newborn animal. Next to the feed alley the manger is approximately two feet high, and the slope of the floor gives a decided advantage in placing and removing buckets while the calf is fastened to the stanchion.

"The manger should be partitioned off every two feet," says R. S. Shaw, dean of agriculture. "Even this should be the minimum width, because, while it gives ample room for young calves, it does not give sufficient space for the roughage of the older ones. A more perfect manger than the one now in use here is, in my mind, hard to find."

The bull barn is 25 by 94 feet and contains eight box stalls 10 by 16 feet and a feed room of the same size. There is an alley entrance to each stall, a four foot door being fastened with a wooden bar. Over each door there is a hinged door 2 by 2 feet through which feed can be thrown from the alley. A cable is used in handling vicious animals. It stretches from the feed manger to a post opposite. A chain with snap attached is suspended from a ring running on the cable. When the animal is loosened from the stall in the morning the snap is attached to a band, and it is then allowed the freedom of the pen. This method is not only humane, but it is absolutely safe.

Pumpkins For Feed.

It is surprising what a quantity of pumpkins can be grown on a small plot of ground and yet more surprising to know their real value as a food for stock, says a breeder. We would be at a loss in feeding out our fall lot of hogs each fall were it not for the pumpkins we mix in for variety. They are great feed for brood sows, correcting that ever "too much corn" feed usually fed by farmers. We feed a great many to our milk cows, and even the horses relish them. We save out seed in the fall from the best specimens, wash and dry them and store in a can or other mouse proof vessel. We would rather try to raise hogs without slop than without pumpkins.

How to Care For Leather Furniture.

Most housekeepers regard their leather furniture as a thing to be dusted only and left to its fate. There never was a greater mistake. The leather needs constant and intelligent care to keep it from drying out and tearing into shreds or turning to powder. All leather needs care and furniture covering most of all. In the first place, don't be afraid to apply a little soap and water to it to wash off the dust and dirt. Use soapy water, a sponge and a paint brush to get into the folds of the leather and the crevices. The soapy water will darken the leather, but only temporarily. When the leather is dry here is a preparation that will do it good. It's simply just one part sweet oil and four parts benzine. The oil will darken the leather a little, but it will soon dry in and leave it the original color. The surplus oil may be removed by rubbing. Rub into the grain of the leather. This treatment four times a year will preserve both the life and the elasticity of leather furniture covering.

How to Make Pastry Shells.

An easy way to bake shells of pastry for pies or tarts is to fit the pastry over an inverted pie or gem pan. Prick the crust with a fork in several places to keep it close to the pan. Bake in a quick oven. It can easily be turned on to a plate for filling and has the advantage that any desired depth of shell can be easily managed.

Horton's Bay Grange No. 833.

Horton Bay grange met in regular session Friday evening, July 2, and was called to order by Worthy Overseer J. C. Wallace. After the regular order of business, Charlie Friend was instructed in the mysteries of the third and fourth degrees.

A short program was given and grange closed in form.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Deer Lake Grange met at the hall July 1. Meeting called to order by Worthy Master T. S. Barber.

There were only about twenty members present on account of busy times and meeting being held on Thursday evening instead of the regular meeting night, as we celebrated the 3rd for the 4th of July. A fine time was reported at both grange and dance.

Our grange has been dull for some time as our Master J. H. Sudman, was unable to be with us on account of sickness in his family. When he saw it was impossible for him to be present he resigned and T. S. Barber was elected Master for the rest of the year. With him as Master we once more expect to climb the ladder to success, and hope that all other granges will try and visit us and help us in our great success of once more making Deer Lake Grange among the list of popular granges.

Grange was closed in due form with a good program to open again July 17.

Matrimony and Muffins

Have a closer relation in reality than they have in epigram. To manage a husband requires skill and discretion and patience. To make muffins requires these same qualities of mind. Furthermore, the woman who does one can usually do the other. A Circuit judge of Cook County who heard thirty-eight divorce cases in one morning, wearily said that he thought the solution of the divorce problem might be a square meal for both parties.

But the art of managing husbands has filled libraries of books—usually written by women who have never had husbands—the art of making muffins may be acquired in a day and explained in a paragraph. The patience necessary demands that you take your time in making the measurements. The skill is in mixing your batter correctly, so that it won't be too stiff. The discretion, which is most important of the three, is in the choice of the ingredients, especially of the baking powder.

The best muffins are made only of the best baking powder. No substitutes and no inferior article will accomplish the result. Perfection is attained only by the use of perfect materials. And the only perfect baking powder is Cahmet, which received the Highest Award at the World's Pure Food Exposition. It is perfect in quality and moderate in price.

TREATMENT OF FALSE HAIR.

How to Clean It Properly and Make It Last and Look Better.

False hair will last longer and look better if properly cared for, and as the best quality is not inexpensive and should be selected it behooves a woman, now that quantities of it are worn, to know how to make it last.

To begin with, then, a cheap quality is the most expensive, for after little wear it becomes either scrubby looking or so harsh that it cannot be used. Cheap pieces lose color and either streak or fade quickly.

One of the most important and difficult details of caring for ringlets is to keep them free from dust. Like hair growing on the head, they hold impurities and unless cleansed will grow dull looking and old. In their care a soft brush is an essential, and every night when the pieces are removed they should be stroked lightly, but thoroughly, with bristles in such a way that the dust is taken out. This should not be omitted even for one night, for once the switch or puffs become dust laden they are difficult to clean.

No false hair, when not being worn, should be exposed to the light, for sun and air will absorb its dressing unnecessarily. After being worn it must never be put away until it has been well smoothed.

To wash a switch or puffs is practically impossible, but as cleansing is necessary at intervals cornmeal should be applied. The meal must be rubbed gently, but thoroughly, through the strands, and then, fastening the top of the piece securely, a long bristle brush must be applied vigorously to remove the grains. Before this, however, the long hair must be rubbed between the hands, so the meal will absorb the dust.

Once in a long while, perhaps every two months, a little oil rubbed on the false piece will keep it in condition and aid in preserving the dressing. For this glycerin is excellent, and the manner of applying should be carefully followed. Too much of the grease will almost ruin it, while too little will not be effective. When using the glycerin the tip of the piece must be securely fastened where the long hair will hang free. Then a few drops, scented, may be rubbed between the palms of the hands to distribute it evenly and then put directly upon the hair, the only difficulty being that unless care is exercised the grease will adhere to only one part of the switch. This is most apt to be avoided by pressing the palms lightly when first they are put on, making the stroke heavier as the grease is absorbed. Under no circumstances must there be an appearance of grease.

How to Cook Bananas.

Few persons know the convenience and delicate taste of cooked bananas. Few not to bananas born realize their nutritive value. Yellow bananas can be employed in many excellent ways. They are fine plainly boiled in their skins and served with cream or sweet butter for breakfast. They may be boiled with salt pork or baked around a leg of fresh pork (peeled in last instance) or fried and served with broiled lamb kidneys and bacon. Used in this way, both the kidneys and the bananas take on an added flavor by being together. Select fruit which, while ripe, is yet perfectly firm. Ten minutes are required for boiling and five or a little more for frying. The fruit will let you know when it is done, for it falls into a pulp as easy to digest as baby food. Baked bananas may take the place of potatoes on a luncheon table, as they are excellent with all meals. Bake them in their skins in a hot oven and pinch them occasionally with the fingers to see how they are progressing.

How to Make Cleaning Balls.

Cleaning balls are easily made and cost less than if bought of a chemist. To make them take half a pound of dry fuller's earth and moisten it with a little lemon juice. Then add half an ounce of finely pulverized pearlash, and make all into a thick paste. Form into little balls, and dry them in the sun or at some distance from a fire. In a few hours the balls will be ready for use. When required the stained cloth should be moistened with warm water and rubbed with a ball. Let the garment dry, then brush off the powder, and wash it out if necessary.

How to Wash Delicate Materials.

To wash silks and pongees and dimities so that they will look like new wash them in bran water. For one waist take a pint of bran, put in a white muslin bag and pour enough hot water into the basin containing the bran to wash the waist. When the water is cool enough to bear the hands in squeeze the bag several times in the water. Add a teaspoonful of borax and wash the waist in the prepared water, rinse and when dry iron on the wrong side. No starch is needed, for the bran will stiffen the waist sufficiently.

How to Remove an Ink Stain.

A little pure alcohol of any kind is splendid for removing stains caused by a typewriter ribbon. Rub it well into the fingers as soon as possible after they are stained. Afterward wash carefully in warm water and plenty of really good soap. If you have no pure alcohol try methylated spirit.

How to Clean Raincoats.

Mackintosh coats which have become hard and rigid may be easily cleaned with lime and water and made to look as good as new. A handful of the best gray lime should be dissolved in half a bucketful of water and the mixture applied to the stiffened parts by means of a piece of sponge. This should be repeated at the end of three or four hours.

Farm and Garden

PROTECTION FOR SQUASH.

Two Practical and Inexpensive Plans to Prevent Ravages of Borers.

The most difficult matter about growing squashes is to protect the vines from the various insects that prey upon them. This is especially true in the home garden and small plots near buildings or near where squashes or other vine crops were grown the previous year, because the insects hibernate in the buildings and in the ground near the vines they fed upon for the winter. For the striped cucumber beetle there is no poison or repellent that will prove effective and satisfactory at all times. The box plant protector shown in the cut is 12 by 12 inches and six inches high, covered with wire screen, which is set over the hill when the seeds are planted and left on until the plants get too large. Protectors of this type may be made of old pine boxes or other odds and ends, and they need not cost over 5 cents apiece, even if the lumber must be purchased. Another style, in the second cut, is made entirely of wire screen. The one shown was made by cutting a circular piece of wire screen twenty-four inches in diameter and then folding over a section, amounting to one-fourth to one-third of the circumference, and fastening with short pieces of small wire pushed through the meshes and the ends twisted together. It gives a good idea as to how these protectors are made. At retail prices the protectors made this way will cost 8 cents each, but they have this advantage over the box style—the light and air have full access to the plants, as a glance at the ink bottle in the wire plant protector will prove, the bottle being placed in the center of the protector. These pictures were taken early in April, and the ink bottle had to do duty in place of the plants. Another advantage of this style is that the protectors may be nested together and stored easily when no longer needed. If given a coating of coal tar or some weather proof paint occasionally these protectors should last for years. Some of the smallest beetles can crawl through the meshes of wire screen, but one can easily kill the very few that get inside.

The bush or summer squashes if taken when tender and cooked like eggplant are much superior to that well known vegetable. Of course where the bush squashes are about mature and before the borers leave the stem to hibernate in the soil the vines should be pulled and destroyed to kill the borer. This should be done about Aug. 1; the time varies with the latitude. Spraying the first four or five joints of the squash vine (not the leaves) with kerosene emulsion is a good plan, as also are catching and killing the adult moth, which is very conspicuous and easily found when once known. However, the trap crop plan will be found to be the most practical and satisfactory method of dealing with the squash borer. In using the above described screen protectors it is well to remember that the soil should be drawn up about the edges of the box or wire screen and firmed down so as to be sure that none of the bugs can crawl under the sides.

FARM WORK PAYS WELL

Investment Concerns Are Forced to Advertise in the Northwest.

During the last few months it has become harder and harder to secure farm mortgages upon which to loan money. The farming districts recently have been actually scoured for farmers needing ready money. The situation is such that, with plenty of money available to lend on farms and no farmers in need of that money, the usual rate of 6 per cent is being pared down to 5½ and even as low as 5 per cent.

This at least is the outline of existing conditions, particularly with reference to Minnesota and the two Dakotas, given by Grant Van Sant, who has been active in securing mortgages in this connection for a farm loan concern.

Whatever the farmer may be doing with himself, he is not asking for money. He may not be spending as much at the general store; he may not be restocking his farm or replacing his machinery, but at any rate he scorns proffered loans, even at low rates. It is not thought, however, that he is neglecting to improve his plant or is foregoing the pleasure of elevating his standard of living somewhat. Such abnegation would hardly be consistent in a person with a big balance in the bank and a check book in his pocket.

The gradual development of this situation has been coming on for some time. Two or three years ago farmers needed money occasionally and gladly offered mortgages. Gradually this diminished little by little until now, except in the case of extraordinary circumstances, the worker of a farm not only is indifferent to investors, but is seeking to do a little investing on his own account.

Farm loan institutions, it is said, first worked through Minnesota offering money. Then came the two Dakotas. Now agents of these concerns are going through Montana in the unpleasant hope of finding some unfortunate possibly who wants "to mortgage the farm." Their quest has not been particularly encouraging.

As indicative of the paucity of available mortgages a happening in a well known farm loan company may be cited. An eastern investor came in and called for $100,000 in farm loans, secured by mortgages, which must be delivered within a year. Simultaneously he wrote out a check for $15,000 and asked for immediate investment. The company was able to place only $4,000 of it and now has gone to the expedient of advertising for mortgages.

Tie a ring at each end of a rope, the distance being just sixty-six feet between them. Tie a piece of colored cloth exactly in the middle of this. One acre of ground will be four times the length and two and a half times the width, or the equal of sixteen rods one way and ten rods the other, making the full acre 160 square rods. Keep the rope dry so it will not stretch. A rod is 16½ lineal feet. An acre is 4,840 square yards, or 43,560 square feet.

BUILDING OF GOOD ROADS

VanPelt Gives his Ideas on Road Building

PARTICULARLY THE ROAD CRITICIZED

Near Norwood In Former Issues of Local Papers.

Men Differ in Opinions—Thinks it Was a Mistake to Change the Road from the Old Roadbed.

Charlevoix, Michigan.
July 12, 1909.

My Dear COURIER:—

It surely was with great pleasure that I read in last week's COURIER the remarks made by your Supervisor, and, right here, I will say that there is no man in the township for whom I have a greater respect than for Supervisor John H. Bugbee, but I must join issue with him on the road question. I also know that all men may differ and be honest in their opinions, I know I am in this matter and believe he is also.

My opinion is this, that it was a mistake in changing the road at the VanArnon hill. While the snow drifts there obstruct travel this could have been remedied by cutting away the bank on the west side of the road at the top of the hill, using the dirt thus removed and filling over a wide culvert across the creek and the same thing could have been done on the hill north of the creek thereby making a much easier grade for both hills over which much heavier loads could have been hauled in both directions.

We have a good solid road bed on the old road north of the hill and better material with which to make the road than we had on the new. It also would have been a much safer road than the present one with its sharp curve at the bottom of the hill which I must confess is regarded as being very dangerous, particularly on a dark night. The reservoir at the bottom of the hill will always be expensive to keep in order, especially just west of the reservoir, because the water will seep through and undermine the road bed making holes and "Thank you mams" galore. It will also require a good deal of gravel each year to keep this as well as the other place along the Santos line in good condition. The top of the Van Arnon hill, because of the clay under the soil, making it impossible for a team to haul an empty wagon, has had to be covered with gravel leaving it now about the same grade as the hill on the old road and this is the particular piece of road which really caused the auto men, who have been stalled there several times, to complain and gave it the notoriety this piece of road has and even this could have been avoided had the road been graveled last spring at the proper time, and, had it been done then, I claim it could have been done at a much less cost. Then the gravel would not have had to be screened and the coarse stones in each load could have been raked ahead and covered by the next load and so on to the end and in the course of a month or two the road would have been a passably good one.

As the road now looks to me, the gravel and much of the clay at the top of the VanArnon hill will have to be hauled down to the flat portion outside the reservoir and the hill be regraded, also a new outlet for the reservoir which should be changed from the bottom of the hill where it fills in with every rain, to about 75 or 100 feet farther south and then a deep, dug ditch dug for several rods in order to carry off the water, as there should be no water standing on the east side of the road, and these changes surely will have to be done before a good road can ever be made of it and, when all is said and done, we will still have a very dangerous drive way, and don't you forget it, when you have been to Ellsworth.

Very truly yours,
GEORGE H. VANPELT.

AT THE ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING

Bridge Re-elected—Drinking Fountains to be Installed.

Estimated Amount to be Raised by Tax $10,500—Bonding Resolution Carries—$20,205.29 Expended Last Year

Monday night the annual school meeting was held at the the McKinley building. The attendance is small, when we take into consideration the great interest involved, only about fifty being present.

The meeting was called to order by Dr. G. W. Cronter, chairman of the board. The proposition to vote on the issuing of the nine thousand dollars in bonds was explained by Dr. Cronter and H. L. Iddings, A. F. Bridge and William Cook were appointed as the election board on the bonding proposition on which forty-one votes were cast of which one was defective and forty in its favor.

The treasurer and secretary's reports showed a balance on hand of $1,119.67 and expenditures during the year, of $20,205.29. The estimated amount to be raised by tax, was $10,500. On motion of R. W. Kane it was decided to raise a tax of eight mills for school purposes the next school year.

On motion of F. N. Chapel, after some discussion, the board was instructed to place a drinking fountain in each school building for the use of the pupils instead of cups.

On motion of A. L. Fitch the board was instructed to have the financial report printed and placed on the desks for the inspection of the voters at the next annual meeting.

The next thing in order was the election of two members of the board in place of A. F. Bridge and G. W. Cronter, H. S. Harshta, Raymond Bentley and N. R. Washburn were appointed tellers. A. F. Bridge was elected to succeed himself, receiving nearly every vote cast. Dr. Cronter announced that he was not a candidate, believing that in the twelve years he had served as a member of the board, he had performed his whole duty as a citizen.

The names of Hon. A. Butlars, William Cook, R. W. Kane, E. W. Coulter, Dr. A. M. Wilkinson and F. E. Wood were suggested. On the first ballot Dr. A. M. Wilkinson received twenty votes and E. W. Coulter fifteen out of the fifty cast, the rest being scattered; the second ballot gave Coulter fourteen and Wilkinson twenty-four, out of a total of forty-nine; the third ballot gave Wilkinson thirty-five and he was declared elected.

Dr. Cronter retires after twelve years service, during which time he has devoted himself unsellishly to the up-building of Charlevoix's school system. The new member, Dr. Wilkinson, is a young man of hustling abilities and, if a change were to be made, no better choice could have been the result.

WORK OF PROBATE JUDGE

Will be Much Increased Next Month by New Law.

Epileptic or feeble-minded persons for commitment to state institutions will be disposed of through the probate court, according to the law passed by the recent legislature, and to that extent the business of Probate Judge Harris will be increased. The law will take effect in August.

Such cases are now in the hands of superintendents of the poor, boards of supervisors or other officials who might become interested in them. Under the new law two physicians will be appointed to examine the mental condition of the subject and report back to the court. A hearing will then be set, at which the prosecuting attorney is to be present and a judicial investigation made, every intent of the law being, apparently, that the patient shall be given treatment and disposition.

The cost of such hearing will be borne, under the law, by the county in which they are held. After the county patient shall have been sent to the home for the epileptic or feeble-minded at Lapeer, the cost of his support is to be borne by the state, unless the relatives or other persons are able to pay the expense.

Just now there are said to be 500 applicants for commitment to the Lapeer institution, many of which cannot be complied with because of the over-crowded condition of the place.

A VAST HARVEST

Will Be Reaped By Farmers of the United States

Reports of Agricultural Department Indicate Great Value

The greatest crop of cereals ever raised in the United States is growing to maturity, according to indications in the July report of the department of agriculture. A gain of 722,000,000 bushels in all grains over the totals of 1908 is promised and the record yield of 1908 will be exceeded.

Corn for the first time passed the 3,000,000,000 mark, and oats are put at more than 1,000,000,000 bushels. The values of these great farm products, on the basis of probable prices will approach $2,550,000,000. December corn closed on the board of trade last week at 56 cents. Figuring the crop as worth 50 cents to the farmer, wheat at 90, oats at 40, rye at 70, and barley at 50, these totals are obtained:

Corn	$1,358,000,000
Wheat	623,000,000
Oats	412,000,000
Barley	95,000,000
Rye	21,000,000
Total	$2,709,000,000

The report of the department of agriculture does not indicate that there will be a serious shortage of bread stuffs in this country this year, although the figures to date show a considerable loss in winter wheat as compared with a year ago, the estimated loss in round numbers being 41,000,000 bushels.

To a considerable extent this is offset by a larger acreage and a greater yield of spring wheat which brings the total indicated crop of wheat up to 683,000,000 bushels, as compared with 664,000,000 bushels at the same time in 1907.

The preliminary estimate of the area of corn planted is placed at 109,000,000 acres, an increase of 7,218,000 acres or 7.1 per cent as compared with the final estimate of last year's acreage. The average condition of this crop on July 1 was 86.3, as compared with 82.8 a year ago and suggests a crop of 3,117,000,000 bushels. This is the largest indicated yield in the history of the agricultural department.

It is estimated that Michigan will yield 1,976,000 bushels of corn.

PUBLIC DOMAIN COMMISSION

The new public domain commission created by the legislature met Thursday and organized as follows:

Chairman—A. J. Doherty, Clare.

Secretary—A. C. Carton, deputy land commissioner.

The law provides that the commission may re-forest all land not fit for agricultural purposes.

FARMER'S INSTITUTE

Executive Committee Held Meeting at Court House Friday

To Decide on Time and Place of Meeting—Roundup at Charlevoix

Friday the executive committee of the Farmer's Institute society held a meeting at the Court House to make arrangements for the institute next winter. Those present were President Mears, of Boyne Falls, Secretary Newville of Boyne City and Fred Wagner of Boyne River, Hugh R. Miller of Boyne City, W. J. Saunders of Wilson, Elmer Ingalls of Marion and R. S. Shapton of Charlevoix.

It was decided to ask for two weeks of work in this county, during the latter part of November and first part of December. In this vicinity it is planned to hold one day institutes at Maple Grove, Barnard and Ironton. The roundup will be held at Charlevoix, the first Friday and Saturday in December.

Glenn M. Dullois, Elmer Ingalls and R. S. Shapton were appointed as a local committee to make arrangements for the Charlevoix meeting. It was also decided to hold a woman's section in connection with the roundup. Mrs. Elmer Ingalls being chosen as chairman.

The importance of these meetings to this county cannot be overestimated as the development of our agriculture is now at full tide, and the attendance should be a large one. Live topics such as the maintenance of soil fertility, sugar beet growing, dairying, alfalfa, rural schools, sheep husbandry, etc, were chosen as the topics to be assigned to the state speakers. Local men and women who have made a success of their occupation will also be assigned to talk on these subjects, making the institutes very valuable to everybody whether engaged in farming or not.

VEGETABLE DIET FOR SUMMER

State Board of Health Has Issued Bulletin on the Subject.

The state board of health is out with a bulletin preaching the simple diet for the summer weather, placing the ban on meat and saying "Much trouble and sickness is caused by improper food and drink. Many use the same diet in summer as in the winter and wash it down with beer and wine. Nature provides us with a variety of grains, fruits and vegetables; these with plenty of cold water to drink constitutes the proper food for hot weather. Eggs and a very limited amount of meat may be used. But meat, meat, meat, three times a day is killing people. Cut out your meat and see how much better you feel at the end of the month."

LARGE CROWD FROM HAMMOND, IND.

Are Planning On Having the Leading Camp In the City

Churches and Ladies of Indiana City are Taking An Active Interest in the Matter Will Have Unique Camp.

Next week will see the coming of the boys to Boy City. Manager Brown and assistants are hustling to get the grounds in shape for their reception. Allready they have received word that companies of boys have been formed in the following cities, among others who are anxiously awaiting the time to start for Charlevoix and National Boy City, Chicago, Homer, Illinois; New York City; Hammond, Indiana; St. Louis, Missouri; Jackson, Lansing, Big Rapids, Manistee, Hastings, Elgin, Illinois; East Chicago, Indiana; Salt Lake City, Traverse City, Cheboygan, Petoskey, Boyne City.

These boys are the best in the land, High School Cadets, Sunday School Class Clubs, Y. M. C. A. and other organizations. To show how enthusiastic the boys in other cities are over the project, the following from the Hammond Indiana Times is of interest.

"The local interest in the "Boy City" to be established by Judge Wallis Brown, is growing in Hammond and it is understood the Hammond Colony will be one of the largest in the city. Through a magnificent offer made by George C. Locklin, of the Enterprise Bed Co., the Hammond boys will make the trip at remarkably small expense. In a letter to Rev. J. E. Snook of the first Presbyterian Church, Mr. Locklin has offered to furnish every boy who goes to Charlevoix from this city, with a tent, cot and camp stool. Mr. Locklin has also arranged for a fine flag pole which is to be erected in front of the Hammond camp. He will purchase a fine flag to adorn the pole.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the First Presbyterian Church is planning to pay the expenses of one boy to enable him to become a citizen of this famous boy's city."

Success with Alfalfa.

Bruce Odell, on the Morning Star farm, near Cadillac has four acres of alfalfa from which he has already cut two and one-half ton to the acre and the second crop will be ready in August.

Several Charlevoix county farmers are experimenting with alfalfa this year and are enthusiastic in the possibilities of the crop for this region, as the soil seems to be well adapted for this great crop.

Gradually this county is proving its adaptibility for the growing of many money crops, and diversified farming.

BOY CITY NOTICE

SCHOOL LAWS OF MICHIGAN

Several Interesting Questions Are Answered

ARTICLE IN GRATIOT COUNTY HERALD.

Written by Commissioner Pike of that County.

Salaries of Officers and Their Removal from Office, Sanitary Condition and Care of Buildings

In the last issue of the Gratiot County Herald, Commissioner of Schools Pike, of that county, answers several questions of importance in regard to the school laws of this state. The article follows:

The legal voters at an annual meeting have the right to vote to pay the tuition of any pupils residing in their district, providing a vote is taken to spread a sufficient amount to pay the same. This is not compulsory this year but will be compulsory another year.

1. Who are legal voters on all questions at district meetings? Ans: Those citizens (male or female) who are twenty-one years of age and have property assessed for school purposes are qualified to vote on all questions while all others who are twenty-one years of age and have children included in the school census are qualified to vote on all questions not involving the raising of money. In all cases the voter must have been a resident of the district at least three months previous to the meeting. Any person who votes illegally can be punished by law.

2. Who are qualified to hold school district offices in said district? Ans: Any person who has property assessed for school taxes and is an American citizen is eligible to such offices, either male or female.

3. If an officer removes from the district, does the office become vacant without further action on the part of the district board? Ans: It does. It is the duty of the board to fill such vacancy within ten days after such officer has removed.

4. Who regulates the salary of the district officers? Ans: In all districts having less than fifty scholars on the census the board may vote themselves salaries of not more than $25 all together, while in districts of from fifty to one hundred children on the census they can vote themselves of not to exceed $50 in any one year. When the board has voted its members said salaries they must order said amounts spread on the tax roll. The annual meeting may vote more salary if they deem it necessary but they cannot vote a less salary than stated above.

5. If the other members fail to act after the removal of an officer from the district and permits the removed officer to act, what effect has the removed officer's acts? Ans: If a removed officer continues to act after removal from the district, his acts are not binding in any way and he has acted without any right to act. The other officers may transact business without him however.

6. Whose duty it is to furnish the necessary appendages, as required by law? Ans: It is the duty of the Director to furnish them and the board must pay for them when he orders them. If the Director neglects or refuses to purchase them, he may be removed from office.

7. Whose duty is it to see that the school house is in proper condition and repair before school begins? Ans: It is the duty of the director on behalf of the board. Schoolhouses should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected at least once a term before the school begins in the Fall, Winter and Spring. Outhouses should be cleaned as regularly as the school building. Parents have a right to insist on the cleanliness of the buildings.

The Blossoms of the Beatitudes

"Sister, art thou weary?" The question came from the careful housekeeper in the house at Bethany where dwelt the gentle Mary with her sister Martha and her brother Lazarus.

Diverse were the three in their tastes and habits, but with what a cord of love were they bound together! Martha, the eldest, had the many house cares upon her, while Mary loved more the studious and meditative side of life, but the strong affection of both sisters twined its many tendrils around the brother, Lazarus.

Their home stood in the midst of a garden where bloomed many flowers whose fragrance filled the air, and near the door grew an old olive tree which provided a home for the birds and a welcome shade from the rays of the summer's sun.

"Sister, art thou weary?"

Again came the question, and Mary turned to her sister with a faraway look in her eyes, for she had just heard the new Rabbi speak, and her thoughts were still intent upon his words. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." These words so claimed her attention that all thoughts of bodily fatigue were forgotten.

"Would that thou hadst been with us, sister, when we heard the words of the Teacher, for they were like unto the balm of Gilead, like the odor of sweet-smelling spices that come from the far-off islands of the sea! Lazarus is now sitting at his feet and will seek to bring him to our home tonight to abide in the prophet's chamber, for it seems he has nowhere to lay his head. Come into the garden with me, sister, and I will tell thee some of the wonderful things he has spoken, and some of the thoughts that came to me as I listened to his gracious words."

So under the old olive tree in the garden the sisters sat while the sun slowly sank behind the western hills and the beautiful moon transformed the world with a magic silver light.

A marvelous quiet and peace filled the mind of Mary. At length she spoke:

"Sister, I cannot tell thee all I have heard him say, but as he talked, his words have reminded me of sweet music and, above all, of the beautiful flowers in our garden and on the hillside and in the valley—the blossoms that are so dear to us and that give us so many happy hours.

"As he sat on the mountainside speaking to the multitude, he said: 'Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven,' and as he spoke, it seemed to me I saw him glance at the lilies of the field growing wild in the valley and giving a touch of color—the very glow of yonder sunset—to the stretch of plain below. They are so frail, and yet so tenacious of life, blooming year after year in the stony ground. Those dear pink flowers! Do they not teach us a lesson? Do they not tell us to do our best, even our little best, and so to bring a bit of sweetness into the waste places?

"He said: 'Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted,' and I thought of those flowers that bloom here in our garden, purple and blue, yellow and white—'heartsease.' Brother calls them 'thoughts,' and I like the name, for they always seem to talk to me and they always bring me thoughts of comfort and thoughts of hope. When the silver cord was loosed and the golden bowl was broken and our mother left us, did we not read in the parchment the words, 'As one whom his mother comforteth,' and did we not read about the 'garland for ashes' and the 'oil of joy for mourning?' It was then that these sweet flowers brought to me their message of comfort and hope."

There was silence for a little season, and then Mary continued:

"He said: 'Blessed are pure in heart, for they shall see God.'"

"And what flower did you choose for that saying?" said Martha.

"Can you not feel? Do you not know? Could I think of aught else than the great white water lilies that float on the pond below our garden? There is nothing so fair and beautiful: there is nothing more pure and spotless. And then in the midst of the whiteness is the golden heart—symbol of faith and love. O sister, can we not indeed be like the lilies in the whiteness and purity of our lives and with the golden heart within us, so that when we are permitted to see God we shall be well pleasing in his sight?

"He said also: 'Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled,' and I thought of the myrtle tree that grows everywhere and, without planting or watering, gives us its flowers so white and fragrant. It is the blossom that brought to Queen Esther the name of Hadassah. How that beautiful queen longed to fill the wants of her people, even daring death itself to bring them succor. 'They shall be filled!' Do not his words remind you of those of our own prophet, Isaiah: 'Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come, buy and eat!' and do you not remember the words of King David: 'My soul shall be satisfied, and my mouth shall praise thee'?

The number of automobiles in use in Michigan is apparently multiplying rapidly. During the month of June the secretary of state issued 1,000 auto licenses and 1,200 renewals of old licenses. On the last day of the month 70 new licenses were issued and 128 renewals handed out. Under the provision of the law, which will be in effect until the new act goes into effect January 1, one dollar is the rate for new licenses and fifty cents for renewals. The state highway fund will therefore receive from the licensers and renewals during June $1,600.

HER CONQUERING FAITH

It Overcame the Scheming of a Selfish Sister.

By ARABELLA NASMYTH.

(Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.)

The indisputable fact which has so often sadly surprised people that two and two will not make five was staring the Anslem girls in the face.

It was a year after the death of their father, and many evasions and putting off of the fatal day had gone for naught. They were face to face with the knowledge that they could no longer afford to keep up the old family home and, moreover, must do something to add to their infinitesimal income.

"In some way," said Regina, looking up rather wearily from her pencil and paper—"in some way we've got to have money. We've got to go to work."

Regina was twenty-six, with rebellious dark hair and a firm chin which always amazed people by the dimple they discovered in it. Regina was the one who always did things in the family. Nobody had ever taken time to call her a beauty, so she had never quite realized the fact that she came very close to being one and could devote her leisure to accomplish results.

Of course with Esther it was different. From the time her first fluff of golden hair had made itself manifest and her big blue eyes had first glanced appealingly at humanity it had been decided that Esther was a beauty, and the decision had clung to her through life, though at maturity it is doubtful if she would have been thought more than an ordinarily good looking fresh young girl had not those around her been so educated in the other view.

But as a beauty Esther had always been waited on and put forward, and even when time went on and girlish petulance and fickleness and caprice degenerated into pettishness and selfish inconsiderateness nobody ever expected Esther to do anything but exist.

And now she was thirty, for in spite of belledom the men who had wooed her seriously had been few and, with her aspirations, beneath her consideration. At her sister's flat Esther drew her brows together fretfully.

"Work!" she said. "You are ridiculous! It's all very well for you to talk, but how could I work? What could I do? Regina"—

She hesitated a little, for there was something in the straight-browed face meditatively surveying her as though she were seen for the first time that idle hour of it. "Regina—If you would—it would be very easy for you to place both of us beyond all money cares forever. I'm sure"—

The voice died away before the sparkle of anger in the dark face across the table. Regina lit her lip before she spoke in a pretense of calm. "I won't pretend to misunderstand you," she said. "It's like you to propose or forbid something else than yourself. Understand once for all that I'll never marry Dr. Brightright. He is selfish he has a cruel and vindictive nature with all his surface and polish, and he is sixty years old."

"Also he owns the most magnificent country place in the state and is a millionaire," interposed Esther as her sister stopped. "Really, Regina, for a grown up person you are distressingly silly! I'm sure Dr. Brightright is no worse than lots of men, and think what a—"

"Which you, of course, would share," said Regina coldly. Her face took on an implacable expression as she looked down at her sister. "Understand I'll never marry him. I'll find work to do."

"It's Neal Maxwell!" the older girl flashed angrily. "You'd be glad of the chance if you weren't eating your heart out for a man who threw you over and never cared anything for you! You!"

But Regina had swept from the room, her head in the air, her hands clutching mechanically the papers covered with their rows of discouraging figures.

She was hurt as only a proud person can be hurt, and the sure knowledge deep in her heart that Neal Maxwell had indeed, beyond all doubt, cared for her, in spite of the opinion voiced by her sister and shared, as Regina knew, by nearly all her acquaintances in the town, did not help much in bearing the taunt.

It was a year since Neal had gone abroad as foreign representative for his firm and eleven months since his letters had stopped abruptly, without warning. Her two letters of inquiry bringing no response, pride had stepped in and she had made no further effort to hear from him beyond learning from his firm he was alive and well.

And when he left they had been engaged. She could hardly remember when she and Neal had not intended to marry one another, so many had been the years of their more than friendship. In spite of her indignation and her secret grief, in spite of his mysterious neglect, Regina still clung to the feeling that, wherever he was, whatever had happened, Neal still must care for her just as day must follow night.

And she was of too strong a nature to seek to cover her jilting by accepting the man who had haunted her footsteps for the past year, Dr. Brightright, whom she instinctively disliked and steadily shunned, to the furious exasperation of Esther. This had not been the first difference they had had upon the subject.

This night she was tired, very tired, and discouraged. Sympathy, understanding or help from Esther she felt was less, the shallowness that were her sister's were forcing themselves on her consciousness against her will.

If only Esther had been of a different mold their situation would even now be vastly improved. Encouragement and energy at her elbow would have given Regina the strength of ten. Instead there were bitterness, complaint and reproach weighing her down, and beneath it all the old longing for Neal, the hurt wonder that he could have failed her!

Sunk in her thoughts, absentmindedly making preparation for the night, Regina stood for several minutes staring at what she had uncovered at the bottom of the long utility box on her dresser without a complete realization of what the discovery meant.

First it dawned on her bewildered mind that the box was blue instead of pink, as it should have been. Then if it were blue it belonged in the next room on Esther's dresser. The woman who had swept and cleaned for them that day had probably mixed them. And at the bottom of the blue box, under all the handkerchiefs and ribbons which Regina had mechanically disarranged in her search for a particular ribbon, lay, with a rubber band binding them, the last two letters she had written to Neal Maxwell inquiring as to his silence and which he had, of course, never answered.

Regina leaned against the dresser breathing heavily clutching the letters, trying to think. The face that looked out at her from the mirror was white with excitement. Some one had kept her letters from reaching Neal—some one—

In the doorway stood Esther, still petulant from the scene downstairs. As she walked toward her sister Regina turned and faced her silently, the letters in her outstretched palm.

With a little gasp Esther saw, crumpled into a chair and began to cry in a frightened way.

"I did it for your own good," Esther wailed. "Neal never will be rich, and we want—we need—so much! I thought—I thought you'd see how much better a position Dr. Brightright could give you—I thought you'd forget—I wrote Neal you were going to marry the doctor and hadn't courage—to tell him yourself and that you did not want to hear from him again. I—I got your letters both times by taking them to slip into the drop while I asked you to get stamps or cards at the window—do you remember? I—I did it because I thought you would be happier, Regina!"

The tall, stern girl, standing like an avenging goddess, looking down on the hysterical, weak woman huddled in the chair, did not speak for some minutes.

"Why didn't you destroy them when you got them?" she asked abruptly.

"I didn't dare," wept Esther. "I was afraid it was criminal or something."

The faint flicker of humor which swept Regina's face even in her moment of righteous wrath spread to her generous heart.

"We won't talk about it again, Esther," she said quietly. "You'd better go to bed. And now how I'm going to write to Neal."

Called His Staff.

A young woman of smart wit and striking beauty presided at one of the stalls at a Paris charity bazaar. Among the small crowd which pressed round the fair vender was a young man of much assurance, who gazed upon the girl with freedom and affected to admire the various fancy articles exposed for sale, but bought nothing.

"What will you please to buy?" asked Mademoiselle, with an exquisite smile.

"Oh," replied the young dandy, with a languishing look, "what I most wish to buy is unhappily not for sale."

"Tell me what you wish," she responded.

"Oh, no; I dare not declare my wishes."

"Nevertheless let me know what you wish to buy," persisted the fair saleswoman.

"Well, then, since you demand it, I should like a ringlet of your glossy black hair."

She manifested no embarrassment at the bold request, but with a pair of scissors immediately clipped off one of her beautiful locks and handed it to the astonished youth, remarking that the price was only 500 francs.

Her audacious admirer was thunderstruck with the demand, but dared not demur, as by this time a group had collected, and were listening to the conversation. So he took the hair, paid over the money and left the hall.

The Man in the Rain.

"Men," said a fashionable tailor, "are much more particular about their clothes than women, though few people realize this fact. Take a man in a light gray suit caught in a shower. Does he go dithdy on, heedless of the elements? No. He seeks the nearest shelter and remains there till the downpour has stopped absolutely. But it is his straw hat that a man takes most care to preserve. I have seen men in pouring torrents hurrying along bareheaded, their straw hats carefully concealed beneath their coats. Did you ever see a woman go to those lengths? Often a man caught in a shower carries his hat sort of casually at arm's length at his side, as if he was doing it unconsciously, don't you know. And how often do we see them holding newspapers over their hats. Ever see a woman do that? No. Somehow women seem to be able to go through a shower without making conspicuous figures of themselves. They are always serene, never trembled, and they never seem to get as wet as men do."—London Answers.

Few things are impossible in themselves. It is not so much means as perseverance that is wanting to bring them to a successful issue.

Maintaining the Highways.

The New York State Automobile association has labored a bill before the legislature at Albany which provides for a tax on automobiles graduated as to weight, the proceeds to be devoted to the maintenance of the improved highways of the state. On the basis of present registration an annual income of $500,000 is expected from this source. The income from automobile registration fees in Massachusetts for eighteen months amounted to $415,000, which was used in road maintenance last year. But the state has built 750 miles of improved road, which require for proper maintenance an expenditure of $300 a mile a year. It is estimated that a law patterned after that recommended by the New York Automobile association would provide a sufficient income in Massachusetts to maintain the improved roads without a specific legislative appropriation.

"No! no! I am going now. You shall not hold me back. You don't understand. The man I love is up there perhaps surrounded by savages. Let me go, I tell you! If he is dying I shall die by his side! Let me go! Would you have me strike you?" She turned on him like an angry goddess and strove to wrest herself from his grip. At that instant Tollemache and Frascuelo, the only survivors of the deadly struggle forward, were driven back by a rush of Indians. They caught sight of others leaping down the bridge companion.

"To the salon, Courtenay!" roared Tollemache, clearing a path for himself with an iron bar which he swung in both hands. Followed by Frascuelo, he jumped inside the salon gangway. Four savages followed, two entering through the doorway behind him. One raised a hatchet-like implement and would have brained the Englishman had not Christobal whipped out his revolver and shot him through the body, releasing the girl's wrist in his flurry. The Indian pitched headlong down the stairs, falling limply at Elsie's feet. She stooped over the terrifying figure and seized the man's weapon. Her eyes shone with a strange light. She felt her arms tingle. A wonderful power seemed to flow through her body, like a gush of strong wine. She was assured that she, unaided, could beat down all the puny, despicable creatures who barred the path to her lover.

She vaulted over the writhing form of the Alaculof and made to climb the stairs, but Christobal, admirably cool, fired again and brought another Indian to his knees. The second Indian's fall caused Frascuelo to trip, and the Chilean, locked rib to rib with a somewhat sturdy opponent, rolled into the salon. Elsie drew back just in time or the two men would have knocked her down. Even as they were turning over on the steep steps she saw Frascuelo's knife flash. At the foot of the stairs the Indian lay still, and Frascuelo tried to rise. She helped him gladly. The awfulness of this killing no longer appalled her. Each dead or disabled Indian was one less obstacle between her and Courtenay. A third time the revolver barked, but Christobal missed. It did not matter greatly, as Tollemache had shortened his bar, using it twice as a miner delves at a rock. But the doctor did not forget that he had only three cartridges left, two of which were bespoken long before the fight began.

At last, then, the way was clear. Elsie would have mounted the stairs, but an appealing hand detained her.

"I cannot walk, senorita. My leg has given way. And we can do no good there. They are all down."

A death chill gripped her heart at Frascuelo's words.

"All down!" she repeated, white lipped.

"I think so," said he blankly. The man was dazed by the ordeal through which he had passed.

As if to answer and refute him, Joey's hysterical yelp sounded from a point close at hand, and they distinctly heard Courtenay's bold command:

"This way, Boyle! Rally to the bridge!"

"You are mistaken!" shrieked Elsie, wrenching herself free from the Chilean's grasp. Nothing short of violence would stop her now. Tollemache darted out into the darkness, and she mounted the steps two at a time. Christobal panted by her side. He was determined not to be parted from her. If necessary, he would drag her away from any doubtful encounter on the battlefield of the deck. But his blood was aflame now with the lust of combat. He wished to die fighting rather than by a suicide's bullet.

The Indian pitched headlong down the stairs, falling limply at Elsie's feet.

They were not yet clear of the doorway when an extraordinary burst of cheering and shouts in English and Spanish greeted their wonderful exit. The sounds seemed to come from the sea, from some point very far from the ship. A boat hailing arose at one of the Indians. Courteney, clubbing his gun, rushed past, with the dog at his heels, and ran up the jerking companion. They could follow his progress by the yells toward the port side, and they heard his assured cry:

"What boats are those?"

"Your own, captain," came the answering yell, plainly audible above the din.

"That is Mr. Gray!" screamed Elsie, and she, too, ran toward the bridge, with the doctor close behind.

"Shut every canoe you can get along side of and knock those fellows on the head who are swimming!" roared Courteney, who was so carried away by the fierceness of the fight from which he had just emerged that he would have given the same directions to the archangel Michael had that warrior spirit come to his aid.

He seemed to have eyes in the back of his head, he turned so suddenly when Elsie neared him.

"Ah, thank God, you are safe!" he said, drawing her to him for an instant. "Stand there, dear heart!"

He placed her in the forward angle of the bridge rail and leaned out over the side. She understood that she must not speak to him then, but a great joy overwhelmed her, and her eyes melted into tears.

Christobal, who had missed no word of Elsie's frenzied protest in the salon nor failed to note the manner of Courtenay's greeting, seemed to take the collapse of his own aspirations with the unmoved stoicism he had displayed in the face of danger.

"The ship's boats"— he began, but the captain raised his gun and fired twice aft alongside the side of the vessel. Cries of pain and a good deal of splashing in the sea proved that he had expedited the departure of several Indians who were perched on the rails beyond the reach of Walker's steam jet.

"The ship's boats," went on Christobal calmly, "have turned up in some mysterious manner, just in the nick of time. A few minutes more and they would have been too late."

When a more extended knowledge of all that had happened, joined to a nicer adjustment of the time factor in events, enabled Elsie to realize the extraordinary deliverance from death which she had been vouchsafed that night she began to appreciate the service which Christobal rendered her in discussing matters with such nonchalance.

Barely a minute had elapsed since they were in the throes of a struggle which promised to be the last act of a tragedy. The ship was then overrun by a horde of howling savages, maddened by the desperate resistance offered by the defenders and ruthless as wolves in their lust for destruction. Now the Kansas was clear of every bedaubed Alaculof save the many who cumbered the decks either dead or so seriously wounded that they could not move. These men were so near akin to animals that this condition implied ultimate collapse save in a few instances of fractured skulls and broken limbs. From the final stages of a hopeless butchery the survivors of the ship's company were suddenly transferred to a position of reasonable security. It was not that the arrival of the ship's boats meant such an accession of fighting strength that the Alaculofs could not have made sure of victory. Gray and his companions were badly armed. The Indians remaining in the canoes could have pelted them to shreds in a few minutes. Even those on the ship had the power to resist any attempt by the newcomers to gain the decks. But the superstitious savages had already screwed themselves up to an act of unusual daring in delivering a night attack, and the appearance of boats filled with men of whose fighting qualities they had already such a lively experience quite demoralized them. They fled without attempting a counter assault.

At last the sounds of conflict died away. The black waters closed over the dead; the last swimmer vanished into the silence. The spasmodic barking of the dog, the groaning of men lying on the decks and the shouts exchanged between Courtenay and Gray for the guidance of the boats were the only remaining symbols of the fiercest crisis which had yet befallen the Kansas.

Elsie, wandering through a trancelike maze of vivid impressions, awoke with a start to the fact that Courtenay was giving directions for the lowering of the ship's gangway, meanwhile receiving information as to the identity of the boats beneath.

"Mr. Malcolm is in charge of the jolly boat," Gray was saying. "Miss Baring and Mr. and Mrs. Somerville are with him. Miss Baring's maid is dead. Senor Jerrera is in my boat, No. 2. We have been on White Horse Island all this time, but we have seen nothing of the other lifeboat."

That meant that two boats out of those which quitted the ship had arrived thus opportunely. Senor Jerrera was the Spanish mining engineer who had been hustled into one of the craft crammed by the mutineers. And Christobal was saying:

"Well, Miss Maxwell, you and I can look forward to a busy night. The ship is littered with wounded men, and our newly arrived friends must be worn with fatigue."

His smooth, even sentences helped to dispel the terror of management which had come to her aunt. And the first reproachful thought which came to her was that the Spanish doctor had treated her with the kindness of an indulgent parent, for Elsie was far too unselfish not to be alive to the unselfishness of others.

"How good you have been to me!" she murmured. "I can never repay you. I remember now that I said dreadful things to you in the salon. But you did not know what it meant to me when I realized that Captain Courtenay might be fighting even then beneath the blows of those merciless savages. I have not had a chance to tell you that he has asked me to be his wife and I have consented. I love him more than all the world. And you, Dr. Christobal, you who knew my father and mother, who have grown-up daughters of your own, you will wish me happiness?"

It was not easy to hear when it came, although he had guessed the truth already. But he checked back the wrath and despair which surged up in him and said with his stately courtesy:

"I do wish you well, Elsie. No man can hope more earnestly than I that you have made the better choice."

Then he paused with a certain abruptness which reminded her of the change in his manner she had noticed once or twice during recent days and quitted the bridge. She sighed and was sorry for him, knowing that he loved her.

Courtenay, who had been far too busy to pay heed to anything beyond the brief fight between the boats and the canoes, perceived now that the gangway was in position. Lights were shining on both the upper and lower platforms.

He stretched out his hand and drew Elsie to him.

"Are you alone, sweetheart?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Kiss me, then, and go to meet your friends. They will be aboard in less than a minute. Oh, Elsie, I thought I had seen the last of you!"

"Was it so bad as that?" she murmured, a great content soothing her heart and brain at her lover's admission that he was thinking of her during the worst agony of the fray. He gave her a reassuring hug.

With her soul singing a canticle of joy, she passed from the bridge to the lower deck. Mr. Boyle was waiting there, holding a lantern.

"Huh!" he growled when he saw her. "I'raps you'll believe what I tell you before your hair turns gray. If not sooner. Luck! Did any man ever have such luck as the skipper? Why, if he fell off Mong Blong he'd find a circus net rigged up to catch him."

"I agree with you so fully, Mr. Boyle," she whispered, "that I am going to marry him."

"I guessed as much," he answered. "At any rate, I fancied it wouldn't be for want of askin' on his part."

It was a wan and broken spirited Isobel whom Elsie led to her cabin, but notwithstanding her wretched state her eyes quickly took in the orderly condition of the room.

"I left my clothes strewed all over the floor," she said, with a nervousness which Elsie attributed to the hardships she had undergone. "Why did you trouble to pack them away?"

Then Elsie told her of her hunt for the powder box and was so obviously unconcerned about any incident other than the adventures they had both experienced since they parted that Isobel questioned her no further. A bath and a change of clothing worked marvels. Though thin and weak for want of proper food, neither Isobel nor Mrs. Somerville had suffered in health from the exposure and short fare involved by life on the island. It was broad daylight ere they could be persuaded to retire to rest, there was so much to tell and to hear.

Meanwhile the meeting between Tollemache and Gray was full of racial subtleties.

Tollemache, stepping forward to grasp Gray's hand, felt it was incumbent on him to utter the first word.

"Had a pretty rotten time of it, I expect?" said he.

"Poisonous. And you?"

"Oh, fair. Beastly close squeak when you turned up."

Gray became more explicit when Courtenay met him in the chart room, where the table had to be cleared of debris before some glasses and a couple of bottles of champagne could be staged.

"When those blackguards cast off from the ship," he said, "we scudded away in a sort of ocean mill race which threatened to upset us at any moment—in fact, we gave up hope for a time—but, as the boat kept afloat, Mr. Malcolm and I managed to stir up the Chileans, and we got them to steady her with the oars. Some time before daybreak we ran into smooth water and made out land on the port bow. In a few moments we were ashore on a pebbly beach in a place alive with seals. When the sun rose we found we were on a barren island and, what was more, that one of the ship's lifeboats had been upset on a reef which we just missed and had lost all her stores, though the men had scrambled into safety. With the aid of our boat and helped by fine weather we raised the lifeboat and recovered some of her fittings. The water casks and tins of food were hauled up by a chap who could dive well. We have been on that lump of rock until today, when I finally persuaded the others that unless we made for the land which we could see in the dim distance the weather would break and our food give out. The trouble with the Chileans was that they were afraid of the natives hereabouts and preferred to wait on the off chance of a ship showing up. At last they saw that Malcolm and I were right, but we missed the full run of the tide and were some miles from the mainland, or whatever it is, when night fell. We pushed along cautiously, found the entrance to the cove we had made out before the light failed and were about to lay to until dawn when we saw a rocket and heard the fog horn. That woke us up, you bet. The Chileans pulled like mad, but when we came near enough to discover that the ship was being attacked by Indians I had a fearful job to get my heroes to butt in. That fellow Gomez is a brick. He orated like a politician, and finally they got a move on. From what I have seen since I came aboard I guess you were hustling about that time."

"Yes," said Courtenay, filling a glass with wine, as he heard Boyle's step without. He handed the glass to the chief when he entered.

"How many?" he asked.

"Huh! We've slung fifty-three Indians an' six of the crew overboard. There's fourteen wounded natives an' five of our men in the doctor's hands. Two Alaculofs died of funk when they set eyes on the nigger who turned up in the lifeboat. They thought— Well, here's chin-chin to everybody. I'm thirsty."

CHAPTER XVI.

"BY the way, what of M. de Polneliff?" said Courtenay. "I saw him come aboard with Malcolm, but he dived into the saloon and has not reappeared. Is he ill?"

Gray's mouth set like a steel trap. His eyes had a glint in them. He seemed to be unwilling to speak. When words came they were cold and measured.

"I haven't any use for that fellow," he said. "I suppose the unpleasant story must be told sooner or later, so here goes. In the first place, Polneliff forgot that I understood Spanish, and I heard him yelping to the Chileans in the jolly boat that if we took any more people on board we should be swamped. It was he who put the notion in their heads to cast off while you were lowering Miss Baring's maid into my arms. I tried to forget that, as he was blue white with fear, and some fellows are not responsible for their actions when their liver melts. But I can never forget his action on the island. Yesterday morning I was just in time to stop him and four others from sneaking off in the lifeboat with all our provisions."

Courtenay's face hardened too.

"Necessity may have no laws," said he, "but I fancy I should have found a code to meet his case."

"I have organized a vigilance committee in my time, and its articles kind of ditted in," was the American's day. De Polneliff ran and fell on his knees. So did a skunk of an Italian, and I did not want to waste cartridges. They were tied back to back until we sailed today."

FOR the last month we have printed communications in regard to a certain piece of road in Norwood township.

This week we give, what we consider the most valuable one of them all, a letter from Mr. VanPelt giving his ideas of how a good road should be built.

The COURIER has in the past, and shall in the future, advocate good roads in every issue, as we believe nothing is of more importance to any community than good roads.

How to build them at the least expense to suit the different conditions of different localities is a problem to be studied out and, believing that all over this county are men who can give valuable suggestions on road building, we ask them to give us their ideas on this leading question.

FINEST IN WORLD

Is the Way A. I. Root Describes Apples of this Region

Yield of Fruit is Wonderful—Enormous Crops of Cherries.

The people of this region know it is a smiling country and like to have others recognize that fact, hence the following from the pen of A. I. Root of Medina, O., in his magazine, "Gleanings in Bee Culture," is duly appreciated:

"'The Land of Fruit and Flowers' is what the Pere Marquette railroad has to say of Northern Michigan. About a year ago I told you about their wonderful cherries up in Leelanau county and Traverse City, Michigan—not only wonderful in size and beauty, but wonderful in quality and quantity; in fact, I never before saw any cherries like them, and I very much doubt if there are any better in the world. But what made me think of those cherries just now is a pamphlet sent out by the Pere Marquette in regard to the cherry industry of that region. I knew cherries were going to Chicago, carload after carload, but I did not have an opportunity then to get hold of any figures. Well, what do you think of this?

"'James W. Markham received $2115.60 for the cherries that grew on five acres. Guy Tomkins, of Grand Traverse county has two cherry orchards. From one of them containing two acres he received $5118.80. From another orchard he received $1652. These statements were sworn to before a notary public. If you want further particulars address W. C. Sousey, 423 Madison St., Toledo, Ohio.

"Just a word more about the fruit in that region. I think the finest apples are grown there to be found anywhere; and, better still, they often get full crops there when we have very few around here further south."

MODERN TROGLODYTES.

The Matmata, the Cave Dwellers of Tunisia, Africa.

One of the strangest of cliff dwellers is that of the troglodytes, or Matmatas, the cave dwellers of Tunisia, Africa. It contains about 3,000 inhabitants, and the principle of its architecture is to dig into the earth rather than to build upon it. These troglodytes are to be found between the town of Gabes, on the Tunisian coast, and the sand hills of the Sahara. The country is a high, rocky plateau, barren, sun baked and swept by the simoom. When a Matmata wants a new dwelling he chooses his spot, traces a circle and then digs until he has reached the desired depth, which varies according to the number of stories he requires.

The rooms consist of caves hollowed out in the sides of the circular pit, the bottom of which forms a patio, or courtyard, which is the usual feature of a Moorish house. Besides the rooms, a passage is also dug, communicating with the outside world, and a door is made at the outer end.

The soil, which is a kind of malleable clay, is easily cut and lends itself well to excavation, the roof of each room requiring no support as long as it is arched. These underground dwellings are not damp.—Chicago News.

The Best Part of the Speech.

Young James had never heard his papa speak in public, and it was thought time to take him to hear his father deliver a lecture. During the evening a stray dog which ventured upon the platform was disposed of as gracefully as possible. On the way home James was asked how he liked his father's lecture and gave the answer, "It was all right, papa, but I liked the part where you put the dog out the best."—Delineator.

When Real Knowledge Comes.

"Mamma," asked a little girl, "how long did you know papa before you married him?"

"My dear," replied the mother, "I was acquainted with your father for several years, but I really didn't know him until after we were married."

Neighborhood Notes

Fire, July 1st destroyed practically the whole business district of Sherman, one mile from Mesick, on the Ann Arbor railroad, in Wexford county, causing a loss of at least $50000. Sixteen buildings were burned including the Sherman House, the Odd Fellows building and the Sherman bank. The fire originated in an empty building used as a saloon before Wexford county went dry, and swept the business district, the town having no fire protection. The insurance is small, and the fire will be a hard blow to Sherman.

Michigan farmers are to be congratulated upon the prospects for the success of the Michigan twine plant at the Jackson prison. The plant has been a potent factor in reducing the cost of twine to the farmers. It has encountered opposition from the twine trust. Over two million pounds of twine have already been shipped from the prison. Last week's shipments were the largest in the history of the plant and there is every reason to believe that the entire output will be contracted for before the close of the season. Farmers who have not yet placed their orders should take the earliest opportunity to do so.

The Ann Arbor railroad has adopted the plan of furnishing individual drinking cups to its passengers, and it is an innovation that should be and is highly appreciated by the traveling public and could well be imitated by other lines to advantage. These cups are in shape and size exactly like an ordinary drinking glass but are made of paper to which a coat of paraline imparts the necessary rigidity. The users can keep them if they wish. It certainly is a comfort on the trains of this road to be able to get a drink from the water cooler that is not flavored through the medium of the cup or glass with what the last person who used it might have eaten or drank.

The Cadillac Globe quotes a leading produce dealer of that section regarding this year's potato crop, as follows: "In the northern counties a very large acreage has been planted this year. I place it at a conservative estimate one-third larger than that of last year; some authorities put it fifty per cent larger but I am inclined to think such a figure is overdrawn. What the yield will be is of course problematical. Potato raising is gaining in importance through this section every season while in the southern part of the state the acreage diminishes every year as the farmers are raising more beans which for them is a better money crop than potatoes. The dividing line I should say is somewhere in the vicinity of Big Rapids or Howard City. North of there the acreage, I think, increases each year, while south of these cities it diminishes in a corresponding degree."

An exchange publishes the following, which may, or may not be worth a trial. Place a plate sprinkled with sugar near an ant hill, and, when the sugar is covered with ants lift the plate and place it in a convenient fork of a scale infested tree. The ants will presently leave the sugar and go at work on the scale. As soon as the ants have left the plate, put the plate down at the root of the tree. The ants, after cleaning off the scale, will go down the tree, and finding the sugar there will again assemble upon the plate which may then be set in the fork of another tree.

A party of Pennsylvania scouts on the lookout for a summer camping ground for their clubs ranging from 20 to 200 members, ignored Dannie Lynn's invitation to go and see the beauty spots on the Torch west shore. The reason for it came later when we read in the Evening Press, "Their outing fund, that is the profits from the drinks, pays a large share of the expenses." To evade the laws these clubs have been organized. Membership in the club carries with it the privilege to drink at any time the rest is on. Members pay the customary prices for drinks and the profits go to their outing fund. Their favorite camping ground is almost anywhere between Traverse City and Petoskey (just so it's wet.) Kalkaska county is dry for sure; but had these scribblers been half as well posted in geography as in geography they'd have known the spot Dannie mienned showing to them is in Antrim county which is as yet wet enough to suit the balmiest taste of the most fastidiously exacting booze on God's green earth.—Rustler.

Madame Récamier was famous for Her Beauty and Madame de Stael was famous for her brains, but in their day neither was as popular in Paris as Madame Lebardi, who was famous for her cooking. And when you consider that famous cooks are more fondly remembered than famous beauties and famous wits, the popularity of Madame Lebardi is the source of much comfort to womankind in general. For every woman can't be a beauty, although with stern application to modern methods she can come pretty near it and every woman can't be a wit, no matter how much education we may absorb, but every woman can be a good cook.

Cooking is a problem to be worked out by the formula; nine parts discretion and one part skill. The skill may be acquired by practice and the discretion may be acquired by proper training. Discretion in cookery means knowledge of what to use as well as how to use it. No woman can make a great success as a cook unless she has the right materials with which to accomplish results. First-class materials are absolutely necessary.

A CLEVER SWINDLE.

Ingenious Scheme Worked by a Parisian Vagabond.

The manager of a fashionable Paris restaurant fell into a neat trap not very long ago. A man named Daval, who had only recently been released from prison, called a cab and told the driver that he was the Count d'Ableville and that he had bet a friend a large sum of money that, dressed in a tramp's rags, he would eat a dinner at one of the most exclusive hotels. If the cabman would arrange the matter for him with the manager of the hotel the count would pay him handsomely.

The cabman drove up to a luxurious restaurant, took the manager aside and whispered the information that his disreputable looking fare was really a count in disguise and then related the story of the bet. The manager fell into the trap, and the ex-prisoner was served with an excellent dinner with many wines.

The meal over, the man declared that he was no count and that he had no money. The manager laughed heartily at the splendid way his guest played his part, but by and by the truth dawned on him. A policeman was called in, and the ingenious swindler was led away, imperturbably smoking a five franc cigar.—New York Sun.

The Lion's Rush.

The wisest and most experienced can never tell what a lion will do. Lion hunting, to my mind, has a charm all its own. Nothing compares with it. And no driving of ravines or swamps or enticing the great cat at his kill is comparable to the joy and steady excitement of tracking him down. He chooses the ground. You follow him into it. You pit yourself against him. Crouching flat against the yellow earth, perhaps covered only by a few inches of grass, he is almost unbelievably hard to see. His rush and spring from a few yards distance is the fastest thing in the world. No animal can escape it, much less clumsy, slow footed man. He has a chance to pay off an man, the universal lord and master, the wrongs of the animal world, and here in East Africa the lion's revengeful toll taken on human life and limb mounts high.—Hev. WONDERFUL PROGRESS.

The State Fair Grounds and Buildings Worth Nearly a Half Million Dollars.

The Michigan State Fair was organized sixty years ago and during most of the time until it was established in Detroit its light for existence has been strenuous. Many times the clouds of failure hovered dangerously near, but owing to the determined efforts of friends it has finally been established on a firm financial basis.

Five years ago the fair was permanently located in Detroit, because it was believed that with so large a population to draw attendance from, the chances of success would be much brighter.

There were only $17,000 in the treasury when the fair was first located in Detroit. The 147 acres owned by the society cost $85,000. Detroit business men at once came to the rescue and beautiful buildings were erected, as were also a grand stand with a seating capacity of 7,000, live stock barns, a race track band stand and many other buildings. The grounds were graded into streets with circular drives, shrubbery and trees planted, fences erected and various other improvements made until now the property represents an investment of nearly half a million dollars.

Against this half a million dollar plant, there is only an indebtedness of $160,000. The great portion of which is covered by the original bond issue.

Most other State Fairs are owned by the commonwealths in which they are located, but every effort to turn this over to the state has failed. Michigan should support the State Fair and help to uphold it. The Minnesota and Iowa state legislatures have appropriated large sums for new equipment and the state of Michigan should do the same. This fair is purely a state institution and should have the support of every person in both the upper and lower peninsulas.

SANITATION OF THE STATE FAIR GROUNDS.

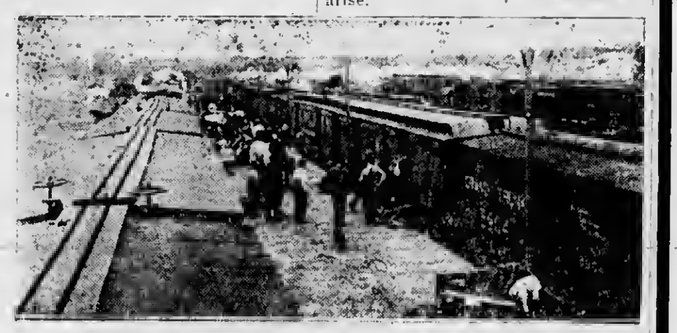
The State Fair officials are taking every precaution to protect the exhibitors of live stock at the 1909 meeting which opens Sept. 3. They have made arrangements for the complete sanitation of the live stock and, in fact, the entire show buildings and grounds during the Fair time.

Before any animals are brought into their quarters, all stables, barns, etc., will be thoroughly cleaned of any refuse that may have accumulated there; and then they will be thoroughly and completely disinfected so as to prevent any possibility of disease being acquired from the condition of the grounds before the live stock arrives.

During the entire time of the Fair a constant attendance of a corps of expert assistants will be continuously disinfecting all the live stock and buildings, so that it will prevent any possible outbreak of contagious diseases while on the grounds.

Arrangements will be made for parties who wish to have their stock sprayed before entering the grounds, and the fact that Messrs. Parke, Davis & Company will have this matter in charge, and will use the disinfectant Kreso for the purpose, is sufficient to know that it will be done properly and effectively.

This firm has taken care of over 200 large exposition of this description, and by using Kreso have prevented any outbreak of disease; this is certainly a safeguard against any such troubles that otherwise might arise.



IN THE NURSERY.

A baby's eyes should be shaded from a strong light, especially from bright sunlight.

Hot cloths applied to the feet and to the stomach will often relieve colic much more quickly than internal doses.

Boil soft linen towels and put them aside for baby's exclusive use. In drying baby after his bath rub him gently to stimulate the skin to healthy action. Dust baby lightly with a good powder.

Violent noises which startle a child should be avoided, and no infant should under no circumstances be tossed in the air or shaken, as this treatment surely develops nervousness.

After washing the baby's mouth give him a drink of boiled water.

The tiny soft brushes so often given as presents to babies are useless, because everything used in the child's mouth should be burned.

A baby should be given pure cold water two or three times a day. His mouth should be rinsed several times a day with borax water, a teaspoonful to a cup. This will prevent the mouth and gums from becoming sore and keep them sweet and clean.

JAPANESE HUSBANDS.

In Rising Sun Country Matrimony Is Built on Equal Rights Plan.

The recent outburst of race antagonism in a Pacific coast city, directed against an American girl for marrying a Japanese, lends interest to the public assertion that "Japanese husbands are the best in the world," made by Mrs. Yakamine, wife of the eminent Japanese chemist and scientist, for many years a resident of New York city. Mrs. Yakamine was Miss Hitch, daughter of one of the old southern families, before she met the doctor and is a stanch defender of international marriages.

"No woman in the world is more protected and better cared for than the wife of a Japanese," she said. "The Japanese husband is considerate, faithful and patient. It is his philosophy, his religion. He is a home loving man, and naturally he is thoughtful of the little attentions to his home and family. Every woman loves these little attentions. Plenty of women prefer kind words and the thought that they are appreciated to diamond rings. If a Japanese sees some little piece of jewelry, ornament or painting he thinks his wife would like he takes it home to her. It is this sort of thing, the fact that he has thought of her during the day, that makes her happy.

"Contrast the American and the Japanese husband under the same circumstances. An American husband comes home from business tired, nervous and hungry. Something has happened to the oven or the cook has allowed the roast to burn. He is likely to become very impatient over the delay or the spoiled dinner. Under similar circumstances does a Japanese husband lose his temper? Indeed, he does not. He says pleasantly, out of consideration for his wife's feelings, 'Well, perhaps there are eggs in the house, and, after all, they might be better for us to eat.'

"If there is anything that will increase rather than diminish this consideration for his wife it is the fact that Japanese women are just beginning to go into business like their American sisters. With this change the men will realize, too, that should they not treat their wives well the women can leave them and earn their own livelihood. So far no such threats, I believe, have been put into practice, but it has been unnecessary, for it is born and bred and trained in the Japanese men as part of their religion to treat their wives with respect and courteous, thoughtful attention.

"In Japan matrimony is built on a sort of equal rights plan. Husband and wife have each his and her duties and his and her particular rights and privileges, and neither would think of encroaching on the other's well defined rights."

The Persistent Social Aspirant.

Persistency is ever the hallmark of the woman determined to be recognized socially, and she applies it without stint to the smallest detail of each undertaking, nagging, insisting and, pushing until some part is accomplished. So, too, do some women pursue an eligible man, never heeding the thousand and one evidences he gives of indifference, but dodging artfully around each sign of "no intentions" and bobbing up in his path at all turns. It is useless to argue that they do not gain their end and aim, for many times they do. In the long run society yields to the persistency of this type of woman or the man is safely harnessed to her triumphal car.

The Captain of the Kansas.

By LOUIS TRACY.

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

Copyright, 1905, by Edward J. Clode.

"And the fifth?"

"The fifth was a woman."

They talked until daybreak; then Courtenay turned in. He did not appear on deck again until noon. By that time the Kansas had lost all marks of the fight excepting the smashed windows, and a sailor who understood the glazier's art was replacing the broken glass. Making the round of the ship, the captain found Elsie sitting with Isobel and Mrs. Somerville on the promenade deck. She was finding Joey's foot, and he knew then why the dog had scampered off on three legs as soon as the cabin door was opened.

Lifting his cap, with a smile and a general "Good morning," he bent over Elsie.

"Well," he said, "surely you owe me at least one kiss!"

If her cheeks were red before, they became scarlet now. But his kindling glance had warned her that he would adopt no pretense, so she lifted her face to his, though she did not dare to look at her amazed companions. Courtenay explained matters quite coolly.

"If Elsie has not told you already it is my privilege to announce that she and I have signed articles," he said, with a smile. "That is, we intend to get married as soon as the ship reaches England."

"Indeed, I congratulate you both most heartily," said the missionary's wife.

"Events have marched, then, while we were shrouded on that wretched island," tittered Isobel. Her voice was rather shrill. She, too, was excited, not quite distressed herself. She did not know how far Gray's statement might have prejudiced her with the captain. She had already sent De Pedrilla a note urging him to deny absolutely all knowledge of the plot to steal the boat and attribute the American's summary action to his mistaken rendering of the Spanish patois used by the Chilean sailors. "You feel sure that we shall see no more of the Indians?" asked Isobel quickly.

"I think so. One never can tell, but if they have the grit to attack us again I shall regard them as first class fighters."

Isobel meant to be on her best behavior. Her pact with the Frenchman was discreditable, but smooth words might restrain tongues from wagging until she could leave the ship. Moreover, the vicissitudes of life in these later days were not without their effect.

"I shall resume my rounds," said Courtenay to Elsie. "I expect to be received respectfully by Walker. He made great progress yesterday. Let me whisper a secret. Then you may pass it on in strictest confidence."

He placed his lips close to her ear.

"I am dreadfully in love with you this morning," he breathed.

"That is no secret," she retorted.

"It is. You and I together must daily find new paths in Eden. But any less poetic news should be welcome also. Walker says he hopes to get steam up tomorrow."

"Well, tell us quickly," cried Isobel, with a show of intense interest when Courtenay had gone. Though his manner betokened that the affair was something which concerned Elsie alone, she was on fire until she learned that the "secret" alluded to the restored vitality of the ship.

For another expressions of gratitude were heartfelt. Mrs. Somerville even wept for joy. This poor woman, after living twenty-five years in the oasis of a mission house, was a strange subject for storm tossed wanderers until flights with cannibals.

"I have organized a vigilance committee in my time."

"It will be a real manifestation of Providence if we ever reach England again," she cried, dabbing her eyes with a handkerchief. "I'm sure John and I have said so many a time during the past week. To think of the ship's blowing up in the way she did! It makes me all of a tremble, it does."

"Oh," broke in Elsie, thinking that the information she possessed would help to calm the older woman, "we have made a good many discoveries since—since the boat went away without me, I mean. But do tell me—how did those horrid Chileans manage to cast off the tackle before Mr. Gray or some of the other men were able to stop them? Of course it is matterless now in a sense, but at that moment it looked like leaving those on the ship to certain death."

Mrs. Somerville was stricken dumb. The American's shooting of two men on White Horse Island had naturally called for a complete explanation on his part, and she did not know how to answer Elsie's question. Before she could gather her wits Isobel intervened.

"If you had been in that boat, dear," she said sweetly, "you would realize the topsy turvy condition of our brains. Even Mr. Gray himself, the coolest man on board, imagined we might sink any moment, so what can you expect of those excitable Chileans? What are the discoveries you spoke of?"

"Well, some one placed dynamite among the coal."

"But who would do such a thing?"

"That is hard to say. The captain believes that the culprit will be found out through the insurance policies. You cannot tell how surprised I was to hear him mention Ventana's name in connection with it."

"Ventana's name!"

The blood ebbed away from Isobel's cheeks, leaving her pallid as a statue. There was a gasp in her voice which startled her own ears. Lest her agitation should be noted too keenly she bent forward and propped her face on her clinched hands, staring dizzily at the distant cliffs in a supreme effort to appear apathetic. Elsie heard that dry sob, but her friend's seeming indifference misled her.

"Yes," she said, wondering a little whether or not Christobal's veiled hint regarding antagonistic tenderness between the two might account for Isobel's hysterical outburst on the night of the ship's breakdown. So, pondering many spoken thoughts the while, she told the others exactly what Telemache, Christobal and Courtenay had said and even revealed to them that which Courtenay himself did not know.

"I am afraid the poor fellow who got into trouble soon after we sailed from Valparaiso," she said, "His name is Fraser. He was wounded again in the struggle, but not seriously, and he and I were chatting. He assures me that he was dragged by a man named Lopez Cancelo, who took his place among the coal trimmers"—

"Oh, Miss Marsh, come quick!" screamed Mrs. Somerville, for Isobel had buried her face out of her chair in a fainting fit, and the missionary's wife was barely able to save her head from striking the ship's rails.

Joey was shot out of Elsie's lap with such surprising speed that he trotted away without any exhibition of fameness. He was quite disgusted for at least five minutes, but it is reasonable to suppose that a dog of his intelligence would brighten up when he heard the wholly imbodied for story which Chris did not hesitate to Courtenay word for word as it was dragged here, stingy out of Suarez.

The Argentine father had been badly injured during the struggle for possession of the pinnace, he did. Owing to loss of sleep, however, supplemented by an awful cold, he might have died to death had he not been rescued within a few minutes. He was very ill all night, and it was not until midday that he recovered sufficient strength to enable him to question the Indians on board.

Rapid Hedge Trimmer.

Among the numerous time and labor saving devices for gardeners' use the geared hedge trimmer, invented by a New York man, is one of the most interesting. With it a hedge that formerly required five hours to trim can be clipped in one hour, or one man can do the work of five. This apparatus consists of a long rod with a shoulder piece at one end and a pair of shears at the other. Along this rod is a drive wheel connecting with a rotary pinion, which operates the crank controlling the shears. The device is held against the shoulder by means of a handle in the middle. Then the drive wheel is turned, and by means of the multiple gearing it opens and closes the shears five times with each revolution, thus making the apparatus a saver of 80 per cent in either time or labor. All the operator has to do is to keep turning the wheel and moving the shears along the hedgerow where it needs clipping.

SHELTER FOR MACHINERY.

A Structure Within the Mechanical Possibilities of Any Farmer.

One of the heaviest items of expense on the modern farm is the cost of machinery, and, strange as it may seem, this is frequently the most neglected. In many parts of the country, especially on the poorer farms, one will see all kinds of farm implements exposed to the weather. A writer declares that the farmer now pays the little sum of $120,000,000 per year for farm machinery, or about 70 cents per acre. Of this vast sum it has been estimated at least one-third could be saved if the farmers would take better care of it. A structure such as shown in the illustration herewith is within the mechanical possibilities of almost any man, and the cost should not be great. Any one interested will have no trouble in figuring out a neat profit if he will spend a little time in estimating the cost of building a machine shed. The house shown in the illustrations is 16 by 50 feet and 12 feet in height. It may be covered with shingles or with any good brand of roofing felt. It is boarded up and down, and all cracks are well battened.

A shop ten feet wide should be located either at one end or in the center, as shown. A good, solid workbench, with a strong vise, should find a place in the shop, and a brick flue, with a stove and possibly a portable forge, will not be out of place. The forge will in some cases pay for itself on one job in the time saved by not making a trip to town. During cold and rainy weather the time may be spent in repairing the tools and in doing the many odd jobs always at hand on the farm, and the pleasure of working with bright and sharp tools must not be overlooked.

A structure such as shown should have doors sixteen feet wide and not less than ten feet in height. It should be weather proof and have at least two coats of paint. A good foundation should support the same and a good floor of wood or pounded clay be provided. The building should be put up in almost any section for $3 per running foot and in many sections for less.

More Apples Needed.

Radical changes are necessary in the culture of apples on this continent or the United States, and Canada will be forced in a few years to import apples instead of exporting them. If it had not been for the enormous crops in the orchards of the Pacific and northwestern states and provinces last year an apple famine would have resulted.

Many of the middle western and eastern states reported small yields in 1908 due to failures in numerous instances, but generally because of pests. Many orchards were neglected, and in scores of places the trees were permitted to die because of inattention.

In 1896 the total product of the crop of the country was 69,070,000 barrels, or 177,675,000 bushels. Since then hundreds of thousands of acres have been added, and methods of fruit growing have improved, yet the government reports show that the aggregate crop in all the states in the Union was not more than 25,000,000 barrels, or 62,500,000 bushels, in 1908.

Fertilizers For Peaches.

Progressive peach growers in western Michigan find it profitable to use a carload of stockyard manure an acre, costing about $4 a ton, and about 1,200 pounds of bone an acre. They also make use of clover and other forage crops to gather nitrogen and increase the store of humus. Having made their soil very rich and given it intensive culture, their trees make a very vigorous growth. The bark of trunk and branches carries that dark, rich color denoting unusual health and vigor.

Trim Small Fruit.

Now is a good time to trim the raspberry and blackberry fields. Not much fruit can be expected from fouled canes, and even the best canes will not give much fruit if they are too close together. Manure or fertilizer is also required. Blackberry fields have been known to give good service for years without fertilizers, but if the field is given good cultivation and well supplied with plant food the increased yield and better quality of the fruit will make some unprofitable fields pay well.

Cleaning a Well.

Before going down into a well test the purity of the air by lowering a lighted candle or lantern. If the light burns dimly or goes out the poisonous carbonic acid gas "damps" can be driven out by igniting a quantity of turpentine and sawdust or kerosene and rags in a kettle and lowering it to the surface of the water, and then later pour several bucketfuls of water into the well from the top. Test again with the lantern and note the improvement. We want our folks to be on the safe side.—Farm Journal.

Hope.

"Hope," said Uncle Eben, "is a blessin' when you's willin' to back it wif a little hard work, 'stid o' lettin' it play itself out on a policy ticket."—Washington Star.

FEEDING THE HEAVY HAULER.

By HENRY DITHMER.

It is important to remember that the amount of feed required by a horse bears a close relation to the amount of energy expended and work performed. A work horse pulling a light load rapidly will use up more energy than he will in pulling the same load slowly and if fed the same in both instances will lose weight when driven rapidly.

There are several good reasons for feeding oats. All authorities agree that they are easily digested and contain the necessary amount of protein to supply food for the muscles; that even the hull has its value in furnishing a sufficient amount of roughness to aid in exciting the saliva and gastric juice and thus aiding the digestion. Many careful and experienced feeders prefer corn as the principal grain and oats only as a change. There can be no question as to the value of corn in fattening a horse, and it is certainly a much cheaper feed than oats, but after careful inquiry I am firmly of the opinion that corn fed horses are more susceptible to disease and, even though they present a pleasing appearance, have not the muscular strength, the endurance or the power to resist diseases of horses fed on oats.

Following are the methods of feeding used in some of the large stables of the country:

City Ice Delivery Company, Cleveland.—Fifteen pounds of oats, two pounds bran, fifteen pounds hay and all salt they want. One-half this amount when idle. Recent experiments with mixed feed composed of rolled oats and cracked corn mixed with molasses and bran, fed dry, show a saving of 15 per cent in cost compared with pure oats.

United States Express Company, Jersey City.—Sixteen pounds crushed oats per day, six pounds morning and night and four pounds at noon. Eighteen pounds prairie hay daily, eight pounds in morning and ten pounds at night. Now using crushed oats, and horses fed equal parts fourteen pounds per day.

Brooklyn Transportation Company, Brooklyn.—Six pounds crushed oats three times daily and eighteen pounds hay when working; five pounds crushed oats three times daily and eighteen pounds hay when idle. Horses are watered before eating and required to eat hay one hour before being fed at night.

Jakels & Bells, Hoboken, N. J.—Feed entirely according to work done, as little as two and a half pounds of crushed oats; at other times four and a half pounds crushed oats three times per day; two feeds on Sunday and holidays.

Wisconsin Lakes Ice Company, Milwaukee.—Six pounds crushed oats three times daily, occasionally mixture of bran and four pounds first class feeding hay at night on working day or busy season, but only two meals of four pounds oats each and one meal of some kind of soft food in winter months for horses which only work every other day; water and rest before eating at noon, no water after eating.

C. Feigenspan Brewing Company, Newark, N. J.—Seven pounds crushed oats three times daily and sixteen pounds hay once a day except two meals each week, when cut hay and mixed feed are used. Two feeds of grain on Sundays or holidays. Usual allowance of hay.

American Ice Company, Philadelphia.—Three pounds ground corn and two pounds crushed oats three times per day and twelve pounds hay. Hay is fed at noon.

H. J. Breding Truck Company, Detroit, Mich.—Two and a half pounds rolled oats and two and a half pounds cracked corn three times daily. Sixteen pounds hay per day, dampened with one part of molasses and three parts water; also feed with night feed one-fourth pound ground linseed with all the oil. Horses weigh from 1,400 to 1,800 pounds. Horses are watered before eating morning and noon and night; also at midnight in summer. Horses allowed to stand fifteen minutes before feeding at noon.

Ruppert Brewing Company, New York.—Eight pounds crushed oats and five pounds hay three times daily except when idle, as on Sundays, receive less feed and one mash.

I find no serious differences among horse owners as to the methods of feeding. Striking a general average of those which appeal to me as being the most reasonable, I would suggest a trial of the following rules: Have your morning feed at a regular hour each day. Give your horses as much rest after eating as your business will permit. Do not feed your horses until they have been in the barn at least fifteen minutes. Thirty minutes would be better.

The noon feed should be the lightest and the night feed the heaviest of the day. Allow your horses all the water they want before a meal, provided they are not overheated or have not been without water an unusual length of time. Give them very little water immediately after a meal. Feed hay once a day, and that in the evening.

Do not have the hayrack over the horse's head. If possible arrange rack so that the horse must lower his head to get to the hay.

DEHORNING CATTLE.

Removal of Bovine Weapons a Great Advantage—Proper Cutting.

Writing of the dehorning of cattle an Arkansas breeder says: No one who owns cattle for any ordinary purpose will claim that there is any advantage in their having horns—in fact, it must be admitted that horns are not only useless, but are a distinct disadvantage to cattle of all kinds. And they are particularly so with all cattle that are herded together.

It will therefore be profitable for every owner of horned cattle to take the horns off as soon as possible. On my farm I have had all sorts of injury done by vicious cows to others. I recently lost one of my best animals indirectly on account of being injured by one of the others.

In case of calves, of course, it is best to use treatment to prevent the horns growing. The common way is to apply caustic potash to the horn buttons when they first show. It is necessary to scrape off the surface of the horn button and then rub the stick of potash, slightly moistened, all over the button hard enough to have a good coating of potash on it. This will be sure to kill the horn if the job is thoroughly done.

In the case of older stock with horns already well developed I think that sawing them off is the best plan. I have tried sawing and also cutting off with one of the cutters in which the power is increased by a combination of levers. My opinion is that sawing is less cruel than cutting. You can saw off a horn of any size, but I have had cases in which a powerful man was unable to cut off a large horn on a six-year-old cow with the best horn cutter I have ever seen.

Whether a saw or the shears be used, the cut must be made uniformly at a line sufficiently below where the skin joins the horn in order to get satisfactory results from the operation. If the cut is made too high on irregular, gnarly growth of horn is very apt to follow. The point of union of the skin and horn varies in different cattle; hence there can be no rule of measurement except as the eye becomes trained to see the point or line at which the cut should be made, which can soon be easily and accurately approximated by carefully noticing the variation in different animals, which variation is largely influenced by breed, together with the texture, quality and setting of the horns. In the beef breeds fully one-half inch of skin all around is usually taken off with the horn.

Selection of Breeds.

The stock breeder who understands his business breeds only from animals carefully selected and that have the ability to transmit their good points.

THE DAIRYMAN.

You can hardly keep the dairy utensils clean if you depend upon rags and soap. A good cleaning powder and a brush are far better.

Regularity In Milking.

In many cases during the busy season on the farm there is little or no regularity about the milking. It is done whenever the other farm work will best permit. Experience proves, however, that when milk remains in the udder longer than twelve hours it loses quantity and quality.

Feeding the Calf.

Calves do not need fattening feed like cornmeal so much as they do muscle building feed like bran and oats, and little clover or cowpea or alfalfa hay. A little chaffage will not be unlike if this is on the farm. To develop a dairy heifer into some thing really good do not hesitate to feed well the first two years. It will be a better feeder thereafter if fed well when young.

The Test Tells the Tale.

Without the use monthly of the Babcock test it is not possible to know how much the cows are bringing in by the year. The milkers always have their opinions as to which are the best cows in the herd, and that opinion never is correct. The cow that pegs away day in and day out with an even flow of milk is the cow that pays the dividends, not the cow that gives a heavy yield at first and then tapers away to nothing.

Requirements of Dairy Animal.

We cannot expect to get so much of good and value from the good cow and withhold from her the help she must have to do her best. We must not expect her to perform as a mother of young and a feeder of young and treat her as a steer. Her requirements are not that she shall be fed sumptuously every day, but she must every day be fed abundantly. She must not be asked to make bricks without straw or, on the other hand, be expected to make butter bricks with straw only.

Straw is a most excellent farm product, but it is chiefly excellent to lie on. Cows will eat some of it. Let them do so if they want to, but don't force them into doing it because of hunger.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY GETS INTO LINE

Will Make Exhibit at Big Chicago Exposition.

AT TIME OF FAT STOCK SHOW

Johns Western Michigan Development Bureau.

D. S. Payton Director from this County—Boards of Trade Take Hold of Matter With Enthusiasm.

County Clerk Payton returned Saturday from Frankfort where he attended the meeting of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, held Friday. At this meeting it was decided to go ahead and make an exhibit of the resources of Western Michigan at the big exposition to be held at Chicago at the time of the fat stock show.

At this meeting the following counties were represented, Muskegon, Newaygo, Oceana, Mason Lake, Wexford, Manistee, Benzie, Grand Traverse, Leelanau, Antrim and Charlevoix, Mr. Payton being elected director from this county.

The plan as previously published is to make the bureau a permanent organization for the purpose of advertising Western Michigan the people and the transportation companies working together, its motto being, A farmer for every forty.

The exposition to be held in December will have exhibits from every state in the Union a certain amount of space being allotted to each. The transportation companies interested in the development of this region, at the Frankfort meeting, promised to contribute $3,000 toward making an exhibit at the meeting and the directors voted to contribute an equal sum. George E. Rowe, of Grand Rapids, was employed to make the necessary arrangements.

Mr. Rowe is an expert in this line of work, having had charge of the Michigan exhibit at the Pan-American exposition and has served repeatedly in various responsible capacities in connection with the Western Michigan and the state fairs. Mr. Rowe will go ahead and prepare the exhibits and will visit all the counties that are members of the bureau. Another meeting of the bureau will be held at Grand Rapids Monday when Mr. Rowe will report the result of his visits to the different counties and on his report will depend the character of the exhibit.

Sunday, Mr. Rowe visited Charlevoix and met the directors of the Board of Commerce who gave him all encouragement in his work and pledged the amount asked for from this city. However, it is not so much the securing of the money that is of prime importance as the securing of the best of our products, particularly fruit in the production of which this region is peculiarly adapted. It was thought best at the meeting of the bureau not only to make an exhibit of the fruit but to give visitors samples of the products, so the flavor and quality may be demonstrated.

Monday Mr. Payton and Mr. Rowe visited Boyne City and East Jordan where they presented the plans of the bureau, which met an enthusiastic reception and they were assured of the amount asked for.

The business men as represented by their organizations in the three cities having done their part, it is now up to the producers to do theirs, by being ready to contribute and sell to the bureau their choicest products. This is a movement in the right line: co-operation of Western Michigan for Western Michigan; of Charlevoix County for Charlevoix County.

The following from the Traverse City Record applies to all this region.

"It seems to us that the people of the counties, who are members of this bureau should take a deep interest in this matter and aid it all they can. It means much to Western Michigan as this exhibition of products as it will be seen by hundreds of thousands of persons. The people who attend this stock show are farmers and growers largely and these are the kind of people who need Western Michigan and whom Western Michigan needs. The exhibit will strike directly where it should, and it is doubtful if any other could be arranged that would do that so effectively or reach such an enormous number of people.

The more people who come to Western Michigan, the more valuable the lands become. A 10-acre farm is a 10-acre farm, it is true, whether there is a neighbor within five miles or one mile, but the farm with the near neighbor is the one that brings the higher price in the market. More people mean better land values, mean better roads; mean better market facilities.

The bureau does not ask much of the people of the counties concerned, it simply asks that they prepare the fruit and other products so that they can be taken to Chicago and shown, so that the flavor and quality can be demonstrated. Since this means so much to the residents of this section, it seems that they would be benefitting themselves by extending their aid and co-operation all possible.

DOVE TO DEATH

Harry Clapper Victim of Peculiar Accident

At Boyne City Wednesday While in Bathing at Glenwood Beach

A sad accident occurred at Boyne City Wednesday afternoon, by which Harry Clapper, of Grand Rapids, lost his life while in bathing.

Clapper, and his brother, had been in Boyne City about a week canvassing. Wednesday afternoon they went to Glenwood Beach for the purpose of going in bathing. After procuring suits they went out on the dock about twenty feet where the water is only three feet deep. Harry dove headforemost, into the water, striking his head on the bottom. His brother, seeing he didn't come up, jumped in after him and carried him ashore. Word was sent to Boyne City and a launch sent after him. Dr. Marshall was sent for, and, after examination, it was decided that he was suffering from a fractured spine, and it was decided to take him to Grand Rapids for further examination, where it was found he was suffering from a dislocation and fracture causing a complete laceration of the spinal cord, and no hope was held out for him. Thursday morning the unfortunate man died.

Mr. Clapper was about thirty years old and leaves a wife at Bellville, Ohio.

A BIG SUPPLY

Of Food is Required to Provide for the Michigan State Troops at Ludington.

Bids are being asked by the quartermaster's department for furnishing rations for the state troops while in camp at Ludington, August 10 to 20, says the Lansing Republican, and it takes several pounds of beef, bacon, bread, potatoes etc., to feed the brigade during the ten days. Under the army regulations each man is entitled to so many ounces of beef, bread, potatoes, sugar, prunes, roller, pepper, salt, vandies and now butter is added to the list. This allows the commissary to estimate exactly what is required to feed the soldiers for a certain period and it is an interesting part of each year's training to learn to make requisition for and properly distribute the rations among the regiments and companies.

The contracts will call for 21,000 pounds of beef, 2,500 pounds of bacon, 15,000 pounds of soft bread, 500 pounds of flour, 2,500 pounds of beans, 21,500 pounds of potatoes, 100 pounds of prunes, 900 pounds of evaporated apples, 1,375 pounds of roller, 1,5000 pounds of sugar, 38 gallons of vinegar, 50 gallons of pickles, 900 pounds of salt, 50 pounds of pepper, 900 pounds of soap, 350 pounds of candles, 50 pounds of baking powder, 350 pounds of rice, 900 pounds of milk, 600 pounds of lard, 700 pounds of butter, two cases of matches.

The Pioneer association of Antrim county will hold their second annual picnic in the grove, near the mineral spring Central Lake, on Friday, August 6.

This was the result of a meeting of the Executive Committee of the association held at the home of W. H. Easton, Central Lake, last Friday. J. R. Child presided at the meeting. Other members of the committee present were, A. J. Drake, W. H. Easton, James Williams and wife, and Hon. E. R. Harris.

A program was arranged as follows:

Music—Central Lake Choir.

Address of Welcome—Hon. John Smallegan, President Central Lake.

Response—A. J. Drake, President Pioneer Association.

Music—An old time piece, Old Settlers Choir.

"The Early History and Organization of Antrim County"—by Mrs. Mary Williams, historian of the society.

Business meeting.

Pioneer Campfire.

Coffee, tea, and sugar will be furnished free, also hay for the teams.

This organization was perfected August 1, 1907, at the home of Uncle Dan Blakely, in Eastport, the original movers in the project being Dan Blakely and wife, Wallace W. Clow, Norman Larabee, Lucrece Pearl, John H. McPherson, J. R. Child, Mary M. Child, Theodore Guyer, Fred and wife, James Williams and wife, and E. R. Harris.

The aim of the association as recorded in their minutes is "The keeping alive of memories of the early days when Antrim county was a solid forest of timber, when the "mossback" toted home to his shanty his flour and pork in the two ends of a grain sack, when the ear whistle was not heard, when he pounded out his grain with a flail, when the mail was carried on the back of a one armed male Indian, and by this organization keeping the old settlers in touch with one another, and in this way at least once a year getting together by having a picnic and a jolly good time."

Those who had lived in the county in 1877 and all who should attain a residence of thirty years in the county were declared eligible for membership.

Fees were placed at fifty cents to join and twenty-five cents annual dues.

The first annual picnic was held last year at Eastport and at that time the membership in the society attained forty-five.

The duties of the historian of the society as laid down at its organization are to "compile and deliver to the members or at the annual meeting of the society a history of each member as well as a history of this county," etc.

At the time of the first annual picnic there had been no deaths in the ranks of the organizers. This year Mrs. Mary M. Childs, the first historian of the association will be missing, as will Uncle Dan Blakely both having passed away within the past nine months.

The present officers are: A. J. Drake, president; W. H. Easton, vice president; E. R. Harris, secretary; Mrs. Mary Williams, historian.

CAME FROM SOUTH

Mannerisms Still Cling to County Clerk Payton.

Charlevoix County Official came from Kentucky a Quarter Century Ago.

We quote the following from the Traverse City Record of Friday last, including headlines, showing how our popular County Clerk wins all hearts wherever he goes.

"Daniel S. Payton the hand-some county clerk and ex-county treasurer of Charlevoix county, was calling on brother officers at the court house yesterday.

He is on his way to Frankfort as a delegate to the meeting of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, to be held at that place, and will be accompanied by G. M. Dame and A. L. Coulter.

Mr. Payton is a native of Kentucky and has the charming manner and smooth speech of the southerner, although he has been a resident of the north for 25 years, and there is still an aroma of the sunny south about him and the southern chivalry is very noticeable. He served two years as county treasurer and this is his first term as county clerk, and he has given excellent service to the county in both instances.

Although but a small lad at the time of the Civil war, he can still recall many unpleasant instances of that dreaded time, and quite well remembers when both armies engaged in a skirmish in his father's field, where they left their dead and dying. For a long time he had a drum which was used during the war and a number of other relics from that period. His family was well represented in the war, his father and two brothers fighting for the north and his mother's brother and cousins marching with the confederates. The anxiety of mind of the mother at this time can scarcely be pictured, and it is no wonder that the remembrance of that time will long be carried by the son.

DEATH OF MRS. BROWN

Mrs. Brown was a member of Maple Grove Grange and the Daughters of Rebekah and Royal Neighbor lodges at Charlevoix, all of which attended the funeral, which was held Sunday at the M. E. Church, Rev. Dr. Wright officiating, in a body as a tribute to one who had well performed her mission in life as daughter wife and mother.

WILL HELP HOMESEEKERS

Public Domain Commission Will Furnish Soil Maps.

In an interview State Land Commissioner Huntley Russell stated that he believed that the new public domain commission will be able to assist and greatly increase the number of emigrants to Michigan.

Commissioner Russell will do all that he can in his department to interest and help the seekers for homesteads. Soil maps will be provided for the Lansing office, so that the emigrant can look over all the public lands in the state, should he care to. When the home has been been picked out, it will only be necessary to pay 10 cents per acre, and then live on the claim for five years in order to get a deed to it. Furthermore, the homesteader can be given a small bonus for reforestation of a part of his homestead.

ANTI-TUBERCULOSIS

New Legislation in Regard to it Now in Effect

Must Be Reported in Twenty-Four Hours. Provides for Placarding.

The anti-tuberculosis legislation enacted by the recent legislature went into effect with the beginning of this month. The law provides for the reporting of all cases of tuberculosis in the state of Michigan, within 24 hours after the knowledge of such case comes to the attending physician, with penalties imposed for the failure to make such reports. It declares tuberculosis to be an infectious and communicable disease and requires the disinfection of premises where persons having open tuberculosis have lived and the prevention of the occupancy of such premises until duly disinfected by the local board of health in accordance with methods indorsed and recommended by the State Board of Health. The local health officer is to direct the disinfection of such premises. It also provides for the placarding of infected apartments or premises with the following: "Tuberculosis is a communicable disease. These apartments have been occupied by a consumptive and may be infected. They must not be occupied until the order of the health officer directing their disinfection or renovation has been complied with. This notice must not be removed under the penalty of the law except by the health officer or other duly authorized official." It also provides for a fine for the failure to carry out the regulations of the health officer. It also provides for the protection of the patient's family by means of proper instruction concerning the prevention of the disease given either by the attending physicians or by the local health officer. Circulars of information are to be provided by the State Board of Health. The law also aims to prohibit the carelessness of persons having tuberculosis.

BOY CITY IS NOW BOOMING

Boys are Arriving from Every Direction.

BIG CROWD FROM TRAVERSE CITY

Special Arrangements have been Made For Charlevoix Boys

Election Day Next Wednesday—Candidates Active—County Fair—Program for Next Week, Beginning Sunday

This week has been a busy one at Boy City, everything and everybody being in a rush preparing for the opening day for visitors and evening Chautauqua Sunday. Excursion trains will be run from Traverse City and Petoskey and all boat lines, and it is expected that everybody in Charlevoix and surrounding country will be present to help swell the crowd.

Today a big crowd arrived from Traverse City which will have a camp of fifty boys, who are talking of having a candidate for mayor and if they do they are planing a boosters day, August 28, election day.

Thursday morning special excursions will arrive from Petoskey, East Jordan and Boyne City, and the same morning at Traverse City there will be a parade of the Traverse City boys and the Manistee band forty strong, who are expected to arrive at that hour o'clock.

One of the largest wards in the city will be the Charlevoix, as arrangements have been made whereby Charlevoix boys, who have employment during the day, may become residents of the city, making their home there at night and at other times when not otherwise engaged.

Judge Brown has taken a special interest in this arrangement and will give the Charlevoix ward his special attention. This will enable the boys to vote and become regular citizens, have the advantage of all the evening entertainments and activities of the city.

It is expected that fully 50 boys will in this way become citizens of Boy City. Any boy or their parents desiring to make provisions can see Judge Brown at Boy City or Mr. Hahn. Tents and cots have been secured, and by special arrangement the boys can get meals at the restaurant for 16 cts. per meal. Some of the boys expect to have real campfire and cook their own meals, as all supplies can be purchased at the various Boy City business houses. Parents of the boys camping can also provide some of the prepared food.

Judge Brown says if the boys knew what fun was every boy in Charlevoix between the ages of 11 and 17 would live in Boy City for three weeks.

There will be a regular county fair held on Saturday August 7th, at Charlevoix. This will be held at Boy City. There will be the regular county fair sports, greased pig races, greased pole climbing, boys race, fat man's race, prizes for the best stock and, for the housewife, for the best bread, pies etc.

There will be a horse show, Prize for the best driving team, Best riding horse, best farm team and many other prizes.

The program is one of the heaviest possible for a Chautauqua. A better program is seldom presented on any Chautauqua platform, and taken in connection with the Boy City with its hundreds of boys the day will be novel and interesting and instructive.

Next week's program follows:

Sunday, July 25.

Afternoon: Prelude, Dixie Jubilee Singers; Address, Judge Willis Brown, "Manufacturing a Man;" Violin solo, Master Paul Singer; Vanderyest's orchestra.

Evening: Dixie Jubilee Singers; Vesper address, Hon. W. A. Gardner, St. Louis, Missouri; Sacred concert, Zouave Band.

Wednesday, July 28.

Morning: Election day at Boy City. Voting for mayor and city officials. Political speeches by boy orators.

Afternoon: Inauguration of mayor. Jollification meeting. Addresses by successful candidates and visiting men of note, including

The Blossoms of the Beatitudes.

"Another of the saying was this: 'Blessed are the meek.' Does not that bring to your mind the grain that is so lowly in its nature, growing in the marshy earth where the water stands? Yet it is so beautiful as it lifts up its stately head and takes its hue from the blue sky above. It gains its grace and beauty by reaching up toward the high places even though its source is lowly. And surely, if we but follow these teachings of the new Rabbi, and stand humbly before God, ever lifting our eyes to the heavens, our lives will all be filled with glory. We must wait patiently on the Lord and he will give us our hearts' desires.

"Then when he said: 'Blessed are the peacemakers,' I thought of the saffron that grows in our garden and is so wondrous sweet, its odor rising like incense unto the very throne of God. What could be more of a sweet-smelling savor before God than the intercessions of his people among their fellow-men and their prayers before him for the peace that was heralded by the angels at Bethlehem?

"He said: 'Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy.' This made me think of the pomegranate blossom—the blood-red flower that typifies the blood poured out for the forgiveness of sins. It is the flower that is carved on the pillars of the temple and that speaks to all of the forgiveness of sins by the shedding of innocent blood. The prophet says: 'Come now, let us reason together, saith Jehovah: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow,' but the Teacher said one day: 'If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.' O sister, there is no other way.' We must have the red pomegranates of forgiveness in our hearts before the white lilies of purity can be ours."

A silence fell upon the sisters. The hush and peace of the night were over them, and they could hear the sleepy twittering of the birds in the branches overhead. The fragrance of the many flowers, the lullaby of the wind, the silvery gleam of the moonlight filtering through the leaves above them, all spoke of peace and love. No dark vision of the future reached them; no whisper of the Teacher's coming trials or of the struggles of his kingdom broke through the stillness to trouble their souls.

Once more Mary spoke, and her words were low and pathetic as she recalled the things she had heard.

"The Teacher said: 'Blessed are they, that are persecuted for righteousness' sake.' I thought of the beautiful rose of Jericho that we sometimes call 'Mary's flower.' Don't you remember the day I brought one to you? It was like one dead and long laid in the tomb. We placed it in a basin of cool spring water, and straightway, while we watched, the dry tendrils slowly unfolded till the whole plant seemed full of life. Then we fully comprehended that other name that is sometimes given to it—the resurrection flower.

"With this I thought of another blossom. Our cousin brought one to us from Egypt. She called it the lotus blossom, and told how it brings sleep and forgetfulness to the weary and the sick; and so when the Teacher said: 'Blessed are ye when men shall revile and persecute you,' I thought of this blossom. Though we are persecuted even unto death, we shall rise victorious, and in the blessed kingdom of heaven we shall forget all the trials of this life, for he who neither slumbers nor sleeps will care for us and wipe all tears from our eyes. And even for this life we shall surely have strength to bear our trials, for the Teacher told us that in our heavenly Father's sight even the very hairs of our heads are numbered.

"Sister, as this Rabbi talked, my heart burned within me. There came to me again and again the thought, This must be Messiah. He must be the Lamb of God who is to take away the sin of the world. Think of the dove on the day of his baptism, and the voice which said: 'This is my beloved Son.' Is not this the Saviour who shall redeem Israel, the Sun of Righteousness who shall rise with healing in his wings? Surely the new Rabbi is the Saviour."

With these words a vision of the future seemed to fall upon them, and as in a glass darkly, they saw this Man as the One who would bring rest to the weary, comfort to the weeping, joy to the mourning, assurance to the doubting, help to the tempted, hope to the erring, forgiveness to all the world, until every one could say: "We know whom we have believed."

As the soft voices died away and the quiet of the night once more cast its spell over them, their brother came into the garden, and with him One upon whom the moonbeams fell lovingly. The Guest gazed earnestly upon the mystic beauty of the sky like one who was in communion with him who knows the stars by name; but as he drew near to the house, he turned his face toward the sisters and greeted them with the quiet salutation which they were destined to hear often in the coming days.

"Peace be to you and to this house."

POSITION FOR SLEEP.

A Variety of Opinions Among Eminent French Medical Men.

A number of eminent French medical men have given their opinion to the Matin of Paris on what they consider the healthiest position for sleep.

Dr. Delorme, army medical inspector, declares that the natural position is to lie flat on one's back. Professor Debove and Dr. Davenlere of the School of Hygiene are of the same opinion and point out that lying on either side causes pressure of the arm, which may eventually bring about paralysis.

Dr. Landouzy of the medical faculty says that the best position is the most comfortable position, and this is acquired by habit. It would be well, however, to accustom oneself to sleep on the right side. Dr. Letulle of the Medical academy maintains emphatically that the sleeper should always lie on the right side and thus avoid indigestion and heart troubles.

In startling contradiction comes a statement from a heart specialist, Dr. Huchard: "I always sleep on my left side, and I think it is quite immaterial whether you lie on your left or right side. The idea, however, that those who cannot lie on the left side suffer from heart affection is quite erroneous."

Where Neatness Pays.

Too much care cannot be used in preparing butter for the market. The fancy package outsells one inferior in looks. Recently at a demonstration lecture under the auspices of the Oklahoma Dairymen's association two buckets of butter scored exactly the same, and the only way to differentiate was by the appearance of the package. The owner of the neater package was given a higher score because of neatness.

CHECKING NOXIOUS WEEDS.

Line of Road Improvement That Should Not Be Overlooked.

It is encouraging to see the attention that is being paid to good roads all through the United States. Various state organizations are taking the matter up, national conventions are being held, and an international meeting was recently called to convene in France. Everything points toward better highways, better facilities for marketing crops and better conditions for the farmer.

A good road brings one nearer to his neighbors, nearer to his church and school and nearer to his market. The time will soon come when one will speak of a farm as being ten minutes distant from town rather than two miles. The popularity which the automobile is rapidly acquiring among farmers will promote this good roads movement.

There is a splendid opportunity for the individual to help the good work along by taking care of the roads in front of his own farm. There is no surer method than to take pride in the road that goes past your door.

There is one line of road improvement—the holding in check of noxious weeds—that is frequently overlooked. Every roadway can be kept free from these with comparatively little labor if the matter is taken up promptly. Each weed that matures bears a more prolific crop of seed than its predecessor. If the fence corners and the roadside are kept free it will be an easy matter to exterminate the undesirable weed pests which are coming to be a decided problem. If you cannot drag your road, you can at least have regard for your adjacent field to keep the weeds from growing along the roadside.

MAINTENANCE OF HIGHWAYS.

Features of the Patrol System to Keep Roads In Good Condition.

The new state highway commission has announced that it expects to adopt the patrol system for the maintenance of the state and county highways heretofore improved by state aid. This will involve the maintenance of a force of some 180 patrolmen, each with a horse and cart and each assigned to look after the repair of ten miles of road. This system involves an expense of $320 a year per mile of road to be repaired. It has been successfully followed out in keeping in condition improved highways in Massachusetts and in certain foreign countries, and under the system the roads are kept in such a state of efficiency that much in the way of expensive repair work is avoided.

The road legislation has also voted to establish immediately a bureau of research for the purpose of investigating the various methods of construction in vogue in the leading states and for conducting experiments with a view to ascertaining the best form of construction which will be adapted to the present conditions, having in mind especially the great damage caused by automobile traffic.

FLORIDA SAWDUST ROADS.

Southern Expert Finds It Cheaper and Best Material to Use.

They are making roads of sawdust mixed with earth on a new plan in Leon county, Fla. Two ridges of earth are thrown up with a road machine a few feet of width from each other, and the space between is filled with a six inch bed of sawdust. This is followed with a scatter and blade, which blows up and mixes the earth with the sawdust. This makes a roadbed on which the tires of the heaviest loaded vehicles make no impression. The county engineer, H. Ayers, has kept an accurate account of expenses in connection with this section of sawdust and earth road and says the cost aggregates $297 a mile, showing it to be about the cheapest road material to use.

It may be suggested that sawdust is not a durable material, but the Florida True Democrat meets this objection with the statement that one or two such roads were constructed in a south Georgia county twenty years ago and are still in good condition, showing its durability. As is well known, Leon county soil is clayey.

Oil For Country Roads.

A most interesting experiment is being conducted in central Illinois near Springfield. The state highway commission is making a test of oil on country roads. While oil roads are no novelty in many parts of the United States, they are not known on the heavy black soil of central Illinois. The top soil of the road is being mixed with an asphalt oil to the depth of six inches. In many parts of the Sucker State stone roads are out of the question. Without the material near at hand the great prairie states cannot expect to have stone pikes, as do some of the eastern states. Good roads must be secured by drainage, special care and possibly by the use of oil. This experiment will be watched with a great deal of interest.

How to Clean Asbestus Mats.

"I had a set of asbestus mats given to me," said a housekeeper, "which kept my table from scarring and were a joy to me until they got so soiled I thought they must be thrown away. A friend told me to put them on top of the hot coals in the range to clean them. I did. The dirt was burned off, and they were as clean as when new."

The Boy and the Professor.

"I was nibbling Professor Bore yesterday, and he caught me."

"What did he say?"

"Told me to stop making a fool of myself."

A PLUCKY LAWYER.

The Way Stewart Returned a Desperado's Threat.

"The late Senator Stewart believed in muscular Christianity, and many a rough and tumble fight did he have in the old days in California and Nevada," said a California congressman.

"He was not quarrelsome, but he was never known to run away from an encounter, and as he was a powerful man physically there were not many who were keen to tackle him. On one occasion a noted desperado was interested in a mining suit and sent word to Stewart, who was at my father's office, that if he appeared in court the next day the former would be killed. The fellow had slain half a dozen men, but his threat to bowl-knife the plucky senator lawyer. The desperado had a well known system of hiding a pistol in his coat pocket and shooting his man without openly drawing the weapon. This, Stewart knew, and so when he walked into the courtroom the first thing he did was to lay down a bowie knife about a foot and a half long and a six shooter as big as a young cannon on the table directly in front of him. Then, sternly eying the bad man, he said: 'I hear you mean to kill me if I argue this case. That's a game two can play at. That pistol you have in your coat isn't worth a cent against this layout. The minute you put your right hand in your pocket I'll send a bullet into you, and if that doesn't finish you this knife will.'

"An old miner who was present and told me the story said the fellow turned white as a sheet and slunk out of the courtroom to appear no more."—Baltimore American.

To Improve Flight.

During a big Presbyterian convention in 1865 a rhetorical Scotchman from Ohio got the floor. His speech was replete with mingled humor and sarcasm. In the course of it, says the Rev. Galusha Anderson in a book entitled "A Border City During the Civil War," he made this remark about his own eloquence:

"The speech of the brother from this city brought to my mind an experience of my school days. I wrote an oration and handed it to my teacher.

"When he had examined it he called me to him and said:

"'Taylor, if you would only pluck a few feathers from the wings of your imagination and stick them into the tail of your judgment you would write a good deal better.'"

How to Keep Shirt Waists Trim.

If you have difficulty in holding your shirt waists down make a belt of strong elastic two inches smaller than your waist. Then sew a hook on one end and an eye on the other and fasten around the waist over the shirt waist and under the skirt band. It works like a charm.

Courtenay wished specially to find out what chance, if any, there was of the Abenlof attack being renewed.

It was obvious that some of the maimed Indians recognized Suarez, notwithstanding his changed appearance, the instant he spoke to them. At once they broke out into an excited chattering, and Suarez was so disconcerted by the things they conveyed that he stammered a good deal and seemed to flounder in giving the Spanish rendering.

"This fellow is telling us just as much as he thinks it is good for us to know," said Courtenay sternly when the interpreter avoided his accusing gaze. "Tell him out with the whole truth, Christobal, or it shall be his pleasing task to escort his dear friends back to their family circles."

Being detected, Suarez faltered no longer. A ship's lifeboat had been driven ashore lower down the coast. Fourteen men had landed. They were captured by the Indians after a useless resistance in which three were killed. The dead men supplied a ghoulish feast next day, and the others were bound securely and placed in a cave in order to be killed at intervals, an exact parallel to the fate of Suarez's own companions five years earlier.

But on this occasion a woman intervened. Suarez confessed very reluctantly that there was a girl in the tribe to whom he had taught some words of his own language. He declared that the relations between them were those of master and servant, but the poor creature had fallen in love with him and had become nearly frantic with grief when he disappeared. It was difficult to analyze her motives, but she had undoubtedly freed the eleven sailors and led them over the rocks at low water to a cave on Guanago hill, believed by the Indians to be haunted. The Indians dared not follow, but they took good care that no canoes were obtainable by which the unhappy fugitives could reach the ship, and they were confident that hunger would soon drive them forth.

Courtenay's brow became black with anger when he understood the significance of this staggering story.

"It comes to this," he said to Christobal. "The men who got away from the Kansas in No. 3 lifeboat fell into the hands of the savages early on the day of the ship's arrival here. Suarez slipped his cable that night, being aware of the fact that eleven white captives were still alive. Yet he said no word, not even when he heard that we had seen one of the boat's water casks in a canoe. What sort of mean hound can he be?"

Suarez needed no translation to grasp the purport of Courtenay's words. He besought the senor captain to have patience with him. He had escaped from a living tomb and felt that he would yield up his life rather than return. Therefore when he saw how few in number and badly armed were they and the ship he thought it best to remain silent as to the fate of the boat's crew. In the first place, he fully expected that they had been killed by the Indians, who would be enraged by his own disappearance; secondly, he did not know how hopeless any attempt at rescue must prove; finally, he wished to spare the feelings of those who had befriended him. Of what avail were reckless mind torturings regarding the hapless beings in the hands of the savages?

There was a certain plausibleness in this reasoning which aided to assuage Courtenay's wrath, though it in no way diminished his disgust.

"Ask him if he thinks the Indians believe the white men are still living," he said. A fresh series of grunts and clicks elicited the fact that the smoke column seen the previous day on Guanaco hill had not been created by the tribe. Suarez begged the senor captain to remember that he had spoken truly when he declared that its meaning was unknown to him. Probably it was what he now learned the girl who threw in her lot with the sailors had built a fire there.

Courtenay turned on his heel and quitted the cabin. Christobal, well knowing how the demons of doubt and despair were afflicting Courtenay, followed him to the upper deck. Boyle was by the chart house, and Tollemache, Pedro and Juan noted the captain's troubled face.

Courtenay obtained a telescope. With the feet which never failed him, even in such a desperate crisis as this, he landed the doctor his binoculars. Then both men looked at the summit of Guanaco hill. Though it was high noon and the landscape was shimmering in the heat put forward by the unusual power and brilliance of the sun, they distinctly saw a thin pillar of smoke rising above the crags. Courtenay closed his telescope. He made to approach Boyle, evidently for the purpose of giving some order, when Christobal said quietly:

"Wait! I have something to say to you. You ought to remain on the ship. Let me go!"

"You?"

"Yes, I. After all, it is only a matter of taking command. One man cannot go alone. He could not even pull the lifeboat so far; hence what you can do I can do, and I have no objection to dying in that way."

"Why should either of us die?"

"You know better than I how little chance there is of saving those men. You may deem me callous if I suggest that the reasonable thing would be to forget the miserable statement you have just heard. Oh, please hear me to the end. I am not talking for your sole benefit, believe me. Greatly as I and all on board are beholden to you, I do not propose giving my life in your stead because of my abounding admiration for your many virtues. Well, then, since you are so impatient as to be at one I come straight to the point. If you take command of a boat's crew and endeavor to save those men, and I cover it, you will almost certainly throw away your life and the lives of those who help you. In that event neither she whom we are both interested will suffer grievously. On the other hand, if I were killed she would weep a little, because she has a large heart, but you would console her. And the odd thing is that you and I are fully aware that either you or I must go off on this fool's errand. There is none other to take the vacant place. Now, have I made myself clear?"

"While I command the Kansas I am responsible for the well being of the ship, her crew and her passengers. I could never forgive myself if I left those men to the mercy of the Indians. I cannot permit either you or Tollemache to take a risk which I shirk. Boyle and Walker must remain on board—lest I fall. Now, Christobal, don't make my duty harder. Shake hands! I am proud to claim you as a friend."

"Huh," said Boyle, strolling toward them. "What is it—a bet?"

"Yes," laughed Courtenay, from whose face all doubt had vanished, "a bet backed, and you hold the stakes. Have you seen the smoke signal yonder?" And he pointed across the bay.

"Yes. Tollemache found it again twenty min'tes since."

"It means that eleven of our men are there, expecting us to save them. Hoist the ship's answering pennant from the main yard swung out to starboard. Build a small fire on the poop and throw some oil and lampblack on it. If they don't recognize the pennant they will understand the smoke. Get some food and water stowed in the lifeboat and offer £5 a head to six men who will volunteer for a trip ashore."

"I go in charge, of course, sir?" said Boyle.

"You remain here and take command during my absence. I want two revolvers for a couple of the crew, and I shall take my own gun. Please make all arrangements promptly. I am going to my cabin for five minutes and shall start immediately afterward."

This was the captain speaking. His tone admitted of no contention. Boyle hurried off, and Courtenay went into his quarters.

"What do you think of it?" Christobal asked Tollemache as the latter appeared to be sauntering after the chief officer.

"Courtenay is a hard man to stop," said Tollemache, vanishing down the companion. The Spaniard was left alone on the bridge. He paused to analyze his own communings. So complex were they, such a queer amalgam of noble fear and base expectation that he could have cried aloud in his anguish. Big drops of perspiration stood on his forehead when Courtenay came to him.

"For God's sake, don't go," said he hoarsely. "Do you know you are playing me on the rack?"

"Your sufferings are of your own contriving, then. Why, man, there's no reason for all this agony. I have written to Elsie, briefly explaining matters. Here is the letter. Give it to her if I don't return. And now pull yourself together. I want you to cheer her. Above all things, don't let her know I am leaving the ship. I'll just swing myself overboard at the last moment. I can't say goodby. I don't think I could stand that."

CHAPTER XVII.

ISOBEL'S drooping was of brief endurance. Elsie and Mrs. Somerville supported her to the stateroom, and there Elsie sat with her a little while soothing her as one might comfort a child in pain.

Isobel, stupefied by some haunting knowledge which appeared to have a vague connection with the misfortunes of the Kansas, yielded to Elsie's gentle compulsion and endeavored to close her eyes.

Through the open port Elsie heard a man walk rapidly along the deck and halt outside the door. She half rose from her knees to answer the expected knock, thinking that Mrs. Somerville had sent a steward to ascertain if Mr. Barling needed anything, but the newcomer evidently changed his mind and turned back. Then came Courtenay's voice, low, but compelling:

"One moment, M. de Poincillt. A word with you."

"Another time, m'sieu'. I pray you pardon me now. I feel I am not strong enough yet to venture on deck."

"Oh, yes, you are, m'sieu'. I want to give you the chance of your life. M. Gray has told me of your bravery, and he charitably added that your prudence and treachery might have availed you from any reasonable fear. Now, I am going to ask you for your comfort, perhaps an opportunity. I am talking a little rash as I try to save some of those who are imprisoned there. There is a fair risk in the venture. The outcome may be death. Will you volunteer to take an oar? That would whitewash your weather marks."

"It is impossible. I am too feeble. I cannot row."

"Ah, you swine! Can it be possible that you are a Frenchman? What sort of countship is it you boast of?"

"Sir, I am a passenger on this ship"—Courtenay's voice was raised a little.

"Mr. Boyle," he said, "give orders that if this skunk shows his nose inside the saloon again he is to be kicked out. He can eat his meals in the stateroom or in the fore cabin with the other savages."

Elsie heard every word. She fancied, too, that Isobel was listening, though she gave no sign. But the unknown cause of the captain's anger was as naught compared with the statement that he was about to leave the ship. She had heard the lowering of the boat without heeding. He was already climbing down the ship's side. Soon he would be far from her, perhaps never to return, for he was not one to paint imaginary ills, and had he not told De Poincillt what the outcome of the undertaking might be? She found Isobel looking at her with frightened eyes.

"Did you hear?" came the tense whisper.

"Yes."

"And you are content to let him go?"

"Ah, God! Yes, content."

"Then it is folly. He is the captain. He should not go. We have risked [illegible] Why was he not they [illegible] the instant [illegible] may conceal [illegible] cannot

She brushed away the tears determinedly and looked at the boat, already a white speck on the green carpet of the bay. She could see Courtenay distinctly. Some inexplicable impulse led her to gaze at her, because she had not been watching him longer than a few seconds when he turned and waved his hand. She replied hastily, fluttering a handkerchief. Then both men stood up, evidently for the purpose of taking a last look at the ship.

Elsie fell on her knees and prayed as she had never prayed before. She implored the Almighty to spare the life of the man she loved, to bring him back to her arms. She was not ashamed of her love. She was not afraid to confess it. Her whole soul was centered in the boat and its occupants. Then she rose and looked again. The boat was a mere dot on the sea. She could not see Courtenay's face. She could not see Isobel. She could not see anything but the blue water and the white sails of the fishing craft.

Then she went to the cabin door and opened it. Pedro was there. He had been ordered to remain within call. Juan was on deck. Pedro was sitting on the floor of the passage, his head resting on his arms. He looked up when Elsie appeared.

"Pedro," she said, "I am going to my cabin. Do not leave the door. Call me if Miss Isobel wakes."

"Si, señorita."

Elsie closed the door and sat down. She was trembling violently. Her heart was beating so fast that she could hear it. She was conscious of a sense of suffocation. She felt that she must have air. She rose and opened the port. Then she sat down again. She was afraid to look out. She was afraid to look in the mirror. She was afraid to look at herself. She was afraid to look at anything. She was afraid to look at nothing. She was afraid to look at all. She was afraid to look at none. She was afraid to look at any. She was afraid to look at some. She was afraid to look at one. "AT the meeting of the director of the Board of Commerce, wit Mr. Rowe, to take up the questio of making an exhibit at Chicag white fruit, and our superiority i its production, was the main que tion considered the fact was no lost sight of that in everything tha makes for profitable husbandry Charlevoix county is ready to mee all comers.

The richest sections of our state to-day are those engaged in the production of fruit, sugar beets and the products of the dairy. We have soil that is adapted to fruit growing and the industry is making better farmers, which everybody admits is the chief need of our country. It is said that this is not a county adapted to the growing of corn and therefore stock and dairy husbandry cannot be successfully carried on, this in the face of the fact that there are Charlevoix dairymen to-day, whose cows are bringing them in a revenue of one hundred dollars each. We don't know as it is necessary to raise corn for grain purposes, nor that it is the most profitable feed for dairy cows. Other food stuffs, rich in protin, can be purchased in Charlevoix as cheaply as anywhere and we can devote our soil to the raising of silage, hay and beets. We also believe that a profitable field is open in this section for sheep husbandry, which goes along with the production of beans which are proving a very successful crop in this locality.

But chief and foremost to advance our county we must have good roads, as the largest expense to almost any crop is the cost of transportation, the largest percent of which is that of over our wagon roads.

STARCHED CLOTHES.

The Fashion Was Started in England by Queen Elizabeth.

The practice of starching linen is at least 300 years old. It is said to have originated under Queen Elizabeth. Its inventor was a Dutchwoman, the wife of a Mr. Guilheem, who was driver at the royal court. Mrs. Guilheem understood so well how to improve a small deficiency in the dress of her royal mistress by means of fluted collars, frills and laces that Elizabeth overwhelmed her with favors and privileges and finally elevated her to the rank of chief inspectress of the court linen.

The fashion introduced by the queen was of course soon followed by all the women of rank. The toil for this new art finally degenerated into a veritable mania for starching, ironing, folding, etc. Later special "professors" of the art of starching established themselves in London, among them a Flemish woman of the name of Dinghen van der Plasse seems to have occupied the highest rank. Those privileged to be initiated by her in the art had to pay no less than £5 for a lesson.

Later they began to add blue color to the starch. Queen Elizabeth, who was very anxious about her questionable beauty, found that the addition of blue gave a green hue to her complexion. She therefore prohibited her subjects wearing any other than pure white starched linen, claiming that blue washed linen was injurious to health. But fashion proved superior even to "good Queen Bess." They continued merrily to use blue starch, though one woman after the other had to go to prison for transgressing the "blue law."—Boston Post.

Fraternity Pins.

Fraternity pins are seldom lost, and when they do disappear they often turn up again, sometimes years afterward. In the most out of the way places. As they always bear the owner's name and chapter engraved on the back it is not a difficult matter to return them. One "old grad" who lost his pin shortly after he left college and bought another now has two, the original emblem having been returned in a singular manner. A "brother" had observed the familiar token reposing upon the handanna of an old colored mammy in a little town in Virginia. Upon questioning her he learned that she had come by it "taking in washing." After much persuasion she was prevailed upon to surrender the trophy.—New York Post.

Easily Satisfied.

A countryman who was "doing London" went to a concert hall and inquired the prices of seats.

"Front seats, 2 shillings; back, 1 shilling; programs, a penny," said the attendant.

"Oh, well, then," the visitor remarked blandly, "I'll take a program seat."

Result of Bad Roads.

There is another matter that makes bad roads a factor of loss. That is in the sale of the farm. A farm ten miles out on a road impassable for five months in the year has five-twelfths of its usefulness impaired and is certainly worth 33 1-3 per cent intrinsically less than it should be were the roads not so bad. Bad roads are a deterrent to settlement, thus driving an additional value away from farm land due to increasing population. They act as a repellant force to drive the boys and girls and desirable citizens from farm life.

How to Preserve an Umbrella Jar.

The housekeeper who has suffered from having her umbrella jar broken by hastily pushed in umbrellas should welcome the contrivance of a clever woman who declares she has learned how to prevent breaking. From an old rubber mat she cut two circles that just fitted the bottom of the jar. These were put one on top of the other, and when an umbrella was pushed in hurriedly it struck a soft surface instead of a breakable one. If one does not possess the rubber mat it will be found worth while to buy enough sheet rubber such as is used by plumbers. Its cost is nothing compared to a new umbrella jar.

How to Place Lace.

To piece lace take this figure at the end of the lace and, commencing at the end of the scallop, cut around it close to the thread that outlines the figure, being careful not to cut this thread. If there is plain net at the top cut straight through it. Baste this figure over a similar one, being careful that every point and dot is exact. With a fine thread, silk or cotton, according to the lace, sew the cut edge of the lace down, sewing over the outline thread with fine stitches. Then cut away the extra lace on the wrong side, leaving only a very narrow seam. If carefully done the seam is almost invisible.

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING

The annual school meeting of District No. 1 of the Township of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, Michigan was held in the McKinley Building July 13, 1909.

Meeting called to order at 7:30 p. m., by G. W. Crouter, President of School Board. F. J. Meech, director, then read the notice of the annual school meeting, together with an affidavit of posting said notice.

Thereupon R. W. Kane offered the following resolution,

RESOLVED, that school district number one of the Township of Charlevoix and City of Charlevoix, in the County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan borrow the sum of nine thousand ($9000.00) dollars for the purpose of paying and retiring a like amount of valid outstanding bonds of said district in the amount of nine thousand ($9000.00) to draw interest at a rate, not to exceed 5 per cent in such amounts and payable at such dates respectively as the School Board may determine, not to exceed, in any case, ten years from the date of issue of such bonds;

AND RESOLVED FURTHER, that the district levy an annual tax upon all the taxable property therein of one thousand ($1000.00) dollars to provide a sinking fund for the payment of the principal of such bonds when they shall respectively fall due, commencing with the present levy for the year 1908-9 and that at each annual school meeting commencing with the present one, so long as said bonds or any of them remain unpaid, a sum be levied by direct tax upon the taxable property of said district equal to the intrest of the bonds then outstanding and unpaid as a fund out of which to pay such interest;

AND RESOLVED FURTHER, that the sum of four thousand ($1000.00) dollars, out of the money now on hand in the sinking fund of this district, be appropriated to the payment of the aforesaid issue of bonds now outstanding and unpaid.

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the School Board be, and they are hereby authorized to issue, negotiate, sell and deliver for the best price obtainable therefor but at not less than par.

Thereupon the chair announced that the vote upon said resolution must be by ballot in accordance with the provisions of Chapter six of the General School Laws. Upon motion, William Cook was appointed by the legal electors present to act as one of the inspectors of said election and Albert F. Bridge and Harvey L. Iddings, members of the School Board of said district being present, were also appointed and acted as inspectors of said election, which Board of Inspectors was composed as follows: Harvey L. Iddings, Albert F. Bridge and William Cook. Harvey L. Iddings was chosen chairman of said board.

Thereupon a suitable ballot box was provided by said board, and the polls of said election were duly opened, by notice to that effect, given by the chairman of said board of election inspectors, at the hour of 7:15 p. m. The inspectors supplied a poll list and caused the same to be kept. Upon which was entered the name of each person voting at said election. Said ballot box was kept open for two hours and voting was done by ballot provided by the inspectors.

The minutes of last annual meeting were read and approved.

Report of Treasurer was read by Treasurer A. F. Bridge, and on motion of R. W. Kane was accepted and adopted.

Secretary's report was read by the Secretary and on motion of Mr. A. Fitch was accepted and adopted.

Moved by Mr. R. W. Kane that a tax of eight (8) mills on the assessed property of School District No 1 of the Township and City of Charlevoix be spread on the tax rolls of 1909 to defray the general expenses of said district and for the accounts thereof, including the payment of any bond or indebtedness of said district which may be paid during the current year. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Chapel that drinking fountains be installed in school buildings of the district. Carried.

On motion of R. W. Kane, the meeting proceeded to the election of two trustees to succeed A. F. Bridge and G. W. Crouter. Chair appointed Ralph Washburn, Raymond Bentley and H. S. Harshaw tellers.

On ballot for first trustee, A. F. Bridge received 41 votes. A. M. Wilkinson 3. A. L. Fitch 1. A. F. Bridge having a majority of all votes cast was declared duly elected.

On first ballot for second trustee. No choice. On second ballot for second trustee. No choice.

On third ballot, A. M. Wilkinson having received a majority of all votes cast was declared duly elected.

Moved by Mr. Fitch that reports of Secretary and Treasurer be published in city papers, the week preceding annual election. Carried.

After the expiration of two hours from the opening of the polls and at the hour of 9:45 p. m., the said election was closed by the announcement of that fact by the chairman of the Board of Inspectors. Thereupon the Board of Election Inspectors proceeded to canvass said votes, first comparing the number of ballots found in said ballot box with the number registered upon the poll list, which numbers agreed. After canvassing said vote, the chairman of the board announced the same as follows:

Yes and for the resolution, 40.

No and against the resolution none.

Whereupon said resolution was declared carried.

On motion meeting adjourned.

FASTEST HORSE IN THE WORLD.

Dan Patch Will Race Minor Heir to Beat the World's Record.

Horse lovers and all followers of the racing game will be given an unusual treat at the Michigan State Fair Sept. 2-10 when they see Dan Patch (1:55) and Minor Heir (1:55½) fight it out for the world's championship honors.

M. W. Savage, who for several years has been the owner of Dan Patch, recently purchased Minor Heir for $45,000 and has consented to let these two world's fastest harness horses appear in a series of races.

True to his first love, Mr. Savage insists that as long as Dan Patch stays right he will be able to defend the championship against all comers, even against the fleet son of Heir-at-Law.

Mr. Savage has given orders that both horses be trained to the minute and that when they go their race as exhibitions each shall be driven to his limit so that there will be an honest test of speed, gameness and stamina.

There are some horsemen who believe that Minor Heir will develope as great, if not greater, speed than Dan Patch. He was a green pacer last year, and as such gave some of the most wonderful performances on record. He has a terrific flight of speed, and if under the scientific care of Harry Hersey, he can be filled so as to hold his lick for a mile, he will give Dan Patch all he can do.

From present indications it is evident that the Michigan State Fair never had so popular a drawing card as the scheduled race between these two world's champions.

Thousands of people will go to Detroit for the opportunity merely to see these two champion horses go in one of the greatest races in the history of the world.

While discussing the two horses a short time ago Mr. Henry C. Hersey, superintendent of Mr. Savage's farm, and famous as the trainer and driver of Dan Patch, had the following to say:

"I am now working Dan and Minor Heir twice a week, Tuesdays and Fridays. I am repeating them now, giving each the last mile around 2:07.

I will continue in this way until I begin working each horse four heats on Tuesdays and Fridays. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays and Saturdays the horses are now jogged about four or five miles, and I will continue this after the more severe work is in progress.

"My plan is gradually to work them up to faster miles and to keep them as big and strong as possible. Dan Patch now weighs 1,100 and will work down to about 1,075 pounds, when he is fit for great miles. His rival now tips the scales at 1,020 pounds and will weigh in close to 1,000 pounds when he is ready.

I want to keep them both as big as I can and still have them hard and not fat inside. I am slowly working off the surplus fat, changing it into muscle.

"At present I am giving Minor Heir a little more jogging and a trifle stiffer work than the champion. He needs to develope more staying qualities. The physical condition of each horse seems perfect. They have plenty of lick and are feeling almost

MAKES A FINE SHOWING.

Michigan State Fair One of the Nation's Best.

While the Michigan State Fair is not blessed with the liberal legislative aid that goes to similar institutions, it makes a showing that puts others far in the shade.

Last year the total attendance was 186,000. At the same time Wisconsin showed only 122,000; New York, 166,000; Kentucky, 102,000; Ohio, 121,173; Nebraska, 112,500; Spokane Interstate, 111,866; Indiana, 115,000.

Michigan's net profits were $15,000. That of Wisconsin, $4,137.30; New York, $20,000; Kentucky, $12,000; Ohio, $18,399.22; Iowa $11,171.45; Nebraska $21,000; Spokane Interstate, $9,715.51; Illinois $7,600; South Dakota, $393.97; Oklahoma, $14,719.50.

Michigan's total disbursements, not including amount for improvements were $94,510.20; Wisconsin, $87,737.70; New York, $70,000; Kentucky $28,000; Ohio, $46,611.62; Iowa, $94,503.21; Nebraska, $53,750; Spokane Interstate $72,580.16; Illinois, $80,000; South Dakota, $25,203.67; Oklahoma $11,918.

"So good. Dan never looked better at this time of the year."

THE FINICKY CHILD.

How a Clever Mother Can Tempt a Fitful Appetite.

The guardians of a finicky child know that mealtime is often more than a matter of table setting and food buying. Theorists say, "Make a child eat!" But mothers know that this is often impossible until the little one is reduced to sickness.

It will be found easier to tempt the fitful appetite rather than to scold or punish. Delicate children can often be coaxed into a hearty meal when force work would mean a scene. Make the meal a playtime. Serve bread and butter cut into thin slices and piled up log cabin wise into a house and pretend the child is an ogre to eat it up.

Name dishes for different rhymes, as Jack Horner's pie for hollowed out rolls cooked like croutons and filled with the mouth-shaped poached eggs. Potatoes can be molded into the form of a wall with an egg perched on top to represent Humpty Dumpty. The child will quickly eat up the egg to prevent "the great fall."

Boiled rice can be molded into snowballs, floating island can have all sorts of delightful fancies woven about it, vegetables can be cut into odd shapes, and nourishing custards, if put in half whimsical molds of animals, will be eaten without a protest.

Beef juice usually causes a struggle, but if the child protests he is Jack the Giant Killer, hurrying to get rid of the delicious juice lest the giant think it "the blood of an Englishman," it is swallowed without a murmur.

The game becomes of interest to mother as well as child, as the necessity to invent new stories and fresh forms to tempt the little one to eat demands ingenuity. Insensibly the child learns to eat, so that later the practice can be discontinued.

A trouble? Yes, but not half so troublesome as to sit up half the night with a child cross from lack of food or as to see dear ones dwindling from insufficient nourishment that a little effort could supply.

How to Handle Fine Carriages.

The following instructions are given by an experienced carriage builder in reference to the care of fine carriages: Freshly varnished carriages should be washed frequently and exposed to the air in the shade and should not be covered until the varnish has become hard. Mud allowed to dry upon fresh varnish will leave spots, and exposure to ammonia will destroy fresh varnish. Plenty of water should be used and great care taken that it is not driven into the hubs of the carriage, to the injury of the lining. For the body panels a large, soft sponge must be used and when saturated squeezed over the panels, aid this by the thawing power of the water the dirt will be soaked and run off harmlessly. Care should be taken to wipe the surface dry with soft chamois leather. Never use the same sponge and chamois for panels which are used for running gear. Never use soap on varnished surfaces, and only take off the grease and dirt around the hubs and axles.

How to Save Gas on Ironing Days.

When using a gas stove to heat the irons for ironing much gas can be saved by buying a tin pan large enough to fit over the number of flat-irons used. A dishpan is excellent for this purpose. Make a hole in the bottom of the pan and fasten a holder here. Small wooden knobs can be bought for 5 cents at any hardware store. The knob should be fastened on the outside of the pan. Use this pan to cover the irons with, and they will keep the right heat with the gas turned much lower. You will be surprised at the amount of gas this will save and how hot the irons will be to work with. It is not difficult to remove the pan when the irons need changing, as the wooden handle will not become hot.

How to Relieve Headache.

There are many kinds and causes of headache, but probably the two most common headaches result from nervousness or a disordered stomach.

In cases where there seems to be too much blood in the head, when there is a pounding in the temples and behind the ears, a warm drink will often afford relief. Drink a cup of tea or water as warm as the mouth can bear it, lie down, and place the feet in hot water. This will draw the blood from the head and will relieve the pain greatly. Some chronic sufferers from headache claim that there is no cure like a brisk walk in the fresh air with as loose clothing as possible, followed by a nap in a darkened room where the fresh air abounds.

THE BUFFET LUNCHEON.

How to Give a Delightful Affair at Home With Little Trouble.

If you have too many guests to seat at a regular luncheon and do not care to give a ten or afternoon card party, why not give a buffet luncheon? It is rather novel, can be easily managed, and every one likes an informal time, says the Chicago News.

One given recently for seventy-five guests was quite a delightful affair and as quickly served as if but a dozen guests had been present.

Small chairs were rented and put close together around the dining room and back hall so that every one had a seat. The table was set in the middle of the dining room arranged for serving only. In the center was a great oblong platteau of sweet peas and asparagus vine. Silver candelabra with pink shades were used at either end of the square table, and dotted around were bonbon dishes with nuts, cakes and candy; also plates of bread and butter sandwiches.

The menu consisted of oyster cocktails, bouillon, croquets and browned oysters, fruit salad with crackers baked with Parmesan cheese and paprika. Fresh strawberry ice cream served in sherbet glasses, with strawberries on top, and coffee.

Everything was served from the kitchen, and there were enough waiters not to have delays. Several members of the family did not sit down, but moved from group to group to break up any stiffness and see that all were served promptly. Coffee was passed after the guests had risen from their chairs. This was more informal and gave an opportunity to meet friends not seen before.

The special charm of such a luncheon is that there is no formal arrangement, so guests and friends could easily manage to sit in a group.

While it saves much trouble to the hostess if everything is put into the hands of a caterer, such a lunch could easily be got up at home. The two essentials to its success are that there be plenty of waiters and that everything be ready promptly for them to pass as each course is taken out.

How to Keep Ferns In Good Condition.

Ferns should not be placed in halls or situations exposed to drafts. They require great care in watering. People often think they have watered their plants when the water has only gone over the surface and around the sides of the pots, the center of the ball being still quite dry. This is especially the case when the pots are filled with roots. It is necessary that the ball should be thoroughly soaked. There is no regular rule as to the time for watering. Owing to vigorous growth requires more frequent watering. Evaporation also has much to do with it. On dry, warm days, when evaporation is great, water may be needed twice a day, while if the air is cool and moist two or three days might intervene without water. A healthy, vigorous plant absorbs much water, while a delicate one can absorb but little. The soil should be examined always and if dry watered; if not, refrain from watering. When leaves shrivel and turn yellow the soil has been too dry. If they turn yellow without shriveling it indicates too much water has been given. In either case the roots have been abused and lost their power of absorption.

How to Make Oatmeal Cakes.

Three cupfuls boiling water, one cupful of oatmeal, one scant teaspoonful salt. Pour the water on the oatmeal, add the salt and cook three hours in double boiler. While still warm add one large tablespoonful of butter and one-half cupful of sugar. When cool add one-half cupful of yeast and flour to make stiff dough. Let it rise over night. In the morning bake in gem pans twenty minutes, or until brown.

The Captain of the Kansas.

By LOUIS TRACY,

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

Copyright, 1908, by Edward J. Clode.

The Standard encouraged her to debate this point—anything was better than the dull pain of thought—but their talk ceased abruptly when a muttered exclamation from Gray sent Walker flying to the chart house. Forthwith the trumpet shriek of the siren sent its wild boom across the silent waters. Elsie needed no explanation of this tumult. Otter creek was not so far distant that canoes quitting its shelter could not be seen with the naked eye. She counted sixteen putting forth in a cluster, and they all made for the adventurous lifeboat.

"That is exactly what our captain expected," Christobal was ready to assure her. "He was certain he would reach the head of the bay before the Indians awoke to the meaning of his scheme. By this time, unless his plan fails, the men on shore should have joined him, no matter what number of savages may seek to oppose their passage to the boat. The only doubtful question is, Will he be able to beat off the rascals who are now cutting his line of retreat?"

"Hmh," growled Boyle. "The skipper's out of sight now. Gone into a small creek or somethin' of the sort. Hope he heard the horn. Let her rip!" he added in a loud shout over his shoulder, and again the siren flung a warning to the foot of the mountain range.

It was evident that the wonderful eyesight of the Indians practically equaled the range of the telescope. The men in the canoes were aware of the lifeboat's disappearance, and their wet paddles flashed in the sun as they tore across the three miles of open water which separated the southern promontory from the inner shore of the Island. Creeping nearer Boyle, Elsie whispered:

"For heaven's sake, say the lifeboat is visible again!"

He held up a hand to enforce silence. A deep hush fell on the ship.

"Let's!" he muttered, so low that Elsie alone caught the words. "Can you hear it?"

She thought she could distinguish an irregular patter of dull reports, and the behavior of the Indians showed that rabbit and ex lion cat was toward. Many of them stood up and waved their arms, possibly as a signal to their allies on shore. The canoes raced madly. Where speed was vital the rough, native craft were far swifter than the sightly built lifeboat, with its broad beam and deep draft.

And that was all. Though they strained their eyes and spoke with bated breath, never a sight of boat or canoes was obtainable for hours after the latter were swallowed up by the trees which shrouded the creek at the foot of the cape hill.

Isobel Barlow, moved by genuine pity for her distraught friend, tried to induce her to leave the deck, but she shrank away terrified by the fire which blazed from the blue eyes resting on her for an instant. Mrs. Somerville came, but she, too, was repelled. When Christobal made a serious effort to lead her away she threatened him with the fierceness of a mother defending her child from evil.

But relief was vouchsafed in the worst throes of her agony.

Both sat close and never relaxed a close vigil by her side. It was Gray who made the thrilling discovery that the canoes were returning. As the fleet crossed the bay it could be seen that they were towing the lifeboat, but never a sign of any prisoners could the most careful scrutiny detect. The boat was empty. It was easy to count every man in the canoes as they passed into Otter creek, and there were wounded Indians on board many of them. That was a significant, a tremendous, fact. There had been hard fighting, and the boat was captured, but some, if not all, of the crew must have joined their comrades in the sanctuary of the haunted cave. The accuracy of this deduction was proved by the presence of the smoke column on the hill. Indeed, the opinion was generally held that its spiral clouds were denser than at any previous hour, thus showing that the defenders were endeavoring to make known their continued existence.

Elsie awoke from her trance, but in returning to life she was transformed into a stern, resourceful, commanding woman. None suspected the mighty force which worked this resolution in her nature. She conducted herself with a cunning that was wholly foreign to her character. Her first care was to hoodwink her companions into the belief that the strain of the day had passed. She accepted a cup of tea brought by Isobel, expressed her sorrow if by word or look she had given cause for offense and entered eagerly into the pros and cons of the debate which sprang up as to the best course to pursue on the following day.

Every one agreed that nothing could be done that night. If the pillar of smoke were visible at sunrise and Walker could possibly manage to fire the boilers, Boyle suggested that some sailors in the jolly boat should sound a channel along which the vessel itself might steam slowly toward Guanaco hill. That in itself would be a move of considerable value. If they could lessen the distance between the shore and the ship, each yard thus gained would help the prisoners and impose a stronger barrier against the Alaculofs, who would probably be daunted when they found that the vessel's mobility was restored.

This proposal was deemed so excellent that they all dined in vastly better spirits than any of them anticipated. Christobal, puzzled out of his scientific senses by Elsie's change of manner, kept a close eye on her. He was amazed to see her eat a better meal than she had eaten for days, and she was normally a quite healthy young person, with a reasonably good appetite.

Boyle and Gray took the first watch, from 8 o'clock to midnight. Christobal and Walker shared the next one. By 4 o'clock it would be daylight, so the doctor was retiring early to his cabin when he met Elsie, by chance, as it seemed. She was self possessed, even smiling, with a certain dour serenity.

"The day's doings have tired me," she said. "I am off to bed. Will you rap on my door soon after dawn?"

"Yes," he replied, secretly marveling at her air.

"I plead guilty to a slight feeling of nervousness," she went on. "Is your revolver loaded? Would you mind lending it to me? I think I could sleep more soundly if I had a reliable weapon tucked under my pillow."

A whiff of suspicion crossed Christobal's mind, but he brushed it aside as unworthy. At 5 o'clock that day he certainly would not have granted her request. But now, since the new hope had sprung up that Courtenay was alive, it was absurd to doubt her motives.

"For heaven's sake, say the lifeboat is visible again!"

So it came to pass that Diego Suarez, lying asleep in his bunk, awoke with a start to find a shrouded figure bending over him.

"Is that you, Senor Suarez?" asked a voice, which he recognized instantly as belonging to the Senorita Maxwell.

"Yes," said he drowsily.

"Have you the witch doctor's clothes you wore when you came on board the ship?"

"Yes, senorita."

A hand, slight, but strong, grasped him by the shoulder. He felt the rim of a revolver barrel pressed against his forehead.

ESAW WOOD.

And the Story of the Saw Esaw Saw Saw Wood.

Esaw Wood sawed Wood
Esaw Wood would saw wood!

All the wood Esaw Wood saw Esaw Wood would saw. In other words, all the wood Esaw saw to saw Esaw sought to saw.

Oh, the Wood Wood would saw! And oh, the wood saw with which Wood would saw wood.

But one day Wood's wood saw would saw no wood, and thus the wood Wood sawed was not the wood Wood would saw if Wood's wood saw would saw wood.

Now, Wood would saw wood with a wood saw that would saw wood, so Esaw sought a saw that would saw wood.

One day Esaw saw a saw saw wood as no other wood saw Wood saw would saw wood.

In fact, of all the wood saws Wood ever saw saw wood Wood never saw a wood saw that would saw wood as the wood saw Wood saw saw wood would saw wood, and I never saw a wood saw that would saw as the wood saw Wood saw would saw until I saw Esaw Wood saw wood with the wood saw Wood saw saw wood.

Now Wood saws wood with the wood saw Wood saw saw wood.

Oh, the wood the wood saw Wood saw would saw!

Oh, the wood Wood's woodshed would shed when Wood would saw wood with the wood saw Wood saw saw wood!

Finally, no man may ever know how much wood the wood saw Wood saw would saw if the wood saw Wood saw would saw all the wood the wood saw Wood saw would saw.—Woman's Home Companion.

BRICK ROAD BUILDING

Methods of Construction Adopted by an Ohio County.

MACADAM IS TOO EXPENSIVE.

Homer W. Jackson Tells Why Properly Constructed Brick Highways are Cheaper Than Stone Ones—Ten Feet Wide Enough For Country Use.

Washington county, O., has pretty definitely committed itself to a policy of brick road building. The county officials and the different city and country organizations are a unit on the subject. Some work has already been done, and a comprehensive road building campaign only waits on a little more definite knowledge as to what scheme of road building will best suit local conditions.

The unanimity of opinion as to the desirability of brick roads is surprising. I attended a monthly meeting of the Valley Farmers' club, a social organization which unites the farmers of the Ohio valley in Washington county, where the subject of an afternoon debate was, Shall Washington county issue bonds for $100,000 to build brick roads? This club has a membership of about 200, and probably 125 were present at the debate, but if there was a man among them who did not favor brick roads he did not say so either in public or private. The member who took the negative side of the question in the debate contended that with their present knowledge of brick road material and construction they were not yet ready to expend large sums.

As the facts become known about the relative cost of stone and brick roads and the enormous cost of maintaining the former brick roads are rapidly growing in popularity. While it is true that brick roads cost more than stone, the difference is not as great as is generally thought. In Washington county, for example, brick roads are being built at a cost of only $2,0 to $3,000 per mile more than macadamized roads would cost, and it has been found that the cost of maintaining the latter will in six or eight years consume all the difference. After that the maintenance of the stone road continues increasingly expensive, while the properly constructed brick ones will, under ordinary conditions, require no repairs for an indefinite period. One of Washington county's farmers observed, "The first cost of a stone road is only the beginning of the expense; the brick road is an asset."

LAYING BRICK ON A SIXTEEN FOOT ROAD.

Here, as elsewhere, it has been found that the best argument for brick road is a brick road. Two or three years ago the first one was built for a distance of half a mile along the Ohio river where the road is flooded two or three times a year and where it was contended that no other kind of a road would stay put for a single season. The brick road stayed, and every farmer who drove into Marietta over that road is clamoring for its extension.

At the time of my visit to Washington county last fall the commissioners were finishing two new brick roads, one up the Muskingum valley 18 sixteen feet wide with two feet of gravel outside the curb and two feet of earth berm outside the gravel, practically a twenty-four foot roadway. Here the brick is laid on a seven to eight inch gravel base with concrete curb, brick, curb and berm all rolled to an even surface. The cost of this road was $11,840 a mile, and it was built under state aid law.

On the west side of the Muskingum river, on the ridge above Marietta, they were building a ten foot brick road. This road was built on a direct levy made by the county commissioners, and the fact that they dared to make such a levy proves how generally public sentiment approves this kind of road building. This road has a broken stone base with two feet of stone and two of earth berm, making an eighteen foot roadway. The curb on this road is of brick. While this is the cheapest of all curbing, opinions differ as to its permanence. Certainly the berm must be kept up most carefully, as any falling away of the support will let the curb down. The cost of the different curbs used was put at $4,000 a mile for stone, $2,250 to $2,500 for concrete and $1,500 to $1,800 for brick. This ten foot road cost about the same as the sixteen foot—$11,840 for 6,300 feet—owing to the fact that it was laid out among the hills, where the grading was heavier, the hauls longer and harder and cracked stone used in place of gravel.

The ten foot roadway re-enforced with eight feet of stone and earth berm seems wide enough for ordinary country roads and met the approval of most farmers I interviewed. There was a pretty general sentiment, however, in favor of sixteen foot roadways on the main traveled roads and approaches to the city.—Homer W. Jackson in National Stockman and Farmer.

What Brown Did.

Mrs. and Mr. Brown—that isn't the usual way of putting it, but it was the way they masked—had been invited to a party where Mrs. Brown understood, there was to be a host of literary lions. Mrs. Brown is an extremely handsome woman and just enough of a coquette to attract men about her wherever she goes.

Not long after they had arrived Mrs. Brown had four men around her, while Brown was pretending to be interested in some books scattered around on a corner table. Mrs. Brown inquired of the men in turn as to just what sort of literature they produced. One confessed he was a coffee broker, another was a doctor, the third was a machinery salesman. The fourth man admitted cheerfully that his only service to literature was reading books and newspapers. At this point Brown joined the group, and the coffee broker suggested to the lady that she might ask the newcomer what he did.

"Oh," remarked Mrs. Brown, placing it at once in the discard, "he's my husband."—Exchange.

"I spent two days in that country."

"Didn't learn much about their manners and customs, then?"

"Yes, I did. Their manners are very bad, and their customs are very high. I learned that much when they opened my baggage, right on the docks."—Kansas City Journal.

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

Charlevoix Pomona Grange will meet with Maple Grove grange, Thursday August 12. At this meeting arrangements for the transportation of the five hundred patrons, who will make the trip to Traverse City next December, must be perfected and each grange is expected to have a representative present at the meeting.

The program will be along the lines recommended to the lecturer at the February meeting, held with Wilson grange.

The state speaker, Hon. D. E. McClure, is well known as one of the most eloquent speakers on the state list. As originator of the "Hesperia movement" he acquired national fame, and his experience as a state official, in different departments, and his connection with the National government as well as his years of grange work in Michigan makes him peculiarly well qualified to address a grange meeting.

County Commissioner of Schools Milford, whom we are glad to welcome into the order, will lead the discussion on the most important rural subject to-day, "The Teaching of the Elements of Agriculture in Our Schools."

Brother D. S. Payton will talk on "Charlevoix County—Its Opportunities" and he has a fund of information on the subject.

Carrying out the plan of perfecting ourselves in degree work, South Arm degree team will again exemplify the third degree and as a grand finale, Marion Center degree team will confer the fifth degree in full ritualistic form. Maple Grove grange during the entire session will furnish music and recitations.

How to Preserve a Brass Bedstead.

A good brass bed should only be dusted with a soft, clean cheesecloth and must never have brass polish used on it. So treated it should keep its luster for years. When it has grown dull and dark about the only remedy is relacquering, which costs from $5 upward, according to the size of the bed. Be careful not to let coal gas get a chance at your brass furniture and do not keep the windows up over the bed on a very damp or rainy day. When the brass seems to be moist it should at once be wiped off with the cheesecloth or silk duster.

ANGORAS FOR THE FARM.

Animals Require Little Care and Are Useful in Many Ways.

A successful breeder of Angora goats says of these animals:

"A few years ago the interest in Angora goats was so pronounced in some parts of the country that for awhile it promised to become a craze. Since then it has died down to such an extent that one seldom hears them spoken of. But this is not by any means due to the fact that the Angora goat is not a desirable variety of farm stock. On the contrary, I am convinced that if these goats were put on a great many farms and plantations they would be found very profitable and cost little or nothing in money or care.

"They are superior to sheep in many ways, and may be said to take the place of sheep in most of the directions which sheep are found to be useful on the farm. In one respect they are superior to all other forms of stock—that is, as scavengers. For cleaning up weeds, briars, brushes and small undergrowth where not wanted they are superior to any other known agency. If one has an old pasture that has become set in bushes of any kind or a clearing in which thick undergrowth has come up from roots and stumps, the easiest and quickest way to get rid of it all is by turning in a flock of Angoras. Two seasons will usually suffice for a clean sweep. All the brush will be dead.

"This is certainly a service that will be valuable on many farms. But the Angora is not valuable only as a scavenger. It is equally valuable for the sale of the hair and flesh. And it may be remarked incidentally that where there is no brush to be killed out they do as well on weeds and grass as on brush. The mohair, as the fleece of the Angora is called, has a wide range of prices, and sometimes for an extra fine sample the price is way beyond the range of sheep's wool. Its use is chiefly for the production of fine plushes, for which the demand for use in upholstering is always going to be great.

"In addition to the cloth's adaptability for use in fine carriage robes, couch covers, sofa pillows and similar articles may continue to make it sell high. But even if this demand for the fine hair were necessarily limited the demand for the carcasses for mutton and the very natural greediness of the animals in keeping down brush on farms are sufficient to keep the price of them up to a point of satisfactory profit."

Best Temperature For Separation.

The warmer the milk the more fluid-like it is. It is a rule adopted by all creamerymen in operating power machines that the milk must be separated at a temperature above 85 degrees F. Cold milk is more viscous, or less fluid than warm, and the cream will not separate so readily. If this is true of power machines, where everything runs more uniformly than is possible with a hand machine, it is certainly true of the hand machine. It is one of the stock arguments of some separator agents that their machine will skim cold milk. Probably the statement is true. If so it shows a wide range of adaptability for the machine and that it is so built that it is difficult to clog up. Take the argument for what it is worth, but do not skim cold milk unless you expect to leave some butter fat in the skimmilk. The milk should be separated as quickly as possible after milking. Then the skimming will be cleanest, the skimmilk will be best for the calves, and the cream will keep better.—Department of Agriculture Bulletin.

Hints About Fleeces.

One and two year old sheep are, as a rule, the heaviest producers of wool. Look to them at this age for their maximum yield.

With age coarser wool is produced by most sheep. The young therefore yield the best quality for the most part.

Dry, harsh fleeces do not meet much favor with the manufacturer; neither should sheep that produce them meet much favor with the grower.

Tag locks and dirt balls cannot be rated as high class wool. They should not find their way into the center of the fleece when it is tied up. Even the wool buyer will deal them and will dock weight accordingly.

The manufacturer divides the fleece into six or seven distinct parts after he gets it. It greatly facilitates his work if the fleece is left intact, so that he can tell just where each part lies.

Tillage of the Peach.

No crop is more sensitive to tillage than is the peach. Probably more failures in peach growing are due to neglect of tillage than to any other one cause. The most diverse views are held by different growers. One good grower will declare that the orchard should be tilled early in the season, and his neighbor will maintain that early tillage will endanger the crop.

"My wife is a lecturer, and I am an entertainer," said Hobbs.

"Indeed! I knew your wife appeared in public, but I did not know that you ever did."

"Oh, I don't appear in public! I stay at home and entertain the baby."—London Fun.

Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue A. H. Chilver, of Grand Rapids, Mich was at Ionia last week and superintended the drawing off of 400 barrels of beer, the left-over stock of the Grand Valley Brewing company of Ionia, as a result of local option. This is the largest cleanup in this part of the state so far reported. The loss is something over $2,000. The beer was dumped into a creek which runs into Grand River, finding its way to Grand Rapids, which is at present shipping car loads of beer into this county. The beer-charged water was drawn into the city sprinkler and squirted on the main street pavements, giving up an alluring perfume that Ionia has not experienced since the 18 saloons were put out of business.—Record

Sherman will rebuild its burned business section and when the improvements that are now being determined upon are completed Sherman will be a smaller but better town than before destructive flames burned out the larger part of the business section. E. Gilbert who owns several of the building sites down town, is in too poor health to go into business again, but nevertheless he means to be of great service to his home town. He desires that there shall be a hotel where his Sherman House formerly stood, upon the best location in the place. He has offered Ed. Rice that location if Mr. Rice will move his Exchange Hotel there. Across the street where Mr. Gilbert's store formerly stood Mr. Gilbert will donate a site for the new store of the Emerman Pfeifer company's new general store. The Sherman Bank will rebuild upon its old site. Some other business men are seriously considering rebuilding. Counting upon some of the business men remaining operations an outside firm has agreed to come in and put up a building for a large hardware store.

J. W. Hallock of the Thompsonville News announces that paper for sale and his removal to the southern part of the state. His reason, insufficient support. The Harrietta Herald ceased to exist for similar reasons. Those villages appear to either be seriously affected by the stringency of the times or by lack of public spirit. Nothing promotes the welfare of a village better than a well conducted paper and both Mr. Hallock and Mr. Jarmen had labored to that purpose. Mr. Hallock was formerly publisher of the Bellaire Sentinel.

The Morgan orchard, one of the finest in this region, is turning out now an average of 300 crates of sweet and sour cherries per day. The fruit is of the finest quality ever gathered here, and is finding ready sale in the Chicago markets, the larger part of the fruit of this vicinity going to the western metropolis. At present the orchard is well supplied with pickers, there being about fifty on the job, being supplied largely from this city. They receive twenty-five cents per crate for the work, and some of the smartest of them are making two dollars per day, in any of them being women who take advantage of this opportunity of earning pin money. State Land Commissioner Huntley-Russell says that he will make an effort to have the land commission granted the privilege of holding the sales of homestead and other state lands in the territory in which they are situated, rather than here in Lansing. There are about 600,000 acres of land situated in Alger, Arenac, Dickinson, Isabella, Roscommon, Saginaw and Wexford counties which will soon be placed on sale, and if the sales are held in those territories many people who have not the money to make the trip to Lansing, as is necessary now, will be able to purchase.

The Cheboygan Democrat says: Thursday night at about midnight the fireman were called out to extinguish a blaze that had been started in the Dickman barn and by the time the fire fighters were on the scene both the Dickman and P. X. Maloney barns were a mass of flames. At the same time fire was discovered at the Summit House barn, at the latter place two fires had been set on opposite sides of the barn, the ones setting the blaze intending to make sure work of their job, and but for its immediate discovery would have been a bad blaze to contend with.

The fire in the Maloney and Dickman barns burned fiercely and the firemen devoted most of their energies to saving surrounding property. Dickman's house, which butts up against the barn was kept well soak'd and beside a severe scorching suffered no further damage. The barns were consumed. Two valuable horses belonging to Mr. Dickman were burned. Maloney's horses were taken out. The Dickman horses could have come out of the barn but remained inside and were burned. Considerable hay, seed and harness and other things were burned and the loss will be quite heavy.

LABRADOR MOSQUITOES.

Terrible Pest to Travelers and Natives In the Northland.

No account of travel in Labrador can be complete without some mention of the terrible pest of mosquitoes. These were always present in immense swarms from the beginning of our trip to the east, and sometimes they made life almost intolerable.

Nothing could be heard but their buzzing. Whenever we attempted to eat they were down our throats and in our eyes and faces, and in spite of our head nets and fly dope we were always badly bitten. The natives seemed to mind them almost as much as we did, their remedy being rancid seal oil. I am satisfied that were one so unfortunate as to be caught out at night without protection he would be either crazy or dead by morning.

Our tents were provided with a fine mesh bobbinet inner tent, but some would always find their way inside or come up from the ground. At times our light s attracted them we went outside to see if it were not raining, for the constant tapping of the mosquitoes against the canvas sounded so exactly like rain that it was impossible to tell the difference.

On many nights I had to give up the observation of stars for latitude and longitude because a candle could not be kept lit long enough to adjust the artificial horizon. We unfortunately had no chimney, and the mosquitoes swarmed so thickly that without this protection the flame was quickly smothered. There were but few nights cool enough to afford us any relief. We found that it required a temperature within a few degrees of actual freezing to subdue them.—Forest and Stream.

Sheep Shearings.

Select the best ewe lambs to keep to grade up the flock.

Dock the lambs while they are young. The tail should be removed by a sharp blow and the wound smeared with tar to keep off the flies.

Dew is good to make the grass fresh in the morning, but there is not enough of it to keep the sheep from being thirsty. See to the water supply.

Make the change from dry feed to pasture carefully, allowing the sheep in pasture only a few hours at first. Give a full feeding of hay, etc., in the barn for several days before turning out.

Sea Kale.

Sea kale should be in every garden and would be a good money maker for our commercial growers. Seed sown in the spring makes plants that will yield the next year, and a patch handled like asparagus is good for many years to come. It actually pushes up the ground in slabs after the last freeze in spring. The bleached stalks are prepared and eaten like asparagus.

Courier liners bring results.

THE SHABBY ELEVEN

Coming down Main Street a few weeks ago I passed, in going two blocks, eleven well-dressed men wearing inappropriate watch chains. With some the chains were worn and shabby; the others were of bad taste. It got me to thinking. I resolved that Charlevoix men should have an opportunity to get suitable and worthy chains and, accordingly, I have provided a very large new stock of the best patterns in the market, in two grades, with range of prices to fit every pocketbook.

There are probably one hundred times eleven men in this community whose chain needs are as urgent as those of "The Shabby Eleven."

Our familiar belongings grow old and unsightly to others' eyes long before we note their decline.

A watch chain is the conspicuous item of jewelry on men's dress. It is important, therefore, that its quality should be as good as the man can afford, and its style be distinguished for taste and character.

Nobody but a very rich man can afford to get almost sinfully furnished. Trimness is a sort of social credential, a guaranty of solvency; a certificate of self respect. You can't afford to challenge the good opinion of people by continuing to wear that shabby chain, when a choice of many beautiful new patterns awaits your selection at

Vivid Description of Trip Over the Mountains

Everything is Brought to Camp by Pack Train. Surprise When One Arrives at Destination

Camp Nelson, Daunt P. O., Cal.,
July 17, 1909.

To My Old Friends:

The COURIER and its readers. The intense heat having driven me from the San Joaquin Valley, I find myself in the mountains nicely located at Camp Nelson. I arrived here Monday noon, after a two days jaunt by wagon and pack train.

Camp Nelson is situated in the Serria Nevada Mountains in the south central part of the state of California and is one of the most picturesque and desirable mountain pleasure resorts in the state. Located up among the pines with an elevation of 4,700 feet, excellent camping grounds, good mountain trout fishing and hunting. The deer season opened the 15th, and the hunters are thronging the mountains eager for the sport.

The purest mountain water and the finest soda springs are to be found here, and the scenery is more than grand. I watched Old Sol climb the mountain peaks this morning. It was a beautiful sight. The mountains seem to leap up against the sky with their sides clad with pines and fir trees, with wild flowers scattered here and there and the very summit crowned with snow. The waters of the Tule River fed from mountain streams, goes rushing by with such force, it seems as though it might cleave the very rocks that walls it in on either side.

The valley is full of music of the waters and fresh with the odor of the pines and ferns.

White and red clovers grow in the meadows, and the orchards have the same variety of fruits we have at home. One never finds any of these clovers or fruits in the San Joaquin valley. They are small fruits and a fine garden here. I can not find words to express my great surprise and wonderment at finding such a lovely and fertiles pot in the very heart of the mountains. You would share my wonderment if you were only here and could see for yourselves all of the comforts of life they have here and then pass over the trail on the side of the mountain and ford all of the streams on the back of a horse or mule as I did, you could not help wondering." All of their table supplies, clothing, farm implements, machinery for a one man saw mill, a large bath tub, a very large kitchen range, a mowing machine farm wagons, and other articles you would never expect to see here are packed fourteen miles over the trail.

You have a saddle horse or mule and as many pack animals as necessary for the pack horses are donkeys your grips and camping out-fit. Then the trail winds around the mountain midway between the base and the summit hundreds of feet of rock and the river below you and hundreds of feet of rock and brambles above you.

It startles one to look up or down, not knowing what minute your faithful horse might stumble and slip off of the path which is not over three feet wide in most places and rough with loose rocks and roots. Every few miles I found myself in a sort of a valley with a stream passing by a deserted cabin, once occupied as a home, giving a weird and desolate appearance to the surroundings, and Oh, if one could read the history of the deserted homes, where even now roses twine and bloom; the ambitions and hopes, that dwelt and were fostered in the hearts of the dwellers; the yearnings and despair which seem to have left their impress upon the present desolate surroundings and on the trail still winds on for fourteen long miles until I and my guide became so weary, so weary, but I feel well repaid after this long ride for life is well worth living in this spot, and here is where my eyes can feast upon objects of delicious plensures and I devotedly thank the great creator that I have been permitted to visit this most delightful spot—Camp Nelson.

I am here alone among strangers until after the fifth of August when I shall be joined by a large party from Tulare including my family then I shall go on still farther in to the mountains where there are two lakes called Upper and Lower Kern. These lakes were formed by an earthquake in 1868 causing the side of the mountain to slide down across the Kern River forming a dam. The largest of these lakes is about three quarters of a mile in length and a quarter of a mile in width. An old man living here was an eye witness to the formation of the lakes. They are about twenty-three miles from Camp Nelson, or a day and a half ride with pack animals and saddle horses. The proprietors here are very pleasant gentlemen and the tourists that gather here are very sociable, so taking everything as I find it I expect to have a very enjoyable time. Hoping this may be of interest to the many readers of one of the nearest and dearest of all papers to me—The COURIER,—I am as ever a staunch advocate of Charlevoix the Beautiful.

Yours as before,
ANNA HOWE.

SUICIDE AT PETOSKEY

Mrs. James N. Hill of Petoskey Hangs Herself Saturday

Mrs. James N. Hill, who has been a leader in social circles at Plainwell Michigan, took her life Saturday by hanging herself at the family cottage at Petoskey, where she was spending the summer with her husband, a well-known Plainwell business man, and her niece, Miss Bertha Woodhams. The latter is a trained nurse who has been caring for her aunt during a long illness. Mental derangement through nervous trouble is the cause asigned for the woman's act.

Mrs. Hill was forty-eight years old and, besides her husband and niece, is survived by a brother John W. Gilkey, general manager of the Michigan Paper company at Plainwell.

For several years Mrs. Hill has been a sufferer from an acute nervous trouble and was constantly possessed of the idea that she had contracted incurable diseases. The cottage at Petoskey was leased with a view of benefit to her health.

FISHING TUG SEIZED

After Exciting Chase by Game Warden's Boat.

Justice Collins Gives Offender a Stiff Fine, Which was Paid.

Sunday of last week Chief Deputy Game Warden Charles N. Smith received information concerning a fishing tug which was reported to be doing a thriving business to illegal fishing in the vicinity of the Manitou Islands. The department steamer, Chase S. Osborne, with the chief and his deputies aboard, immediately started out to hunt down the law violator. She was first sighted off South Manitou Island, but evidently had sighted the Osborne first and started to make a run for safety. The fact that the Osborne was burning coal, while the other boat was apparently burning wood, made a big handicap over the department steamer, but the chase was nevertheless a good one. On account of having to run a quartering course, the Osborne slowly overhauled the other, but the latter could be more easily and readily manoevered than the warden's boat. A heavy sea which was running at the time did not facilitate matters any, and it was soon found that the officers had quite a contract on their hands. Finally, after a long chase, the two boats were brought together at a point about seven miles southwest of North Manitou, and the wardens started to board.

The crew of the fish tug presented a somewhat war-like appearance, but when the wardens boarded their vessel, with guns drawn to quiet their threats, their hostility disappeared. The captain of the fish boat refused to give up control of his ship, until handcuffs were snapped on him, when the boat was taken in tow by the Osborne and brought into port Thursday. The offending craft was the L. P. Hill of Washington Harbor, Wis., and was captained by Pat Chambers and a crew of six men.

Upon being arrainged before Justice Collins he was fined $100 and costs of $5.50, gill nets were condemned and one hundred and forty pounds of whitefish seized, and the owner compelled to take out a $200 license. The gill nets were returned to the owner and the fish sold at public sale and the proceeds turned over to the state.

SUNDAY BASE BALL.

Recent Supreme Court Decision Handed Down This Month.

The supreme court handed down a decision July 13 confirming the opinion of the lower court in regard to the question of a writ of mandamus asked by ex-Prosecutor Nettles of Wayne County to compel Fred Smith, Police Commissioner of Detroit, to stop Sunday base ball. The court says:

"Before the respondent could be required to arrest any one there must have been either a breach of the peace already committed or a failure to comply with the order to disperse."

The court adds: "The mere playing of a game of base ball on Sunday is not of itself necessarily a breach of peace, justifying arrest and indictment. In a sense a game of base ball on Sunday may often be a breach of the peace, perhaps usually is, but it cannot be said that it is necessarily so, and before a summary arrest can be made for the breach of peace, not only must overt acts be committed in the presence of the officer, but they must be violent and dangerous acts of some sort." The court adds that the prosecutor is not one to order the crowd to disperse, but that the sheriff should "Read the riot act, and command a dispersal of persons in time of riot."—Detroit News.

PREPARE TO BE COUNTED

Census of the People and Industries of the United States.

TO BE TAKEN DURING NEXT SUMMER

Department of Commerce and Labor Making Plans

Census Schools Will be Conducted Next Winter—Compensation of the Men Who do Work.

The following dispatch from Washington, descriptive of the work of the census about to be taken, will prove of interest to our readers. The dispatch says:—"Now that the president has signed the bill providing for the taking of the regular decennial census, the census bureau of the department of commerce and labor is busying itself with the necessary preliminaries of the work.

The task of making a count of the people of the United States and taking stock of its industries, is so great that months of preparation are necessary in order that the final results may be approximately accurate. Already members of congress are announcing the appointment of supervisors, and it is the purpose of the head of the census bureau to assemble these supervisors in Washington; or, if that is not practicable, in smaller groups at convenient places in the country, there to be drilled in the work they will be called to direct next spring.

There will be one supervisor for each congressional district in the country, outside of the great cities, and these supervisors will be named by the members of congress, for all districts that are republican. In the southern states it is the purpose of the president to consult as to these appointments with his political advisors, to the end that men may be selected who will perform satisfactory work and be acceptable to the localities where they will be employed. This will probably mean that in some of the southern congressional districts it will be necessary to select democratic supervisors.

The great cities of the country will not conform to this congressional district rule. One supervisor will be named for each of these cities, as heretofore.

The pay of the supervisor will be $1,500 by-way of salary and $1 in addition

GET A HUSTLE ON YOURSELF

Help Hoost the Movement for Change of Post Office

FROM PRESENT CROWDED QUARTERS

To a Splendidly Equipped Modern Office Building.

Petition is Being Circulated and Generally Signed—Confidence that Investigation Means Relief from Present Conditions

Last week the council passed resolutions asking that the government take up with Mr. VanPelt the question of leasing the new building he is erecting directly across VanPelt place from the present office. Mr. VanPelt having expressed a willingness to furnish it in such a way that it would fill the requirements needed for the purpose, making a postoffice, both inside and out, that we, as citizens of Charlevoix, can show to our thousands of visitors with a feeling of pride and not as we have to do with our present cramped quarters, with a blush of shame.

During the past week a petition has been circulated and signed by everybody to whom it was presented asking the government to investigate the matter, for if ever there was a city that was cursed with outrageous facilities of getting its mail—the lifeblood of business—our city is the one, and we are confident that if the proper authorities will only investigate relief will be granted.

Only let an inspector crowd himself into the narrow space left in the present building for the accomodation of the patrons, notwithstanding the cramped quarters for the postmaster and his assistants, let him listen to the groans and curses which arise from every side, and find, if he attempts to get out, that escape is impossible, if he should be stationed a short distance from the door and notwithstanding his sufferings, he is condemned to grin and bear them, perhaps for an hour, and thank this paternal government for the blessings of liberty, the pursuit of happiness and equal enjoyment of postal facilities, and he would instantly report to his superiors: Secure for Charlevoix better postal accomodations or they'll all go insane.

Not only are the present conditions in this deplorable shape but the rapid increase of patrons are making them worse each season. We have all endured them patiently heretofore on account of the inability of securing a building centrally located. Mr. VanPelt now, in a public spirited manner, offers to furnish a new building in a modern manner, and lease the same to the government at a proper rental, an opportunity which is seldom offered and which probably will not be again offered for years to come. This building is located in the most convenient part of the city, a place where the people are in the habit of going for their mail and the transaction of business with the city officials as well as to subscribe or tell the news to their favorite home paper—the COURIER.

This opportunity is now open to our Uncle Sam, as good nephews and neices its up to us to let him know about it, and while we are helping ourselves help him.

Woman's Bondage to Fashion.

Millinery, as an offense against all the laws of art, good taste and common sense, is an endless source of comment by editorial writers for the daily press, humorous and otherwise, in this year of grace, 1909. And there is no possible refutation of the charge that woman, in the aggregate, is a blind follower of fashions in dress, becoming or otherwise. The only argument that might, with propriety, be offered to these masculine critics is the fact that the fashions, both in dress and millinery, that emanate from the French capital are, almost without exception, created by man! It is possible, of course, that these men milliners and dressmakers are not expressing their ideas as to what constitutes art and beauty in woman's attire; they may be simply attempting to gratify a desire to know just how foolish a woman can be in the matter of personal adornment! Certain it is that the display of woman's hats the present season is not calculated to inspire respect for the reasoning powers upon which women base their claims to recognition as factors in promoting the well-being of the race.

The legislature of Illinois is considering the advisibility of prescribing, by law, the maximum size of women's hats and the nature of the "animals" that may be mounted as trimmings. California, following the example of Oregon, has just enacted a law, designed to protect the birds from the ravages of plumage hunters; it makes the milliner who buys the stock equally liable, with the hunter who sells. The Audubon societies have long sought for such legislation, with varying degrees of success, and it may yet prove necessary to include the wearer of contraband millinery in the category of criminals.

It ought not to be necessary, in this day and generation, to prohibit women by law from wearing the dead bodies of beautiful birds. The fashion is an outrage of all the finer sensibilities. Perhaps the Duchess of Portland has taken the most direct method to the accomplishment of this reform by declaring that such decoration "is not becoming." This argument may certainly be applied to the present styles in more than one particular, and a deluge of wholesome and well-directed ridicule may be necessary to woman's education on the subject.

Literary Notes

Woman's Home Companion for August.

"Susanna and Sue" begins in the August issue of Woman's Home Companion. The scene of the story is laid in a Shaker village, which gives an opportunity for a novel plot. The first installment promises even greater charm than Mrs. Wiggin's famous earlier books.

Edward Everett Hale's Reminiscences are appearing exclusively in Woman's Home Companion. Now that his revered white head and kindly smile have gone forever, these reminiscences, always charming, have an added interest.

Edward Everett Hale's death is a peculiar loss to the Woman's Home Companion, to which he has contributed so constantly during the last few years. The August issue in an appreciation of Doctor Hale's life and work has some new anecdotes that are full of the charm of Doctor Hale's personality.

This issue has none of the poverty of many summer magazines. There are eight stories in it—each good and each novel.

The mother of to-day has a problem her grandmother never knew. The modern girl, after many years at school, looks with scorn at the housekeeping which her mother knows is so important. In "What Mothers Can Do" the Woman's Home Companion points out a way to make the college girl "the daughter of the house" in the old-fashioned sense.

Marion Harland, in a veritable literary pilgrimage through Europe, has discovered many unpublished stories of famous men and women, which she will tell to Companion readers in her delightfully intimate way. The first of the series deals with the ever-interesting Empress Josephine at Malmaison—where she died.

The matter of diet in summer is one fraught with many difficulties. In the Woman's Home Companion for August Dr. Woods Hutchinson claims that we are apt to starve ourselves in summer. He says that we suffer from the heat because of bad physical condition and that we would feel the heat less if we ate three good meals a day.

"Suit-Case Photography," "Camp Cooking" and "Washing Fineries" are of special interest right now.

The Children's Department and the Fashion Department are both particularly good. The Embroidery pages are full of summer ideas, and Fannie Merritt Farmer supplies enough ideas for novel cool drinks to last the whole summer.

Come to Johnston for bargains in real estate as I have some good farms and city property to trade or sell on easy terms. Also resort lots west of Holy Isle. Joel Johnston.

ANXIOUS WAGNER.

The First Performance of "Rienzi" at Dresden.

In Ludwig Frankenstein's Wagner year book Gustav Kietz tells this story in connection with the first performance of "Rienzi" at Dresden: "On the day of the first performance Wagner asked me to meet him in front of the theater after the box office had been opened, so that he could give me and my friend Schuster, the butcher, tickets for the performance. Wagner was in a state of great excitement, and when he gave me the two tickets Heine whispered to me, 'Take some one with good big hands with you.' He watched the people as they came toward the theater, and every time one went by he would make some remark to his wife which showed his satisfaction. I had to go within, but I shall never forget the childish joy of the composer when he saw groups enter the house and the disappointment when others passed the open doors. I thought of it even that evening when the enthusiasm was the greatest. How happy Wagner and his wife must have been at the following two performances, when the house was so filled that even Ils relatives, who had come to Dresden for that purpose, could not be admitted to the theater!"

THE DESERT SANDS.

Why the Arabs of Sahara Lose the Use of Their Eyes.

"I shall winter in the Sahara," said a traveling man. "With a caravan I shall traverse under a blinding sun and an endless plain of snow-white sand, but none of my Mohammedan attendants will wear any kind of shade over his eyes.

"Against that dazzling glare the backs of their necks will be swathed in white linen, and even their ears will be protected. Nothing, though, will keep the sun out of their faces.

"Wondering about this, I said one day to the kaid of an Algerian village:

"'Why don't you Arabs wear a cap of some sort? You live in the world's worst sun glare, but neither fez nor turban under any circumstances has a peak.'

"'The Koran,' the kaid answered, 'forbids all true believers to shade their eyes. Obeying the Koran implicitly, we dwellers in the desert avoid like poison brims to our headgear. In consequence there is more blindness among us than among any other people in the world.'"—Los Angeles Times.

A Popular Play Indeed.

Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar" has been translated into German nine times, into French seven, into Italian six, into modern Greek three, into Latin and Swedish twice and into Croatian, Danish, Dutch, Frisian, Polish, Roumanian, Russian, Magyar, Portuguese and Yiddish. There are seven or eight English acting editions of the tragedy. But one attempt actually to alter and improve it has ever been made. This was in 1722, when John Sheffield, duke of Buckingham, divided it into two parts at the death of Cæsar, calling it "The Tragedies of Julius Caesar and Marcus Brutus," and made many other changes. To enrich this poor play, or, rather, these poor plays, Pope furnished some choruses, but they had the usual effects of ill adjusted ornaments—they served only to make the meanness of the thing they bedecked the more conspicuous.

A RIVAL'S DOWNFALL

Out of Bitterness the Lovers Snatched Happiness.

By ESTHER AINSLEE.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

If Dalzell's store advertised a sale of silk dress goods in the Monday issue of the Rosemont Banner it was a certainty that the paper's Tuesday night number would contain an ad. from Thompson's store across the street telling of bargains in satins, with a side line of embroideries, at which Rosemont smiled appreciatively and reaped the benefit.

The town was proud of the proprietors of the two leading dry goods stores, for most of the young men left for the adjacent big city when it came time to make their way in the world, but Malcolm Dalzell and Lewis Thompson within a year of each other settled down to make a living in their home town.

Perhaps it were better to say Rosemont was proud of their enterprise, for Lewis Thompson was not the type to inspire affection in the hearts of his townsmen. A man cannot be blamed, for lack of magnetism and an attractive nature, but nevertheless he suffers for it, and Thompson possessed besides these drawbacks a hot headed, quarrelsome disposition and a theory that every man had a right to look out for himself to the exclusion of any possible rights of others.

His aggressiveness made him enemies where Malcolm Dalzell won friends by his mere cheerfulness and diplomacy. But each flourished on his own side of the street.

Not only were they rivals in business, but from the days of carrying schoolbooks there had seemingly been but one girl in the world in the eyes of each, Milly Wainwright, with the waves of soft brown hair and eyes that matched, with the sweet voice and appealing little ways.

Shrewd people even said the reason both boys stayed in Rosemont was that each was afraid to leave the other a clear field with Milly, who had never shown any preference between the two.

Lewis Thompson was a different man with her. Her mere presence smoothed and softened the aggressive young business man, and she smiled incredulously when stories of his cold shrewdness and overreaching deals came to her ears.

Yet unknown to herself Malcolm Dalzell occupied a place in her life from which no one could dislodge him. Milly was in the delicious and dreamy state of indecision which a girl always prolongs unwittingly. Life was sweet to her, and even the growing wildness of her younger brother, Dick, which was aging her father and mother, had not power to do more than depress her momentarily.

"It's only because Dick is young," she told her mother half indignantly. "He will see the mistake of his ways before he ever does anything really wrong. Why, Dick wouldn't be really bad. It's absurd!"

She was great chums with the handsome eighteen-year-old brother, and because she did have faith in him the boy turned to her always in his rare spells of repentance. At present he had gone to work in a bank in the next town, six miles distant.

The Rosemont Banner had two columns of description, speculation and denunciation when Thompson's store was robbed. Malefactors were rare in Rosemont, and the night watchman's work was perfunctory, but nevertheless Lewis Thompson discovered a back window pried open and nearly $200 worth of silks and laces missing.

Three weeks later he was reduced to explosive rage by the discovery that again his store had been entered. This time a hundred dollars' worth of goods vanished. In his wrath the owner of the store telegraphed for a city detective and established a night patrol for the block. The city detective looked important, smoked good cigars of the leading citizens, who wanted to tell him their theories as to the robbery, had a very pleasant time and departed with dark hints as to future developments.

"At any rate," Lewis Thompson said vigorously, "with Maloney on hand as a watchman the thief won't get another chance!"

"It's hard luck, Lewis," sympathized Malcolm Dalzell with his business rival. Thompson regarded him coldly. Of late Milly had been in Dalzell's company more than he liked.

"Thanks," he said. "It's funny the thief doesn't attack your premises, Malcolm. I don't understand such fatalism unless it's because he knows where the best goods are!" He smiled somewhat maliciously as he made the fling.

"Superiority has its drawbacks, then," Dalzell said quietly, holding his temper. He understood Thompson's grudge against him and could afford to be magnanimous, for he had begun to cherish a certainty that he had distanced Thompson with Milly. For her he would endure much.

Lewis Thompson did not relax his vigilance as the weeks went by. One Thursday night, as he made one of his personal trips of inspection, about 1 o'clock he started for his store on a run after finding the watchman, Maloney, knocked senseless at the corner. And he was rewarded. The revolver in his hand covered the dark form of the man standing at the rear window with the faint gleam of a dark lantern on the floor beside him.

Yet even Lewis Thompson was speechless when after his trembling fingers had turned on the rear light he saw the man before him was none other than Malcolm Dalzell, who stood white and quiet facing his captor.

"I—I can't comprehend," Thompson almost stammered, still covering the marauder with his revolver. "You—of all people!"

The man before him moistened his lips. "Lewis," he said at last, "will you believe me if I say, in spite of this, I'm not the robber—that it's just unfortunate circumstances that have brought this about? Will you?"

Lewis Thompson recovered his coolness, and he laughed shortly, sarcastically, glancing significantly at the dark lantern, the fallen jimmy, the goods piled at hand for removal.

"I don't see any one but you, Dalzell," he said curtly. "You've got to take your medicine. You can plead kleptomania, you know. Rising young business man, easy circumstances, no need to rob—why, of course, it's kleptomania!"

There was a little triumph edging into his laugh as what this meant to his rival dawned upon him. And it was likewise dawning upon his captive, who shut his jaw when the marshal, hastily summoned, almost refused to obey Thompson's command to take the prisoner to the jail.

"Go ahead, Smith," was all that Malcolm Dalzell would say, and he walked to the lockup with his head in the air.

The whole town shared the sensations of Smith the next morning, and the Rosemont Banner exhausted all its heavy black faced type that evening and paused only for absence of more space. It was paralyzing, horrifying, this downfall of a man like Malcolm Dalzell, one of those queer croppings out of hidden tendencies that sometimes destroy the world's best.

The three days that intervened before his preliminary hearing drew lines in Dalzell's face and gave him a pallor that usually it takes age to bring. Yet he maintained those close shut lips and, further than stating he was not guilty, refused to talk.

When he faced his friends and neighbors at the preliminary hearing there was a trace of proud defiance in his glance that yet was strangely hurt, for on many faces he read a dawning wavering in allegiance to him.

Much talk had been expended, and every one knew of the long rivalry between the two men. What more natural than that Dalzell should attempt to harass, to ruin his opponent? So they waited for the sensational disclosures.

The sensation came. As usual with sensations, it was quite different from what was expected. This white faced girl, with eyes reddened by tears, who suddenly presented herself struck pity from the heart of the hardest. She spoke rapidly, breathlessly.

"Malcolm did not do it!" she protested, with tight clasped hands. "If he won't tell I will, now that I know the truth! It was Dick, my brother, and Malcolm, who also was watching, saw him and entered Thompson's store to save him, to get him away, to help him, and when Lewis Thompson came upon him—he, Malcolm, would not tell because"—

Milly Wainwright's voice died away, but the end of the sentence was furnished by Malcolm Dalzell's quick step to her side and lifting her tears on his shoulder. Both had made their sacrifice for each other and out of the bitterness had snatched happiness. And Rosemont, with the fickleness of the human race, said it served Lewis Thompson right and he should have had more common sense.

Steeplejack In Wrong.

Bob and Jim were jacks of all trades and worked together. One summer's morning Bob came round to Jim's house at the early hour of 8 and managed to wake him.

"Now, then," he cried, "hurry up. There's a big factory chimney wants pulling down about a mile away from here, and I got the tip from the factory foreman that if we could knock twenty feet off it before the authorities were about it would save the factory the expenses of a scaffold and it would mean a five pound note apiece for you and me."

"What, ho!" cried Jim. "Let's go."

Their destination reached, they climbed to the top of the chimney, and soon masses of brickwork were falling to earth. A man who lived near was disturbed by the noise and started to make a fuss. "Here, itch," cried Jim, "you climb down and quiet that fellow. Keep him talking while I finish this job up here." So Bob climbed down and engaged the indignant man in conversation.

Suddenly Jim heard Bob calling to him and, looking down, saw his friend gesticulating wildly and beckoning him to come down. So down Jim came. "What's the matter?" he asked.

"Let's go home, Jim, thundering quick. We've been pulling down the wrong chimney."—London Answers.

D'Auber is a big, healthy, bearded man who looks as though he could lift half hundredweights in each hand as easily as he picks up his palette.

An elderly rustic, who had been standing watching him painting by the roadside, approached him.

"No offense, sir," he began, "but is there anything the matter w' yer?"

"No," answered D'Auber. "What makes you ask?"

"Yer hain't lame, are yer?"

"Lame! Good gracious, no!"

"Yer hain't had a misfortune in any way—the chatlcar or lumbager—that's kind o' laid yer by?"

"No, I'm as well as I have always been."

The rustic drew himself up and gazed scornfully at the artist.

"An' yer call yerself a man an' can sit theer a-doin' o' that?" he said. "Well, I'm blest!"—Exchange.

"Get up then! Dress quickly in those clothes and come out on deck. By the side of your bunk you will find tins of black and white paint to smear your face and hands. At the slightest refusal on your part to do as I bid you—if you utter a cry or make a noise to attract attention—I shall kill you without another word."

The soft voice had a steely ring in it which persuaded the man from Argentina that he had better obey. In less than five minutes he emerged from the doorway. The corridor in which his cabin was situated led into the saloon. Elsie awaited him. A lamp dimly lighting the gangway revealed her face. Suarez thought he had to deal with a mad woman. The dog standing by her side sniffed at him gingerly, but a muttered "Be quiet, Joey," prevented any outburst, every fox terrier being a born conspirator.

"What do you wish me to do, señorita?" began Suarez, thinking to placate her until he could obtain assistance.

"You must obey me in silence," she whispered tensely. "You must not even speak. One syllable aloud on deck will mean death. Walk in front of me up the main companion and go straight to the ship's side."

"But, señorita"—

The hammer of the revolver began to rise under the pressure of Elsie's finger on the trigger. The man's hair rose even more rapidly. His nerve was broken. He turned along the corridor in front of her, not knowing the instant a bullet might crash into his head. The girl followed so closely that she almost touched his heels. The dog would have trotted in front, but she recalled him.

When Suarez reached the port rail of the promenade deck Elsie breathed: "Climb quickly and go down into the canoe by the rope ladder you will find there."

"The canoe!" gasped he.

"Quick! One, two"—

Up went Suarez over the rail. He found the topmost rungs of the ladder. As he descended the revolver followed his eyes. When his head was level with the deck the order came:

"Take the dog and go down!"

"I cannot, señorita."

"You must try. You are going down, dead or alive."

He did try. Joey scuttled a little.

"But, señorita"—

but Suarez caught him by the neck and made shift to descend. Elsie was already on the swaying ladder when Boyle's voice rang out sharply from the spar deck:

"Below there! Who is there?"

"I, Mr Boyle," she answered.

"You, Miss Elsie? Where are you?"

"Here—not so far away!"

She was descending all the time. She had cast loose the rope which fastened the canoe alongside, and her difficulty was to hold the ladder and at the same time by clinging to the mast to prevent the canoe from slipping away with the tide. The revolver she gripped between her teeth by the butt.

Boyle, puzzled by the sound of her voice, ran from the side of the bridge down the stairs and across the deck. He was a second too late to grasp the top of the mast as it drifted out of reach. He heard Elsie utter a low voiced command in Spanish, and the dip of a paddle told him that the canoe was in motion.

"For the Lord's sake, what are you doing?" he roared.

"I am going to save Captain Courtenay," was the answer. "You cannot stop me now. Please hoist plenty of lights. If I succeed, look out for me before daybreak. If I fail, goodby!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

BOYLE was very angry. It was a situation which demanded earnest words, and they were forthcoming. Elsie understood them to mean that she need not be in such a purple hurry to disappear into the darkness without the least explanation. Thereupon she bade Suarez back the canoe a little.

"I am sorry it is necessary to steal away in this fashion," she said, and the roughness of her tone was highly exasperating to a man who could no more detain her than he could move the Kansas unaided. "I have a plan which requires only a bit of good fortune to render it practicable. I have two assistants—Suarez, whose aid I am compelling, and Joey, who is quite eager. There is no use in risking any more lives. If I do not return you may be sure the worst has happened."

"But what is your plan?" roared Boyle. "It may be just sheer nonsense. Tell me what it is, an' I swear by the nautical almanac, I shall not prevent you from carryin' it out if it has any reason behind it."

"I am going to collect all the Indian canoes," was the amazing answer. "I know it can be done from what Suarez has said. Once we have the canoes in mid-channel we can set most of them adrift and bring Captain Courtenay and the others back to the ship in four or five, which we will tow to Guanaco hill. And now goodby again!"

"One moment, Miss Maxwell," broke in Gray's quiet voice from the upper deck. "You can't engineer that scheme with a one man crew and he sick and unwilling. I am going with you. You must take me aboard, wet or dry."

"I am well armed and shall admit of no interference," she cried.

"I promise to obey orders."

"If I wanted you, Mr. Gray, I should have sought your help."

"It is one thing or the other, a wriggle down a rope or a high diving act."

"You have no right to impose such an alternative on me."

"I hate it myself, and I can't dive worth a cent. You will hear a beastly flop when I strike the damp."

"Mr. Boyle, I call on you to hold him."

Boyle explained hurriedly that the American was doing a balancing act on the rail eight feet above his head. Elsie, taking her eyes off Suarez for an instant, discerned Gray's figure silhouetted against the sky. She yielded.

"There is a rope ladder fastened to the lowest rail near where the canoe was moored," she said.

"Is there to be any catch-as-catch-can business, Boyle?" demanded Gray.

"No. All this is mighty unfair to me."

"You have my sympathy, friend, but you can't leave the ship. Now, Miss Maxwell, come alongside. Boyle is going to be good. He doesn't mean half he says anyhow."

As the canoe slipped out of the dense gloom of the ship's shadow the Argentine squatted on his knees in the bows, Gray placed himself amidships, and Elsie sat aft, holding the revolver in her right hand and the dog's collar in her left. The American groped for and found a paddle, which he plied vigorously.

"Guess you'd better discourse," said he over his shoulder when the light craft was well clear of the ship.

"You understand Spanish, I think?"

"Yes."

"Please tell Suarez to cease paddling and listen. Don't move, I can trust you, but I may have to shoot him."

"Best hand me that popgun, Miss Maxwell. The gentleman in front seems to have a wholesome respect for you already. Anything you say goes where he is concerned. I am taking your word for it his name is Suarez, but he looks and smells more like an Indian."

"I forced him to dress in his discarded clothes. He may look the more to scare any of the savages we come across. But why should I give you my weapon, Mr. Gray?"

"Because I can hit most things I aim at, whereas you are more likely to bore a hole through me as a preliminary. Moreover, you have the dog with you, and even the wisest dog may bark at the wrong moment. You must have both hands at liberty to choke his enthusiasm."

"Do you pledge your word to go on with my scheme?"

"That is what I am here for."

"Take the revolver, then."

"Sure it's loaded?"

"Quite sure. I have fifteen extra cartridges; but, as I have practiced refilling it in the dark, give it to me if you have occasion to empty it."

"You seem to have thought this thing out pretty fully."

"I intend to succeed. Now, please, I must explain what I want Suarez to do."

Speaking in Spanish, slow and clear, while the canoe drifted steadily up the bay with the rising tide, Elsie unfolded her project. Behind the guardian cliff of Otter creek a ridge of rocks created a small natural harbor. It was the custom of the Alacalufs when the weather was calm and they meant to use their craft at daybreak to anchor most of their vessels in this sheltered breakwater. At other times the canoes were drawn ashore, but she reasoned that such a precaution would not be taken during the present excitement.

That was the first part of her programme—to capture the entire fleet, including the lifeboat. In any event, she intended to go next to the hidden cleft at the foot of Guanaco hill, trusting to the dog's sagacity to reveal the retreat where she believed that her lover and many of his men were hidden. If a squad of Indians mounted guard there, the reappearance of Suarez in his war paint, backed by the alarm of a night attack from the sea, might mystify the enemy sufficiently to permit of a landing, while the frequent reports of the revolver would certainly lead to a counter demonstration by Courtenay.

Gray listened to the girl's cool statement with growing admiration. The plan began to look feasible. It came within the bounds of reason. The odds were against it, of course, but the law of probability is seldom in favor of a forlorn hope. Suarez, too, making the best of a situation which gave him no option, agreed that they had a fair chance if once they got hold of the canoes. Nevertheless he warned them that he knew nothing of the surroundings of Guanaco hill. He believed there were no reefs on that side of the inlet, but he had never visited it. Their greatest peril lay amid the almost impenetrable trees which grew down to the water's edge. On his advice Gray unshipped the mast and threw it overboard. Then silence became imperative. If aught were said, they must speak in the merest whisper.

The canoe darted forward again with stealthy haste. The night was clear, though dark. The stars helped them to distinguish the outlines of the shore now coming rapidly nearer. As they crept round the southern cheek of Point Kansas the Argentine ceased paddling and placed a warning hand on Gray's arm. The cliff was so high and steep that its shadow plunged into deepest gloom the water at its base. Suarez, however, had imbibed a good deal of savage lore during his enforced residence on the island. He stretched well forward over the bows, held a paddle as far in front as possible and thus not only guided the drifting canoe by an occasional dip of the blade, but trusted to it for warning of any unseen rock.

There was a cold breeze on the surface of the bay, but the dog was the only one that shivered, and his tremors arose from excitement. At last they felt a slight bump. The Argentine had found the reef he was searching for. By watching a star it was easy enough to follow the southerly bend taken by the canoe in skirting this barrier, while their ears caught the murmur of the swift current amid the numerous tiny channels of the rocks. Suddenly this swirl and hum of fast flowing water ceased. Elsie and Gray became aware that Suarez was cautiously drawing himself inboard again. Then his paddle dipped with a noiseless stroke. The canoe was inside the Alacaluf harbor.

The midnight blackness was now something that had a sense of actual obstruction in it. It seemed that a hand put forth would encounter a wall. The tide was here, but no perceptible current. For all they could tell to the contrary, they might have been floating in Charon's boat across some Stygian pool.

For a minute or two Elsie's brave heart failed her. Here was a difficulty which desperate courage could not surmount. There might be dozens of canoes moored on all sides, but to discover them in this pitch darkness was so obviously impossible that she almost made up her mind to abandon this part of her enterprise. Yet the narrow beamed Fuegian craft she was in would hold only four more occupants, and that with a certain risk and unwieldiness.

She was as determined as ever to cross the bay and endeavor to communicate with the imprisoned men. But she recognized the absurdity of the thought that Courtenay and Tollemache would consent to escape in the canoe and leave the others to their fate, even if such a thing were practicable. Oddly enough, the one person whose daring might reasonably be suspected gave no signs of the pangs of doubt. Suarez pushed forward resolutely. He knew what Elsie had forgotten—that in each canoe used by the Indians there was a carefully preserved fire, whose charcoal embers retained some heat and glow all night. The first intimation of this fact was revealed by the pungent fumes which enveloped them. Elsie could not help uttering a little gasp of relief. There was a slight movement in front. Gray leaned back and touched her hand.

"Suarez says," he whispered, "that we are to be ready with your tow rope. As he secures each canoe he will pass it along to me. You will be able to see its outlines by the dim glimmer of the fire. But how will you manage about the dog? He may cause an alarm."

Much to Joey's disgust, he was forthwith muzzled with a piece of rope—not that this device would stop him effectually from barking, but Elsie thought he would so resent the indignity that he might pay less heed to other circumstances. She needed no warning that Indians were near. The Argentine miner's description of the community which dwelt on Otter creek made her understand that there were hundreds within hail.

A great joy leaped up in her when the first canoe came under her hand. It was quite easy to manipulate the painter rope. The stern had a notched knob provided for this very purpose, and there was a sternpost against which a steersman might press a paddle and thus swerve the canoe in any direction. But it was slow work. The craft were moored without any semblance of order, yet Suarez was forced to secure them in a definite sequence or a string of half a dozen would become unmanageable.

When the second canoe was made fast Gray beat toward the girl once more.

"I have been listening to the tick of my watch," he breathed against her ear. "I reckon it has taken ten minutes to collect two dugouts. Unless we mean to remain all night we must let up on the cutting adrift proposition."

"I agree," she murmured. "But we must have two more."

He told Suarez of the new development, which was essential, though it added to the danger of the enterprise. By sheer good fortune, however, they laughed against the lifeboat. A dog barked, and Elsie had a thrilling struggle with Joey, who was furious that this unlooked for insolence should go unanswered. The sheepdog cur that helped ashore speedily subsided, but it appeared to be an age before Suarez moved again. He knew better than his companions how ready the Indians were to note such spiritless challenges.

Elsie found the painter of the lifeboat rolled in its proper place. Soon she experienced a steady pull on the rope. Her little fleet was in motion. Gray began to help in the paddling. Ere long they came under the influence of the tide, and she heard the ripple of the water against the planks of the boat. Then Suarez called a halt and a parley.

It would be better, he advised, to use the oars in the heavy boat than attempt to tow it across the strong current from a canoe. They would gain time and be safer. So they climbed into the lifeboat, but continued to tow the canoes.

Suarez, somewhat weak from his knock on the head overnight, was not equal to the strain of continued exertion, so Elsie and Gray took two oars each and allowed their companion to rest. When, judging by the surrounding hills, they were half way across the inlet, Gray stooped low in the boat, struck a match and looked at his watch. It was long after 1 o'clock. There could be no doubt whatever that the dawn would find them far from the ship, no matter how fortunate they might be in their further adventures.

It was well for Elsie that she had learned how to scull when in her teens and that her muscles were in fair condition owing to her skill at tennis. Even so, she feared that she could never hold out against the sustained stress of that pull across the bay. The heavy boat, intended to be rowed by six men, had the added burden of four canoes. It was back breaking work, but she neither faltered nor sighed until Suarez said:

"Let me take your place now, señorita. In ten minutes we shall be at the mouth of the creek, though heaven only knows how we shall find it."

He did not exaggerate in thus expressing his fear. Time and again they neared the shore only to hear the tidal swell breaking heavily on the rocks. The lights of the Kansas, fully three miles away, could only tell them that they were in the neighborhood of the place where Courtenay had last been seen in this identical boat. The least divergence from the line given by the position of the ship meant a difference of hundreds of yards at such a distance, and there was an ominous light-

HIGH ENDORSEMENT

Of Hon. Chas. E. Townsend By the People of Jackson County in Campaign for Senator

Jackson Citizen Press: When Charley E. Townsend our famous representative in congress, returnes home after the adjournment of that great legislative body he will be presented with petitions signed by thousands of his admirers in Jackson county, of all political parties. These will give him emphatic endorsement in his campaign for United States Senator, and pledge the signers to do all possible to secure for him the seat in the senate.

All over Jackson county are being circulated these petitions, and all are being readily signed, showing the people are of one mind with regard to the senatorship. All want "Charley" for the high office, and the solid backing of Jackson county will have much weight in the contest, in which are centered the hopes and aspirations of all the voters of the county.

The movement in Mr. Townsend's favor is not confined alone to Jackson county. Friends of the famous congressman in all parts of the state are turning their faces toward his banner, which is a most significant feature of our fellow citizen's campaign for a seat in the upper house of congress.

ARCHITECTURE IN GATES.

Ornamental Posts of Cement—Advantages of a Double Entrance.

The approach to the farm is like the face at the open door of the house. The first cut in this article represents the gateposts rather than the gate itself. However, an iron gate made as shown from gas or water pipe would not look out of place on almost any farm. It may be built by your local blacksmith and should not be overexpensive. But any iron or substantial gate may of course be used and if desired one of the self opening gates operated by the wheel of the wagon or buggy.

Now as to the cement posts. For small gates they should be from ten to twelve inches square, for large gates from sixteen to twenty inches square and possibly in some cases even larger. They are built of hollow blocks set in cement mortar, and the hollow space is filled with concrete. To make the blocks build two bottomless wooden boxes. To illustrate we will say we are building an eighteen inch post. Build one box eighteen inches square on the inside and eight inches deep. For a larger post have the box deeper, for a smaller post not so deep. Build a second box the same depth ten inches square on the outside. Place the small box inside of the larger one and as near the center as possible. Nail stout strips across the opposite corners to hold the boxes square and in place. Set the mold or boxes on any level floor or board and you are ready to make the blocks.

The mixture for filling the mold is as follows: One part cement and four parts sand if you desire a smooth block. If the rough surface is preferred use some coarse gravel or crushed stone in place of all sand. Mix the two together dry and add water until the consistency is jelly-like and a handful when squeezed will hold its shape. Fill the mold, tamp lightly, let set for a very short time, tap the outside box lightly with a hammer and lift straight up. Small cleats should be nailed on the outside of the large box for hand holds.

The surfaces of the boxes touched by the cement must be smooth, kept clean and well oiled with any oil or soft soap. The operation is repeated until the required number of blocks have been made. When dry, which will be in about ten days, excavate not less than three feet deep and have the excavation eight inches larger on all sides than the post. Lay the blocks up as shown, placing the hinges, latch, etc., in the joints as the work goes up, and in about twenty-four hours' time fill the post with the following mixture: One part cement, three parts sand and five or six parts coarse gravel or broken stone. Stone as large as hens' eggs may be used. Make this concrete rather wet and fill to the top, when the caps may be set in place.

DOUBLE GATE BETTER THAN SINGLE.

The double gate shown in the second cut has advantages over the single gate. It will not sag; it requires no hinges; it may be easily fastened with hooks or latches. It looks neat, and when cattle are kept there is less danger to the stock in passing through. Square timbers or heavy poles may be used. The gate is twenty feet wide and sixteen or eighteen high. The two outside posts should be set well in the ground and braced at the top, as shown. The center post, to which the gate is made fast, turns at the top, in the cross timber, and the lower end sets on a large stone. Iron pins are placed in both the top and lower end for pivots, and a post must be set about ten feet from the center post and in line with same, to which the gate is hooked when necessary to have it open for any length of time.

SUGGESTIONS FOR SPRAYING.

Best Methods For Obtaining Healthy Shrubs Fully Explained.

One of the first requisites toward success in spraying trees is a good and complete outfit. One of the best consists of a 150 gallon can, which rests on its side in a rack to hold it in place; a strong force pump with an automatic stirrer, two sections of half inch hose sixteen feet long, two ten-foot extension rods and two double vermorel nozzles.

With this outfit, three men, a team and a wagon 300 twelve-year-old trees can be sprayed in one day.

It is of the utmost importance that the materials used be first class and carefully compounded. The most effectual formula is three-fourths of a pound of paris green, twelve pounds of blue vitriol and twelve pounds of fresh air slaked lime to 150 gallons of water.

In preparing the mixture put thirty-six pounds of blue vitriol in a burlap sack and suspend it in a barrel containing thirty-six gallons of water the day before it is to be used, in order to give it ample time to thoroughly dissolve.

Slake twelve pounds of fresh lime, and when ready to use it strain it into another vessel, and slake twelve pounds more to be ready when wanted. Next put three-fourths of a pound of paris green in one gallon of water and keep it thoroughly stirred until ready to use the next day.

The following morning, when ready to begin spraying, fill the cask almost full of water, leaving room, however, for the ingredients. Then strain the lime solution into the cask, next twelve gallons of blue vitriol solution and lastly the paris green mixture.

Place the ends of the pump hose so as to pump the mixture back into the cask and run the pump several minutes in order to thoroughly mix the entire solution.

In spraying, apply the mixture with sufficient force to reach every part of the tree and foliage, giving a fine, misty spray until the tree is well covered, which is indicated by slight droppings of the mixture from the trees. Make it a practice to spray three times each season.

The first spraying is commenced just before the blossom buds open in the spring. It is at this time that the cankerworm, bud moth, leaf crumpler, leaf folder and cigar case borer are making preparations to begin their destructive work in the orchard.

In spraying the second time begin just as soon as the petals of the blossoms have dropped and make the third spraying ten days later.

The second spraying is the most important of all, as almost every pest by this time is doing ravenous work.

Of all the enemies of tree fruit culture the codling moth is the most destructive. It lays its eggs in the calyx or blossom end of the forming apple or pear, and in a few days the egg hatches and the tiny worm eats its way into the fruit.

About the only way any beneficial results can be obtained from spraying for this pest is to spray while the calyx is expanded and while the forming fruit is standing upward upon its stem. If the spraying is neglected until the calyx closes and the fruit has turned downward most of the insects will be inside the fruit, and spraying then will be of little benefit.

It is essential to spray thoroughly from both sides of the trees and positively not against the wind, even though the wind may seem light.

It is evident that if part of the foliage of the tree is not sprayed the unsprayed parts are as open to the attack of fungous spores and the stings of the curculio as though there had been no spray within a mile of the tree.

Handy Bread Outfit.

One of the latest additions to the already large number of combination household utensils is the combined bread cabinet and cutting knife. This consists of an ordinary wooden box, or storage compartment, in which the loaves are kept, with two drawers beneath it. These drawers are pivotally mounted to swing to an open position beyond the sides. On the side of the box is a curved cutting knife, operating in a rotary fashion by means of a handle. A loaf of bread is placed at the edge of the box, and a turn of the knife cuts off a slice, which drops into the drawer beneath. When a sufficient number of slices are cut the drawer can be swung shut. One merit of this device is that the knife, operating as it does, cannot swerve to one side or the other, and the slices of bread are all of uniform thickness, a result not always achieved by using the old fashioned bread knife by hand.

The Country's Farm Animals.

The crop reporting board of the bureau of statistics of the United States department of agriculture estimates the numbers and values of farm animals on farms and ranges in the United States on Jan. 1 last as follows: Compared with Jan. 1, 1908, the following changes are indicated: Horses have increased 618,000, mules 184,000, milk cows 526,000; other cattle decreased 694,000, sheep increased 1,433,000, swine decreased 1,937,000. The average value per head horses increased $2.23, mules 8 cents, milk cows $1.69, other cattle 60 cents; sheep decreased 45 cents, swine increased 50 cents. The total value of all animals enumerated above on Jan. 1, 1909, was $1,525,250,000 as compared with $1,331,230,000 on Jan. 1, 1908, an increase of $194,020,000, or 4.5 per cent.

West Michigan Will Make the Exhibit at Chicago

Mr. Rowe Found People Enthusiastic in Every County

After a preliminary investigation extending over nearly six weeks the Western Michigan Developement Bureau has definitely determined to be represented at the Land and Irrigation exposition to be held in Chicago at the Coliseum during the two weeks of November 20 to December 4. The final decision was made by the executive committee of the Developement Bureau at a meeting held at Grand Rapids Monday night. The result gives western Michigan opportunity to show the choicest products of its orchards, fields and farms to an enormous concorse of people. The exposition in Chicago takes place at the same time as the stock show and these twe monster gatherings will undoubtedly draw more than 500,000 people.

The executive committee engaged George E. Rowe, widely known as an expert in work of that character, to collect and arrange the exhibit. Mr. Rowe has had the handling of similar exhibits as far back as the New Orleans exposition and down to the Pan American at Buffalo and the big affair at St. Louis. Mr. Rowe left that night for Chicago to look the grounds over in order that he may lay his plans and begin work at once.

Mr. Rowe had done part of the work soliciting funds and canvassing public opinion which led up to the final decision of the executive committee. He found the people of western Michigan, practically to a man, in favor of such an exhibit being made. He also received for the Bureau liberal promises of financial support.

The exact cost is yet to be determined but it will be considerably greater than it was first estimated And so far as can be seen at the present time it will run close to $12,000. Without question the result of an exhibition such as the one planned will be a big impetus to the settlement and development of western Michigan.

F. B. Miller, of Springfield, Ohio, who was in this section not long ago, will organize a large fruit company to develop lands in Oceana county on which he has options. Mr. Miller has large fruit interests in Ohio, Bgood peach and apple trees in West Virginia and is in the business as a commercial matter solely. In an article printed by the Springfield News about Mr. Miller's trip through this section we find this paragraph: "Many parts of this long fruit belt show remarkably rich results. Extending back an average distance of twenty miles from the Great Lakes the growers say the crop has never failed when proper care and attention is given. Especially true is this of the peach, which does not withstand the severe rigors of away below zero, but the waters of the lake being at its greatest depth north of Muskegon—about fifteen hundred feet—has a tempering effect on the west and southwest winds of winter."

Jackson Brothers of East Bay township, Grand Traverse county will make cranberry marsh of waste lands about Hogsback and Spider lakes in that township where they have 160 acres of land. Dams will be built and hills are being washed into the bog to make the proper environments for the plants by hydraulic power. It requires several years to bring the plants to good bearing, but then they yield from 200 to 800 bushels per acre, worth $500 to $1,000. When the culmination of their plans is reached they will have one marsh of ten acres and one of thirty. Figure their profits for yourself.

The Boyne City police department is investigating the strange antics of a new religious sect which has headquarters in a chapel in the north part of the city. Residents of that section complain that the nightly services of the devotees are calculated to create continuous disturbance, and they have asked the police to stop the meetings or have them transferred outside the corporation limits. The new set is known officially as "The Unknown Tongue." Its members go daily into a trance-like state, in which they are said to receive communications from heaven. They jabber in strange tongues while in this state, and often shriek and yell while they bump their heads upon the floor of the chapel. The meetings are held nightly and are said to be invariably noisy. The prosecuting attorney has ruled that the worship of the sect in its own way may not be interfered with by law unless it reaches a point where it can be termed a real nuisance to the general public. The police are therefore gathering evidence instead of closing the chapel forthwith.

Senator Fred C. Wetmore of Cadillac, who was recently appointed judge of probate for Wexford county by Gov. Warner, has been compelled to go to court in order to see if he is eligible to draw his salary.

The suit is of a friendly nature, but County Clerk Felix Flynn refuses to issue an order for the new judge to draw his salary, holding that Judge Wetmore was a member of the legislature and that he was ineligible to draw another salary for holding another state office. As a result Judge Wetmore will mandamus the clerk to show cause why he should not pay his salary.

Judge Wetmore holds he is a county official while the clerk holds he is a state official. It is very likely that the case will not be settled until it has been taken to the supreme court.

State Highway Commissioner Ely is having a busy time of it instructing the township highway commissioners in regard to the new road law. According to Mr. Ely fully sixty per cent of the highway commissioners in the different townships of the state are newly elected and most of them are farmers and unfamiliar with the road laws, and with the new revised road law which will go into effect in September it keeps him busy instructing them. The new revised law was compiled at great pains by the joint committee on roads and bridges from the senate and house and there are also a great many new features in the new law upon which the highway commissioner should become posted. Commissioner Ely is having the law printed in a condensed form which will be mailed out to the supervisors.

Sick Folk's Fancies.

"Isn't it funny," said the brown eyed woman, "how important some things are to you when you are sick and how trivial they seem when you get well? When I was ill awhile ago I could not take any water to drink, although I nearly died of thirst. But late every night the nurse would bring me a small glass of cracked ice. Oh, how I anticipated that thing through long and painful hours, and when I could hear her cracking up the ice the sound was the most beautiful thing in the world. When I was eating it if one little scrap got lost in the bedclothes I almost wept, so precious it was. And now that I am well and have the icebox at my command I wouldn't eat a piece for anything.

"A friend of mine, a strong man, told me that when he was recovering from typhoid and couldn't eat anything he would lie for hours composing menus. He would call out his orders in a loud voice and then nearly burst into tears when no waiter appeared with loaded tray. Sick people certainly are funny, though they can't always see it at the time."—New York Press.

A spider, it seems, had occasion to borrow a sum of money. A journey round to the generously disposed brought him 2,000 cowries each from the cat, the dog, the hyena, the leopard and the lion. When pay day came round, the spider remained at home to receive the visits of his creditors in a certain prearranged order. First came the cat to claim repayment of his loan. "Hush!" said the spider. "I hear a noise outside. It is a dog come to see me. You must hide under this calabash for safety." The cat was scarcely hidden when the dog, coming in, made a similar request for his money. Says Master Spider, "There is a cat under that calabash. Take him and consider the debt paid." No sooner said than done. Just then a snuffling and scraping were heard at the door. The third creditor, the hyena, had arrived. "Don't be alarmed, my dear dog, but hide here till he has left." And the spider hushed him under the calabash. "I smell a dog," said the hyena, rooting about. "Under that calabash," the spider replied. "Eat him up, and your debt is paid." The dog paid the penalty of his simplicity, and all was quiet once more. The hyena was preparing to leave, when he heard an ominous sound that sent him crouching against the wall. It was the pattering of the leopard's feet at the door. "Quick! Under this calabash!" cries his host, and the hyena curls up in the fatal cache, only to meet a like fate from his more courageous enemy. "My debt is repaid," said the leopard, and ran against the lion coming in. A terrible fight ensued, for the leopard and the lion are equal in strength, so the natives say. When blood and dust make havoc in the house and both animals are exhausting their strength the spider is busy at the fire. Seizing a pot of boiling grease, he pours it over the clawing mass. Leopard and lion roll apart in their death agony, and the spider has only to straighten and clean up before resuming once more the humdrum life of fly catching. No wonder he is known as "Malwayo," the crafty one.

Spaniards' Taste in Reading.

The librarian selected a book entitled "Farming In the Ohio Valley." "Will you give this to that young man waiting at the desk?" she said to an assistant. "He is a Spanish student learning to read English, and I think this will suit him."

"That sounds like a very unpromising subject for a student in English to tackle," a friend remarked.

"It would be uninteresting to anybody but a Spanish student," said the librarian, "but the Spaniards run to farming literature. When training beginners in English of any other nationality something sprightly in the way of fiction or travel usually is recommended. But not to the Spaniard. Nine times out of ten it is a work on agriculture that he will make the best progress in."—New York Press.

Had to Bow to Custom.

The late King Oscar of Sweden was the least conventional of monarchs, but he had to courtesy to custom nevertheless. The king and M. Bonnier, the botanist, met as strangers while out in search of flowers near Stockholm. They were soon the best of friends, and Bonnier suggested lunch at his inn.

"Come home with me instead," said the other.

When the way led to the palace gates Bonnier hesitated.

"I'm sorry," said his companion, "but I happen to be the king of this country, and this is the only place where I can entertain my friends."

INCOME OF EUROPEAN RULERS.

Russian Czar by Far the Wealthiest of Them All.

The donations given by the various royalties of Europe for the relief of the sufferers in the Italian earthquake make a comparison of their incomes interesting. The czar's private income, derived from over a million square miles of cultivated lands and from his mines in Siberia, added to what he receives from the state, makes him by far the richest monarch in the world, and probably the richest that has ever lived. King Edward receives $2,350,000; but little more than a fourth of this goes into the privy purse. A stipulated sum is invariably set aside for household expenses, salaries, pensions, charities, rewards, etc. The reichstag allows the German emperor about $650,000. He has also a salary as king of Prussia which amounts to about $4,000,000. He has great estates and many resources at his disposal, but his expenses are tremendous.

The emperor of Austria is also king of Hungary, and, therefore, like the German emperor, draws two salaries. The amounts of each, in his case, is nearly $3,000,000. The king of Italy receives about $3,800,000 a year; but out of this allowances are paid to the queen dowager, to the duke of Genoa and to the children of the duke of Aosta. King Alfonso has an allowance of $1,800,000, and as provision is made for other members of the Spanish royal family the German emperor about $650,000. He has also a salary as king of Prussia which amounts to about $4,000,000. He has great estates and many resources at his disposal, but his expenses are tremendous.

WANTED TO FEEL THE LIQUOR.

Half-Drowned Man Evidently Was Not Used to Taking Water.

Horace Bixey, the doyen of Mississippi pilots, is still at the wheel at 82. To him Mark Twain served his apprenticeship.

A Vicksburg reporter asked Mr. Bixey a recipe for a hale old age.

"Temperance, young man," the pilot replied. "Intemperance is what kills us off. Oh, the victims," he said, in his whimsical way, "the sad victims of intemperance I have seen!

"Once I remember a passenger of ours fell overboard. We fished him out with a boathook after he had been soaking on the bottom half an hour or so. We laid him limp and sopping on the dock, and a steward ran for the whisky bottle.

"As I pried the man's mouth open to pour some whisky down his throat, his lips moved. A kind of murmur came from them. I put my ear down close to listen and I heard the half-drowned wretch say:

"'Hoss me on a bar'l fust to git some o' this water out. It'll weaken the licker.'"—Cleveland Leader.

A NIGHT OF TORTURE

It Brought a Fortune to Its Half Strangled Victim.

AN INNOCENT MAN'S ORDEAL.

Twice Strung Up by Lynchers, He Confessed to Murder and Was Afterward Vindicated and Recovered $25,000 From His Assailants.

Late in the fifties of the last century George W. King was the proprietor of a hotel in Oxford, twenty-six miles from Lafayette, Ind. In 1859 a stranger arrived at the hotel and gave his name as Dr. Rowe. He told King that he had no money and asked to be trusted for his board till he could get practice in the place, promising to pay him as promptly as possible. King consented to the arrangement, and Rowe soon became a favorite with the people on account of his companionable disposition and superior intelligence. The doctor, however, fell deeper and deeper in debt. He had been at the hotel for nearly a year when King reminded him one morning that he had not paid anything on his board bill for three months. The conversation, it afterward appeared, was overheard by some one in the hotel, though nothing was thought of it at the time.

A week after the conversation Rowe was called out late at night to see a patient and failed to return. Days passed without any word from him, and his disappearance soon was connected with the conversation that had passed between him and the landlord about the unpaid board. One night three months later a party of disguised men entered the hotel and, overpowering King, took him to a woodland adjoining the town.

He recognized the voices of several of his captors and especially of the leader, who told him that he was suspected of murdering Rowe and demanded that he confess. King stoutly maintained his innocence, and the leader of the mob ordered his companions "to string him up." A rope was placed around his neck, a dozen men pulled down a stout limb, over which the other end of the rope was thrown, and when the limb was released it carried King off his feet and left him hanging by the neck. He was nearly unconscious when let down and again ordered to confess.

After much delay he was restored sufficiently to understand what was said to him, and he again refused, declaring his innocence and saying he did not know what had become of Rowe. A second time he was strung up and a second time let down, but life was nearly extinct, and he was much longer in being restored than before.

The luckless landlord knew he could not pass through another such ordeal and live, so he consented to confess. He purposely lengthened the confession in order to gain time and said that he and two men, named Rogers and Haggard, had poisoned some whisky and induced Rowe to drink it, and after his death they had buried him in a hollow some distance away. It was nearly daylight when the confession was made, and the lynchers determined to take King to jail in Lafayette and then arrest Rogers and Haggard.

Before the jail was reached day had dawned, and King recognized his captors as members of the Horse Thief Detective company of Benton, Warren and Tippecanoe counties, nearly all of whom were known to him. Confident of his guilt, the men made no attempt to conceal their identity. So great was the excitement and so intense the feeling against King that he waived examination and went to jail, hoping that something would turn up to establish his innocence.

From the jail at Lafayette King addressed letters to editors of papers in Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, Louisville and other cities, setting out the circumstances of his confinement and asking them to keep his letter in the papers in hopes that it might fall under Rowe's notice. The appeal was a pathetic one and was copied into many papers throughout the northwest.

Two weeks after its first appearance Dr. Rowe rode into Oxford and, attended by a number of citizens, proceeded to Lafayette, where his appearance caused the immediate release of the accused landlord. In explanation of his disappearance Rowe said he had left his home in the east on account of domestic troubles, that he had learned that his wife was on her way to Oxford, and he had determined to leave the place secretly in order to prevent her from learning where he had gone. He had gone to a little town in southern Illinois, and it was there that he learned that the man who had befriended him was suspected of his murder and was in jail in Lafayette.

As soon as King was released he brought suit against thirty-two members of the Horse Thief Detective company for $5,000 each and also against the company as a corporation. Thomas A. Hendricks, afterward vice president, was his counsel, but the case was not allowed to come to trial, the lynchers compromising by paying King $25,000. With this money he purchased a farm and other property near Lafayette, where he lived till his death at the age of seventy-eight years.

AN INNOCENT VICTIM.

Swinburne and the Grouchy Head Master of Eton.

Once when Algernon Charles Swinburne was traveling back with his father from school at the end of one of the terms they entered a carriage in which the then head master of Eton, who was buried in the Times, was seated.

"Isn't that Dr. —?" the admiral whispered to his son. "I believe it is," stammered young Swinburne reluctantly. After a rebuke at the apparently careless answer the admiral "accosted the awful presence" with "Dr. —, I believe, sir?" The doctor was plainly annoyed at being disturbed by a stranger: "Well, sir," pursued the admiral, "my boy here has just finished his first term at Eton, and I should very much like to know what account you can give of him." As a matter of fact, the doctor had not set eyes on young Swinburne before. "Enraged, however, I suppose," Swinburne afterward related, "at my father's rather unconventional interruption, which he had no doubt considered a slight on his dignity, he glanced down at me with a scarlet face and said deliberately, 'Your boy, sir—your boy is one of the very worst in the school,' and then intrenched himself once more behind the Times."

At Paddington there was a storm. In vain young Swinburne protested that the doctor had said what he had out of pure vexation, but the father declared that he would take the word of the head master, and Swinburne was deprived of all pleasures and privileges for the duration of the holiday.—Dundee Advertiser.

NEW BONE FOR BOY'S FINGER.

Lad's Hand Saved from Mutilation as Result of Unique Medical Experiment.

Trenton, N. J.—Surgeons in all parts of the country are taking great interest in the remarkable surgical operation which has just been successfully performed here by Dr. E. B. White, formerly head of the staff of the McKinley hospital.

Several weeks ago ten-year-old Walter Barry of 505 Southard street was playing in his father's barn with a hay cutter, and his hand slipped through the feed chute. One of the fingers on his left hand was completely severed between the first and second joints.

Dr. White was called and tried to have the bones united by stitching the severed parts together, but failed. As a last resort, before entirely amputating the finger, the surgeon removed the bone between the first and second joints and allowed the secretions of the body to fill the space, practically growing a bone in place of the one removed.

Loses Her Wooden Leg.

Des Moines, Ia.—Because her wooden leg had been listed as household property, Mrs. Charles Harridin, East Fifth and Walnut streets, was compelled to unstrap the mechanical member at the knee and lay it on top of all the other humble household goods as they were carted away under a mortgage foreclosure.

Sobbing Mrs. Harridin pleaded with the loan company to leave her the wooden leg, as she would be helpless without it, but her entreaties were in vain.

Clothes.

There are promotions in life, which, independent of the more substantial rewards they offer, acquire peculiar value and dignity from the coats and waistcoats connected with them. A field marshal has his uniform; a bishop his silk apron; a counsellor his silk gown; a beadle his cocked hat. Strip the bishop of his apron, or the beadle of his hat and lace, what are they? Men, mere men. Dignity, and even holiness, too, sometimes, are more questions of coat and waistcoat than some people imagine.—Charles Dickens.

Explained.

"How does it happen that a third of the population of your vast country is in the east?" asked the visitor.

"I presume the discomfort of riding brake beams has to be regarded as a factor," explained the native student of sociology.

The Lark's Song.

A writer on "The Wonders of the Spring" says that the volume of sound produced by the skylark is most wonderful. "The lark ascends until it appears no larger than a midge and can with difficulty be seen by the unaided eye, and yet every note of its song will be clearly audible to persons who are fully half a mile from the nest over which the bird utters its song. Moreover, it never ceases to sing for a moment, a feat which seems wonderful to us human beings, who find that a song of six or seven minutes in length, though interspersed with rests and pauses, is more than trying. Yet this bird will pour out a continuous song of nearly twenty minutes in length and all the time has to support itself in the air by the constant use of its wings."

The Only Difficulty.

ening of the gloom, accompanied by a dimming of the stars, when Gray hit on the idea that the powerful current had probably carried them a good deal southward of the point they were aiming at. He suggested that they should boldly pull a quarter of a mile or so against the tide and then try their luck. Their progress, of course, became slower than ever, and Elsie began to despair that they would ever find the mouth of the stream which ran through the cleft in the hill when she suddenly saw the luminous crescents which heralded the sunrise over the inner mountain range. They could not be visible unless there was a break in the cliffs in that locality.

"Pull in now," she whispered tensely, and with a little further effort they found that the boat was traveling not against but with the tide, which was flooding a small offshoot of the main estuary.

Precaution became not only useless, but impossible. They were all worn out. Nothing but the most inflexible determination on the part of Elsie and Gray, eked out by a certain despairing fear of both of them felt by Suarez, had sustained them thus far. They went on and on. They swept rapidly into the jaws of a precipitous defile, the lofty crests on either hand coming momentarily nearer against the brightening sky. It did not seem credible that this sheer cut through the heart of a gigantic hill could continue for more than a few yards nor that anything save a bird could find foothold on its steep sides. Yet the current flowed smoothly onward through a wealth of vegetation which clung precariously to every ledge and natural escarpment.

Joey, embarrassed by his gag, nevertheless managed to emit a warning growl. Then the boat crashed into a canoe, and a hoarse yell of alarm came from beneath the lowermost trees, whose dense foliage flung a pall over the water. Gray was seized with an inspiration. He grasped the canoe as it bumped along the gunwale and held it down on one side until it filled and sank. He sent another and yet a third guzzling to the bottom before the outburst of raucous cries from both banks showed there were Indians here in some force.

"Cheer up, Miss Maxwell," said he.

Stones, too, began to hum around them. Some struck the boat, but the greater number whizzed undeniably close to the heads of the two men and the girl, proving conclusively that they were visible to the unseen enemy. Gray whipped forth the revolver and fired twice. The second time a shriek of pain told that he had hit one of their assailants. The two reports made a deafening din in that place of echoes. They appeared to stir the Indians into a perfect frenzy, and it was evident by the sounds that the islanders had not much liberty of movement on the narrow strips of land they occupied on both sides of the gorge.

Elsie caught some significant splashing behind her.

"They are swimming toward the canoes!" she screamed.

Telling Suarez to pull for all he was worth, Gray clambered to the stern of the boat and emptied the revolver at what he took to be the black heads of the swimmers.

"Quick! Load it again!" he said, and Elsie obeyed with a promptness and certainty that were amazing.

The American fired three more shots before he was satisfied that the canoes were untenanted and not cut adrift. They were now leaving the pandemonium behind, and Elsie, bethinking herself of the dog, freed him from that most objectionable muzzle. Joey forthwith awoke the welkin with his uproar; but, although the girl strained her ears for some answering hail, she could detect nothing beyond the bawling of Indians at each other across the narrow creek and the repeated echoes of the dog's barking.

About this time Gray began to suspect that the tide was bearing them onward at a remarkable rate. They were being impelled toward an unknown destination with the silence and gathering speed of a mill race.

An expert engineer, though his work may have little to do with sea or river, cannot fail to accumulate a store of theoretical knowledge as to the properties and limitations of water in motion. Gray knew that the quickened impulse of the stream arose from the tidal force exerted in a channel which gradually lessened its width. The boat was traveling at sea level. Therefore there could be neither rapids nor cataract in front, but the steady rush of the current, now plainly audible, could not be accounted for simply by the effort of the tide to gain a passage through a mere byway, as the boat was now nearly half a mile from the estuary, and the velocity of the current was increasing each moment.

"We must endeavor to reach the bank and hold on to the branches of a tree!" he shouted in Spanish. "Down with your heads until the boat strikes and then try to lay hold of something!"

There was no time for explanation. He seized an oar. A powerful stroke swung the boat's nose round. By chance he used the starboard oar. All unknowing he spun a coin for life or death, and life won. They crashed through some drooping foliage and ran into a crumbling bank. Gray unshipped the oar and jammed it straight down. It stuck between stones at a depth of three feet, and the lifeboat was held fast for the time. The canoes battled against each other, but were swept aside instantly. When the noise ceased they plainly heard the swirl of the water. In their new environment it had the uncanny and sinister hiss of some monstrous snake.

"Everybody happy?" Gray demanded coolly.

"I am clinging to a tree trunk," answered Elsie.

"Bully for you. Make fast with a piece of rope. But be careful to provide a slipknot in case we have to sheer off in a hurry. Can you manage that?"

"Quite well."

CATCHING AN ALBATROSS.

The Bird Enjoys the Sport and Is Landed Uninjured.

With the birds sculling by the dozen it is easy enough to capture specimens for examination without causing injury or pain. Any sharply barbed hook is altogether superfluous. The albatrosses absolutely enjoy the excitement, and the sport obtained is not without a novel interest.

A small metal frame should be made in the shape of a hollow triangle attached to 100 yards of stout line and kept afloat by a good sized piece of cork. The sides of the metal frame are then covered with lids of fat pork, the hard skin of which is securely bound thereto. The bait is thrown astern, and the line is slowly paid out.

Presently a great albatross swoops through the air, impelled by curiosity to investigate the nature of the floating pork. It settles before the dainty morsel of food; numbers of birds follow suit, each one made bold by competition, and then the sport begins.

At this moment additional line must be given in order to compensate for the progressing of the ship, thus enabling a bird to seize the desired food. With a sudden rush the supreme effort is made. Once or twice the attempt proves ineffectual; but, rendered bold by greediness, a final grab finds the curved bill securely wedged inside the apex of the triangle, as the fierce tugs on the line quickly indicate.

Steadily the haul is made, hand over hand, until a helpless albatross is boldly lifted on to the poop in an absolutely uninjured condition. A slackened line enables the bird to escape, and if scattered wits permitted such an effort sudden flight would obtain release.

The other birds invariably commence to attack a wounded comrade, a steady pull being required, even if the line does cut your hands, to save it from its friends. Once safely on deck the mandibles are tied together, for otherwise the bird throws up an oily fluid, a disagreeable habit possessed by all the tribe.

Subject to this precaution it may wander gravely around to survey the new horizon of life. The large eyes gaze with a truly pathetic confidence expressive of anything but fear.

It is a strange spectacle to witness the inquisitive bird solemnly waddle to and fro among the equally inquisitive human beings around. True, it objects slightly to the process of measurement, pecking sharply by way of protest, but a gentle box on the ear soon induces submission as the dimensions are rapidly noted, the albatross meanwhile reposing affectionately in the arms of the second officer.

The specimen happens to be a small one, but the wing expansion from tip to tip is less than ten feet, the extreme length of body is three feet six inches and the formidable bill measures upward of four inches.—Cornhill Magazine.

How to Make Bedroom Coverings.

Pretty coverings for a bedroom may be made of heavy unbleached muslin. For the bedspread buy cloth of double width to avoid a seam in the middle. Turn a two inch hem and hem lightly by hand. Then from soft colored cretonne or sateen cut wreaths of flowers or figures and fell them on to the cotton in any way that appeals to your taste. Curtains, pillows and bureau covers may be made in the same way. The materials are cheap, and the effect is pretty.

HAS SHOD 60,000 HORSES.

Massachusetts Man, 54 Years a Blacksmith, Has Made Great Record and Is Still at Work.

Gardner, Mass.—A record of having shod more than 60,000 horses in his 54 years' career as blacksmith is the distinction claimed by James F. Cox of Gardner.

Although now 63 years old, Mr. Cox is daily at his forge and turns out as much and as good work as many a younger smith.

Mr. Cox was born in Dublin, and when 14 years old he was "let out" to learn the blacksmith trade. It required seven years for him to complete his apprenticeship. He still has in his possession the indenture papers given him by his employer in Dublin.

After working a while in his native city, Mr. Cox went to Manchester, England, and from there came to America about forty years ago. In New York he found employment in various places, finally landing in Gardner, securing employment with the late Francis P. Leonard, who during his active years was one of the most widely known blacksmiths in this part of the state.

In speaking of the changes that have taken place in Gardner since he came to the town, Mr. Cox said he used to pick berries in the field where now is Cross street, one of the most traveled thoroughfares of the town.

In 1887 Mr. Cox set up in business for himself, building a small shop at the rear of his home in Cross street. No matter what his earnings might be, Mr. Cox has always been in the habit of putting some of it by for the proverbial "rainy" day," and although he could retire from active work and live on his savings he says he intends to keep busy for a good many years to come. During the winter he has made up several hundred pairs of horseshoes in anticipation of a brisk season.

Announcement of Son's Engagement Brings Warning Against Marrying Minor from Parent.

Morrisville, Pa.—J. W. Danbury of Morrisville has inserted in the newspapers advertisements forbidding anyone to wed his son, William, who, he says, is a minor, being only 19 years of age.

The engagement of William to 17-year-old Josephine Atkinson was announced some time ago by the young couple. Mr. Danbury was surprised when he read the announcement and asked his son to explain. William admitted that he was engaged to Miss Atkinson, and said he intended to marry her.

"Not if I know what I am talking about," harshly declared the stern parent. He then had the advertisements inserted warning all girls that he prohibited his son to marry because he is a minor.

Miss Atkinson's parents now declare they will never let Josephine wed Mr. Danbury's son.

"We did not know anything about this engagement until we read it," said Mr. Atkinson. "It could have been broken without publicity. Josephine will never wed Willie Danbury."

The young couple maintain silence concerning the affair. They are being closely watched, as an elopement is feared. The girl and the boy are still at school.

A feud has arisen between the two families, excepting the sweethearts, because Mr. Atkinson resents Mr. Danbury's action as an indication that he thought his daughter was not good enough for the boy.

STUDY IN GYMNASIUM SUITS

Montclair, N. J., Normal Schoolgirls Were Caught in the Rain and Changed Garments.

Montclair, N. J.—The 123 girl students at the Montclair State Normal school are wondering whether or not the next heavy rainstorm will bring about the same novel conditions which prevailed at the institution recently. When they arrived at the school most of them were wet and bedraggled. Wet skirts and shoes were not conducive to healthful study, so after a whispered conference of the female members of the faculty and a delegation of the students the girls went to the gymnasium, removed their wet apparel, and donned the neat bloomers and felt shoes they wear in the gymnasium. Looking like so many boys, the girls filed into the classroom.

The girls presented a novel sight as they lined up for their studies. The seven young men who constitute the male element of the students smiled, but said the girls looked comfortable.

Catches Hawks in Traps.

Tipton, Ind.—William Rice, a farmer of Madison township, was here the other day with a verification of his story that he had found a successful method of getting rid of chicken hawks, which are numerous in the neighborhood. Failing to get within shooting distance of the birds he baited muskrat traps, using live chickens, and the hawks lost no time in visiting them. Two of the birds caught, both alive but injured, were exhibited by him and he asserts that he caught ten of them.

Servant in Family Fifty Years.

Cretan Seals.

Some of the greatest scholars have used their learning more as a weapon than a means of illumination. Professor Lewis Campbell's gentleness and courtesy may be illustrated by the following true story: Some years ago he was in the chair at a meeting of the Hellenic society when Dr. Arthur Evans described the results of some of his first excavations in Crete. Among his finds were a number of seals and other relics showing traces of affinity with early Egyptian art. Discussion followed, in the course of which a venerable admiral, who had been present at the battle of Navarino, rose and said that he did not know whether he was in order, but he would like to state that in the year 1828, when he was cruising in the Levant, he saw a herd of seals off the coast of Crete—a sight which he had never seen before or since. The situation was delicate, but it was saved by the chairman, who rose immediately to express the thanks of the meeting to the admiral for his interesting reminiscence. "Here," he said, "we have another link with Egypt, for all of us must remember the story in the Odyssey of Proteus and his herd of seals on the island near the mouth of the Nile."—London Spectator.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255 met in regular session July 25 Worthy Master E. E. Stroud in chair. All other officers present.

The committee of arrangements reported that J. C. Ketchum of Hastings, will be at hall grounds to give an address the day of Grange picnic, which will be held August 28.

The Grange decided to finish papering hall, on Friday night, July 24, all members are requested to be present. And lend a helping hand.

Number present at meeting twenty-five. Lecturer's hour consisted of songs and reading.

Grange closed in due form.

The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas it has pleased the Divine Ruler of the universe, to remove from our number our dearly beloved sister and friend, Jennie Brown, in view of the loss which we have sustained, we should fittingly recognize her many virtues. Therefore be it,

Resolved by the Maple Grove Grange that while we deeply mourn the loss of our sister we should bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, knowing full well that our loss is his eternal gain. Be it further,

Resolved, that by her death we have lost a true and faithful member, one who has been ever ready to extend a helping hand and words of cheer and comfort.

Resolved, that to the sorrowing family we should extend our sincere sympathy in this their hour of bereavement, and would commend them for consolation to Him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, that Maple Grove Grange No. 1255 drape its charter in mourning for a period of thirty days, that the secretary be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased, and that they be spread upon our records in memory of a sister whose loss we so deeply mourn, and that these resolutions be printed in the Charlevoix COURIER as a token of respect.

PREPARE TO BE COUNTED

dition for every group of 1,000 names enumerated. This would mean that the supervisor in a city of 500,000 inhabitants would be paid $1,500 and $5.50 additional, or $2,000 in all.

The actual work of making the count of the people will be done by enumerators and each city and county in the country for the purpose of the count will be divided into small districts, with an enumerator in charge of each. The pay of the enumerators will be fixed by the director of the census in Washington, and will be graded. In what is known as class one the pay of the enumerator will be from two to four cents for every inhabitant whose name he returns; 20 to 30 cents for each farm; 10 cents for each barn containing live stock, when not located on a farm, and from 20 to 30 cents for each establishment of productive industry.

In what will be known as class two, the pay of the enumerator will be from $1 to $2 a day, one to three cents a name of inhabitants, and from 15 to 20 cents for each farm or establishment of productive industry which he reports.

The enumerator in class three, or the settled district, will be paid from $3 to $6 a day, according to circumstances.

There will be a census "school" in every city of the country some time during the fall or winter. All of the assistants to the supervisors named for that city will meet with him daily, and, when necessary, an official from the census bureau in Washington will be detailed to instruct the force. The information imparted as the result of these "schools" will be handed down to the enumerators, when appointed. In numerous instances it is likely that a considerable number of the enumerators will be named in time for the purpose of these "schools."

How to Lengthen Life of a Pillowcase.

Every housewife knows how soon pillowcases wear out, but it took a remarkably clever woman to see at a glance how she could prolong their lives. When her pillowcases are beginning to show signs of wear she takes out the seam at the bottom of the case and turns it round, so that the side seams come directly up in the middle. Then she resews the bottom. It is easy to see that this will bring the side of the pillow under the head, where the wear would come, so the pillowcase will last longer. A better idea could not be found, and who minds sewing up a pillowcase seam?

How to Wash Silk Gloves.

Silk gloves should be washed in warm water and with pure white soap and should then be rinsed in several clear waters of the same temperature. Then, instead of hanging them up to dry by the wrists, hang them up by the tips of the fingers. To do this pin each finger out on a cloth and hang up the cloth with the arms of the gloves hanging down. This lets the water run into the parts of the gloves that receive the least wear and lets the tips, which receive the most wear, dry the quickest.

HER PICTURE CARD.

It Brought About an Understanding Between the Lovers.

By ANNETTE DUMOIS.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

"It's kind of lonesome since pa died, but I can't seem to make up my mind to Silas some way."

The speaker had a worried look in her bright blue eyes as she dropped a fresh batch of doughnuts into the frying pan, saying, "Just six an' no more say I, an' then they won't soak fat."

"Your doughnuts certainly do come out just right, Sophrony," said the little dressmaker as she snapped her thread with a twist of her finger. "Seems as if I could not work half so fast since I got these store teeth an' can't bite off my thread any more. Silas is forehanded an' well to do, though he ain't as handsome as some."

"Oh, I don't mind red hair myself," replied Sophrony amiably, "but"—

"It's time you was gettin' settled," persisted the dressmaker. "You never was cut out for an old maid."

She eyed Sophrony's comfortable curves with appreciation. "Let's see—you're thirty, come August. You was born the day our Betsy had them twin calves—dretful cute little critters they was. One had a white ring around his eye. Now, if you was little an' skimpy, like me, you'd be a proper old maid."

Her black eyes twinkled behind the gold bowed specs as she continued: "I ain't never felt the loss of a man yet. He'd be sure to want the racker just when Marcus Aurelius had to hev it." (Marcus was the spoiled Angora.) "I calkerlate I've had two chances, though leastwise one of 'em was an out an' outer; the other was a seafarin' man, so I don't know. No, Sophrony; I've ate two already," declining the tempting circles, "but I might take a drop more tea. Too bad Sam Jenkins got stove up so," she said, with a sharp side glance at the girl.

She gave a satisfied nod as the rich red flamed in Sophrony's cheeks. "Who'd 'a' thought that plow would strike dynamite in his old ten acre lot? Nobody knows how it came there, neither. He was such a likely young feller an' dretful handsome"—

"His face ain't hurt none," interrupted Sophrony, rattling the stove covers aimlessly.

"They say when he gets them new-fangled legs with joints he'll be as good as new, barrin' his three fingers. Lucky 'twas the left hand, say I. Didn't he ester come over here a lot?" questioned Miss Perkins.

"Yes, for quite a spell." Sophrony turned around and allowed the tears to roll over her plump cheeks without any pretense. "That's why I can't make up my mind to Silas, I guess. But a woman can do nothin', an' Sam's sort of backward."

"My grief, I should say so—when a man couldn't get up spunk to ask a girl till she's most thirty!"

"He knew I wouldn't leave pa," excused Sophrony. "I went over to inquire, but Mary Jane said he wouldn't let anybody inside the house."

"You don't say!" exclaimed the dressmaker. "I kind of mistrusted how things was," she sympathized. "But he's jest sensitive, that's what. Likely he says to himself, 'I ain't got no right to ask any woman to tie up to a one legger.'"

"I'd rather have Sam with one leg than any other body with two," half sobbed Sophrony. "Oh, Miss Perkins, it does me a sight of good to speak out! I've just been bottled up till it seems as if I should burst."

"There, there, Sophrony; you jest think real hard that things is gola' to come out right, an' they're bound to. I've been readin' some of the new thought papers lately, an' there's a heap o' comfort in 'em. Why don't you send him a picture card?" she asked suddenly.

"Mebbe I might," said the girl doubtfully.

"You jest send him a pritty one, an' we'll see," said the little dressmaker as she put on her modified "Merry Widow."

"Some way I feel a heap better than when you came, Miss Perkins. Everybody says you're the village comfort, anyway," said Sophrony. "I wish I had your pompadour. You keep your hair wonderful, well," gazing admiringly at the wavy gray hair.

"Nonsense!" with a pleased flush, however. "The Perkinses all have good heads o' hair. Runs in some families, I guess."

"I know just what she'll pick out," soliloquized the spinster on her way home, "somethin' with hearts an' a pagoda with doves in it. That ain't what a man wants who's all stove up an' got the grumps. I will! I vum!" The little dressmaker retraced her steps to the village "emporium," where she carefully scanned the stock of cards. Finally her eye lighted on the picture of the "Ministering Angel." "It's jest the ticket," she chuckled. On a flowery couch reclined a young man, and a young woman was offering him a plate of most impossible looking fruit with an air of tender solicitude. The motto read:

I fain would soothe thy wearied hours
With all a woman's powers.
'Tis woman's place to serve and wait
Upon a loving mate.

Miss Perkins wrote something on the card and firmly affixed a one cent stamp.

"There; I guess that'll sel him to thinkin' anyway."

After tea Sophrony sat by the window knitting in the dusk when she saw Mary Jane going into a neighbor's.

"She won't get away from there for an hour. Miss Parks is an everlastin' talker," commented Sophrony. "I've a half mind to run over an' inquire, just neighborly like. He might be in the sittin' room with Lonisy."

With fast beating heart the girl whipped her best pink shawl around her and started out. Sure enough, Sam was in the easy chair with his crutches on the floor beside him, and Lonisy, his twelve-year-old sister, was doing sums. Sophrony could see them through the window as she tiptoed up the gravel path.

"Come in, Sophrony!" shouted the young man as he caught the sound of her voice in the hallway.

"My," whispered Lonisy, "he ain't seen nobody since he was hurt!"

Sophrony trembled, but said cheerily, "Hello, Sam!" in her usual fashion. As Lonisy disappeared after a pitcher of cider in hospitable manner Sam leaned forward with a nervous flush on his thin face as he asked hurriedly, "Sophrony, did you send me a picture card?"

"Mebbe I did an' mebbe I didn't," answered the girl nervously, laughing and blushing.

"Don't fool, Sophrony. Quit it. Did you?"

"Yes, Sam," she replied, sobered up by his earnestness.

"Did you mean it?" he demanded.

Sophrony looked bewildered. What was the motto? She could not remember. She had just picked out a "pretty" one, as the dressmaker had surmised. It would do no harm to say "Yes" anyway.

"Did you, Sophrony?" he persisted. "Would you put up with a man who has only one leg?"

"Indeed, I would if it 'twas you, Sam," replied Sophrony honestly.

"Come over here, my girl," entreated Sam, holding out his arms longingly. All his shyness seemed to have disappeared.

Sophrony went and knelt beside his chair, and as his arms closed around her Sam said, "If it hadn't been for this blessed card"—he pulled it out of his breast pocket—"I'd never have had the courage to ask you."

Sophrony caught her breath sharply as she looked at it. "Oh, Sam," then she hesitated, "I never sent that one, but," she added hastily as she read the verse, "I would have if I'd seen it. I think it's just lovely."

Sam drew the pretty, blushing face against his shoulder again. "Well, it's all right, then. But, see, here are your initials down in the corner. Who do you suppose sent it?"

"It's that blessed little dressmaker," said Sophrony, with a flash of comprehension.

"Land o' Goshen! I guess there'll be a weddin' in this family 'fore long—techee," giggled Lonisy from the doorway, almost dropping the pitcher of cider in her excitement.

"I just guess there will," replied Sam masterfully.

Waked Them Up.

It is related of an eccentric chaplain to a foreign court that he became so annoyed in consequence of his audience, or, rather, congregation, making a practice of going to sleep during his sermons that he resorted to the following "awakening" expedient. In the midst of one of his sermons he drew forth a harmonicon from his pocket and began to play. The one or two who were still awake, astonished to see such a performance in a pulpit, awoke those who slept, and pretty soon everybody was lively as well as being filled with wonder. This was the preacher's opportunity, for he at once commenced a most severe castigatory discourse, in the course of which he said, "When I announce to you sacred and important truths you are not ashamed to go to sleep, but when I play the fool you are all eye and ear."

No One to Run It.

The agent had dwelt eloquently and at some length upon the superior merits of the heater he was trying to introduce into the homes of Saymouth, but the woman at the door had looked thoughtfully into the distance, away from his compelling eyes, as she listened.

"Why," said the agent at last, "a child could run that heater."

"We have no children," said the woman conclusively as she shut the door and locked it.—Youth's Companion.

A NEAR TRAGEDY

Occurred on Torch Lake Tuesday of Last Week

By Accident to Launch Owned by James Cameron on Central Lake.

A very narrow escape from what might have been a terrible tragedy occurred on Torch Lake Tuesday evening, when gasoline from a leaking tank exploded in James Cameron's launch which was taken over Monday from Central Lake.

Mr. Allen Cameron was in charge of the launch, and the party on board included Mrs. Edith Jones and young child and Mrs. John Russell and baby beside five or six young ladies, members of a camping party on the lake.

The launch was pushed from shore and drifted a distance of several rods from shore while Mr. Cameron was endeavoring to start the engine. The launch was in about six feet of water when the explosion came, the launch immediately catching fire. All members of the party, at once leaped into the lake, and only by dint of extraordinary exertions were they able to scramble ashore all safe. Three of the young ladies were able to swim and assist the others, one of the infants went under twice before it could be rescued.

The boat despite futile efforts to sink her was burned to the waters edge, rendering the hull practically a total loss.

The launch was a large one, and considered one of the best in those waters. No doubt the leak was caused in some manner, during the transportation of the boat by wagon from Intermediate to Torch Lake. This is the first accident of this nature this season, and its fortunate outcome is a source of congratulation to all concerned, notwithstanding the loss of the boat.

Did County Clerk Walters of Grand Traverse

Was an Interested Visitor to Boy City on Election Day.

Among the distinguished visitors to Boy City Wednesday was County Clerk Robert E. Walters of Grand Traverse county. Mr. Walters, who is not yet in the prime of life, is serving his fifth term as clerk of his county, which is a fine tribute to his ability as a public official. A veteran of the Spanish—American War, as a member of the 34th. Michigan Infantry, he is said by his friends to have a war record equal to that of Colonel Roosevelt, and seeing the tents pitched at Boy City aroused in his memory the days when he occupied a tent when following the flag.

Mr. Walters is a prominent granger and promises to do his share in making it interesting for the five hundred Charlevoix patrons when they go to Traverse next winter.

GREAT LOTTERY FOR LANDS

Will be Drawn at Couer d'Alene Next Monday

700,000 ACRES IS THE STAKE

Three Hundred Thousand Applications are Registered

Since Midnight of July 15—Lands are Situated in Idaho, Washington and Montana—Some Valuable Timber

A dispatch from Spokane, Washington says: "When little Harriet Post, of Spokane; Helen Hamilton, of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, and Christina M. Dolin, of Missoula, Mont., formally appointed by James W. Witten, superintendent in charge, are led upon the platform at Couer d'Alene the morning of August 9 to make drawings of 700,000 acres of Indian lands in eastern Washington, northern Idaho and western Montana, it is expected that fully 300,000 applications will have been registered in person or by proxy, the latter being for war veterans.

Registration started off lively at Coeur d'Alene, Missoula, Kalispell and Spokane a few moments after midnight on July 15, and so great has been the rush since then that more than 600 public notaries, assisted by from 1,000 to 1,200 clerks, have been kept literally on the jump, with the result they are reaping a harvest of silver in the shape of 25-cent fees. The majority of the notaries are exempting former soldiers and sailors, but as it is they stand to receive between $70,000 and $73,000 for their work during the 19 days.

Judge Witten estimates that 100,000 persons will register in Spokane between now and August 5, with 150,000 at Coeur d'Alene and 50,000 at Missoula and Kalispell, adding that practically every state and territory in the union and most of the provinces in the Dominion of Canada will be represented. The applicants coming from Canada of course are citizens of the United States.

The government is exercising its power to eliminate speculators and so called soldiers of fortune, and every applicant is compelled to declare under oath that he intends to make his future home on the land. Violators will be prosecuted for perjury in all cases where the department receives sufficient facts to warrant making arrests. Judge Witten announced, adding also that if the experience at former openings may be taken as a criterion, not more than 40 per cent of the fortunate ones will take advantage of Uncle Sam's bounty. However, locators and others who have gone over the three reservations say that not 5 per cent of those drawing lands will let their chances to own 160 acres slip by, this time, as practically all of the land is adapted to grain, fruit and hay crops.

Three thousand homesteads are contained in the areas to be disposed of at the drawing. Because of the heavy filing the chance of becoming the possessor of a quarter section of agricultural timber for grazing lands is reduced to about one in a hundred. It will be worth while for the lucky ones, as best quarter sections in the white pine belt of northern Idaho will cut 5,000,000 feet of saw timber, worth from $3.75 to $4 a thousand feet on the stump.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION

The regular examination will be held in the high school building in the City of Charlevoix on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, August 12, 13 and 14, beginning at 8:30 a. m. standard time.

The examination in reading will be based on "Legend of Sleepy Hollow," "Westminister Abbey" and "Rip Van Winkle" taken from Irving's Sketch Book.

Certificates of grades will be issued from this examination. Applicants wishing their paper sent to other counties will write with pen, others may write with pencil.

All applicants will be supplied with paper.

BLANCHARD—STOWE

A Former Charlevoix Boy Married at Chicago Wednesday

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, 1009 W. 63d. Street Chicago, when Pierce W. Blanchard and Miss Metta Stowe were united in holy matrimony, Wednesday at 8:30.

It being a private wedding only the immediate families were present. Those from out of Chicago were Mrs. Orton VanDusen and son, Oscar, from Charlevoix, sister of the groom, and Mrs. Phil Norweiler, of Evansville Indiana, aunt of the bride.

Herman Werth was groomsman and Miss Clara Blanchard bridesmaid and Mrs. Orton VanDusen matron of honor. The bride was beautifully gowned in light blue silk mull and carried a lovely bouquet of bridal roses. The bridesmaid wore blue silk messelaine and carried white and pink roses.

The home and table were beautifully decorated with caraations and roses.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. McKay with the ring ceremony. After the ceremony a lovely supper was served and a general good time was enjoyed after which the bride and groom spent the night at the home of the groom's parents Mr. and Mrs. Chester Blanchard of 3213 South Halstead street, next morning taking the boat for South Haven to spend their honeymoon.

DROWNED IN PINE LAKE

Bertram Roof of Boyne City was Friday.

While in Swimming Waded Beyond His Depth.

Another victim has been claimed by the waters of Pine Lake. Again it is a bright young boy who loses his life in the treacherous waters.

Friday forenoon, with a couple of companions, Bertram Roof, the twelve year old son of James Roof, living in the northern part of the city, went to the lake near his home for a swim. They chose the old saw mill dock near the Beulah Home and were enjoying themselves splashing in the water when Bertram, holding on to the hand of one of the boys, waded out into deeper water. Suddenly the same thing happened that has often occurred with dreadful results, he walked off over the edge of the bank into deep water. The lad was unable to swim and was borne down the steep bank into the icy depths. His comrades were badly frightened but hastily gave the alarm. Among those who responded were Mr. Swift of the Beulah Home and a crowd of his boys. Both Swift and the boys dove repeatedly into the deep water trying to locate the body, working desperately for half an hour. Wm. Laughlin with a fish spear finally located and brought it to the surface some distance from where he went down. The body was found about thirty feet from shore and in twelve feet of water. Mr. Swift and others went heroically at work to try to bring the boy back to life and were using artificial respiration means vigorously when Drs. Boice and Marshall reached the place. They continued the work, using all known methods for an hour and a half, but to no avail. The body had been too long in the water and the physicians desisted only after it was evident that their work was of no avail.

Expert Rowe Says Charlevoix Land was Made for Fruit

Northern Michigan Cherries and Potatoes have World Wide Reputation and are Eagerly Sought for by Buyers

The fruit production of the twelve counties embraced by the Western Michigan Developement bureau will be generously exhibited at the big land and irrigation exposition to be held in November in Chicago.

Mr. Rowe, who will have charge of the exhibit, has just returned from Chicago, where he had a conference with the manager of the exposition which is to be held in the great Coliseum building. Mr. Rowe states that the very satisfactory space of 23x43 feet has been assigned to the bureau upon the main floor of the Coliseum building, also 500 square feet in the gallery.

Mr. Rowe will devote his entire time to the collecting of Western Michigan products for the exposition and he declares that Michigan's display will be fully equal to any other state in the union and superior to a great many. He has elaborate plans which will be very attractive and effective when completed. Mr. Rowe is enthusiastic over the fruit growing possibilities of this region and when it comes down to producing fruit with a quality he says that the western states are not in it with Charlevoix county. He pointed to many natural advantages for fruit growing in this section. Also he said the land was far superior to the land in a great many sections in the state where it sold for three or four times the value at which land is held here. He says that Northern Michigan cherries have a great reputation in the Chicago Market; that Northern Michigan potatoes are known all over the United States; that the soil, while some of it is light, contains nearly all of the important factors that go to make a good dirt for producing both vegetables and fruit; that with just a little study and possibly the addition of some nourishment to the poorest kind of soil the same can be made to produce the finest kinds of small fruits and garden truck.

Northern Michigan is naturally the home of the smaller fruits. Blackberries, raspberries, currants and in fact all kinds of berries grow here naturally. He states that if one desires vines that will stand the coldest weather that it would be well for the farmers to set out what is known as the "black-cap" raspberries. Berries bear fruit the second year so that an investment in small fruits will soon pay dividends. He suggests that it would be well to sow crimson clover on most of the land and plow the same under after it is in bloom. This, he claims, is the best kind of fertilizer.

In Grand Rapids a few days ago, The Traverse City Record says: he was discussing the cherry situation with Howard Thomas, the head of the Thomas Canning Company, who was deploring the fact that he was short 10,000 bushels of cherries to fill his orders. Mr. Rowe suggested Traverse City as a good point to purchase, and upon his suggestion Mr. Thomas sent a representative into that locality to make a tour of the peninsula and the fruit farms surrounding the city, and as a consequence he made large purchases. Where cherries will bring 90 cents to $1 per crate straight, superior quality lead the Thomas Canning company representative to advance the rate to $1.25 per case, stating that his company could well afford to pay the price in order to secure what they desired.

The direct consequence of this instance was $1200 value to the growers of that section by the Thomas company's representative paying the advance price, and after this, the advance price necessarily paid by other buyers, and the saving to the growers of that section will reach the approximate sum of $5,000.

This is direct evidence where the publicity work of the Western Michigan Development bureau brings direct and visible results.

GAME FOR TRAVELERS.

"By the Way" Will Amuse Grown Folks as Well as Children.

This game is a great deal of fun and can be played by children of all ages when traveling by car, automobile or carriage. The one who first sees an object wins a number of points. The score is kept by one player. The party should be divided into two sections, the left side of the road being assigned to one section and the right side to the other section. The counts are as follows (these may be changed to suit the particular part of the country you are in):

	Count.
A baby in arms	1
A baby in a gocart	3
A white horse	5
A ladder against a house	2
A woman with white apron	1
A butcher's cart	1
A postman	4
A bridge	5
A red headed girl or man	3
A messenger boy	2
A man with a camera	3
A black pig	5
A white house	1
A boy on a fence	4
A brook	2

If any of the following are seen the score is to be lessened by its count. Sides try to catch each other on these Lose.

A pug dog	2
An open gate	2
A piebald horse	4
A flock of sheep	3
A soldier	10

No matter what the score is, whichever side sees a cat on a window ledge or a pig standing on its hind feet wins the game.

WITH SCISSORS AND CORD.

A Trick That Can Be Easily Performed When One Knows How.

A piece of strong cord is doubled and fastened to a pair of scissors with a slip knot, as shown in Fig. 1. After passing the ends of the cord through the thumb hole of the scissors they are tied fast to a chair, doorknob or any other object that may be of sufficient size to make the ends secure.

Fig. 1 Fig. 2

HOW THE SCISSORS ARE REMOVED.

The trick is to release the scissors without cutting the cord.

Take hold of the loop end of the cord in the lower handle and draw it first through the upper handle and then completely over the blades of the scissors, as shown in Fig. 2. This is very simple when you know how, but puzzling when the trick is first seen.—Popular Mechanics.

What Is My Thought Like?

One of the players in this game thinks of some object—it may be a person, an animal or a thing—and each player is questioned by the "thinker." "What is my thought like?" and must make an answer, "Like a monkey," "Like a table," "Like a fish," "Like a mischievous boy," and so on. When all have answered the "thinker" tells them the object thought of. Perhaps it was a person present. Each player must then justify his reply or, failing this, pay a penalty.

For instance, the one who said the object was like a monkey when told the nature of a gentleman present as the object would reply, "I said Mr. —— was like a monkey because he is fond of nuts." The next would say, "I said Mr. —— was like a table because he is rather wooden looking." He is like a fish because he is fond of the water," and so on.

Game of Neighbors.

In this game half the company are blindfolded and are seated with an empty chair on the right hand of each. At a given signal all the other players occupy these as mysteriously as they can and immediately begin to sing, either all to a tune played on the piano or every one by himself.

The object of the blind players is to find out, entirely by ear, who is seated on their right. Those who guess correctly are unhandcuffed, and their places are taken by the players whose names they guessed. The others remain blindfolded until they guess rightly. Only one guess is allowed each round.

P's and Q's.

The company forms a circle, and one stands in the center as questioner. No one may name a place beginning with a letter that comes before "Q" in the alphabet.

The leader may begin in this fashion: "Commodore Evans is in the strait of Magellan with the fleet. Where is he going next? But mind your I"s and Q's." The unthinking speaker may say "To Chile," for which a forfeit must be paid, as C is before Q in the alphabet, and so the game goes on. Any country or incident may be used in asking the questions.

The Way to June.

It is through the glade that the ice has made
And under the glistening trees
Beyond the snow, where the cold winds blow
Through the cave of the old March breeze,
Then down the lane of the April rain
Under violet scented showers
And off by way of the hills of May
With their apple blossom flowers,
Then on again through a leafy glen still,
With the bird songs all attune,
Where you rest awhile, at the rose-bush,
For you've found the way to June.

HOLLAND'S "ORANGE BUD."

Little Princess Juliana's Start In the World.

Princess Juliann, the "Dutch baby," as she is universally known, is almost a month old, and every one still speaks well of her. The "Orange Bud," as her own people delight in calling her, has, like most babies, blue eyes and fair hair, and, although Prince Henry, her father, is reported to have exclaimed, "Only a girl!" the queen, her mother, greeted the announcement of the child's sex with a smile.

Juliann is not a common name in Holland, and practically every one expected as a matter of course that the baby would be named after her mother, but the parents preferred to give her as first name that of one of her most illustrious ancestresses. Juliana, countess of Stolberg, wife of William of Nassau-Dillenburg, was the mother of the five brothers, William the Silent among them, who helped to free Holland from the Spanish yoke. The baby's other names are Louise Emma Marie Wilhelmina, the first after Louise de Coligny, William the Silent's fourth wife, who, like Juliana of Stolberg, is noted in Dutch history for her piety and charity. The next two are the names of the grandmothers.

The Dutch custom of distributing muisjes, or caraway candies, on buttered biscuits was not neglected at court. Every one in any way connected with the court was presented with a bag of the little sweets with biscuits inclosed, the whole being put up in a bag of the national colors, red, white and blue, tied with an orange ribbon.

An enterprising Dutch astrologer cast the horoscope of the little princess twenty minutes after her birth. This is what he says: "Princess Juliana will be trustworthy, honorable and prudent in word and deed. She will possess great power of will, which, however, will not be uselessly employed. She will be sympathetic and philanthropic and will work disinterestedly and quietly for others without desire for reward, but seeking perfection in all things. The princess will also follow art and science and will have a special talent for music and poetry. Companionable and eloquent of speech, she will possess the knack of getting on well with all sorts of people."

A CLEVER ADAPTATION.

Jap Tradesmen Have "Caught on" to the Peach Basket Hat.

The subjects of the mikado know the secret of effective decoration in the home, and something of the charm that is associated with their housekeeping may be imparted by the introduction of articles of Japanese origin for service and ornament into the American home. The selection here made is particularly adapted to the country home, the fright colorings finding appropriate with the tastings of summer days.

Reference is made to the doll seen in the sketch, which illustrates Japanese quickness and sense of humor. The small peach basket that has furnished news paper writers and cartoonists with topics and subjects innumerable. All of this fun poking has not been lost on the stolid Japanese. It would seem, for the original of the doll here sketched was conspicuously displayed recently in a big Japanese shop, and it may be noted that the wastebasket that serves her for a hat is decorated in a style that can hardly be matched by the most extravagant production of the American milliner.

A Dainty Pincushion.

A charming little pincushion for baby's table is fashioned to look like a baby shoe or bootee with the cushion fitted into it. It can be made of white, pale blue or pink canvas, the cushion to be of silk in the same color and the lacing of the shoe in bebe ribbon to match.

Any worn out shoe can be ripped apart and used as a pattern. Where only one is the only model available it will be necessary to cut the new good larger, while following the general outline, as the cushion should not be too small.

Slazour Dressing Robe.

Challis is one of the best materials for making a little dressing robe when traveling on a sleeper. It can be made as roomy and comfortable as a wrapper, with all the appearance of a pretty dress. Select a bordered effect—tan with a brown border or white with blue. The corals with oriental borders are handsome, and you can find dark colors that are as handsome as the very best figured materials on the market.

Elsie was duly aware of the hesitancy of the expedition's leader, but she was not sorry. It was in strong hands. Suarez, too, plucked a stout branch and passed a turn around it.

"Now, silence and listen!" said Gray. They soon detected a curiously subdued clamor from the inner recesses of the cleft. At first almost indistinguishable, it gradually assumed the peculiar attribute of tumultuous volumes of distant sound and filled the whole valley with confusion of all noise. It was like nothing any of them had heard before. Yet it recalled the roar of a hotel lobby at eight o'clock, and again its strange unity was lost in the memories of a river in flood. But the dominant note was the ear-splitting noise of innumerable millstones. Here were there all. Even the dog was afraid.

"Guess we'd best up just in time," exclaimed Gray, feeling the need of speech. A little sob answered him. Elsie was beginning to realize the sheer hopelessness of her undertaking.

"Now, cheer up, Miss Maxwell," said he. "All the water that is going in must come out by the same road. At the worst we can skate back the way we came and take our chance. But it will soon be broad daylight, and I'll answer for it that if Captain Courtenay is yet alive, he is not between us and the mouth of the inlet or he would have contrived some sort of racket to let us know his whereabouts. Now, I propose that our friend in the bows be asked to shin up the cliff and prospect a bit. He ought to know how to crawl through this undergrowth. Fifty feet higher he will be able to see some distance."

Suarez was very reluctant to leave the boat, but the American adopted a short cut in the argument, offering him the alternative of climbing ashore, or of being thrown overboard.

So the Argentine adopted the less hazardous method and climbed to the bank. A splash and a scramble and a slight exclamation from Elsie told that the dog had followed. Soon the swish of leaves and the crackling of rotten wood ceased. Suarez might be out of earshot or merely hiding for a time, intending to return with news of an impassable precipice. There was a crumb of comfort in the absence of the terrier. Joey would either go on or come back to them at once.

Gray felt that the girl was too heartbroken to talk. He listened to the rhythmical chorus of flat witches' caldron in the heart of the defile and watched the gray light slowly etching a path through the trees until it touched the fast running water with a shimmer of silver.

Neither of them knew how long they remained there. At last a straining and creaking of the boat warned them that the water level was rising and the ropes needed readjusting. It was now possible to see that Elsie had made fast to a fallen tree. Its branches were locked among the gnarled roots of the lowermost growth above high water mark. Already there was a distinct lessening in the pace of the current, and Gray fancied that the distant rumble was softer. It would not be many minutes before the neighboring rocks were covered. High tide he knew was at 3:15 a. m. He forbore to look at his watch lest the girl should note his action. That would imply the utter abandonment of hope.

It might be that his mind was too taken up with the weird influences of the hour or that Elsie's senses were strung to a supernatural pitch. Be that as it may, it was she who sprang to her feet, all aquiver with agitation.

"Do you hear?" she whispered, and her hand clutched Gray's shoulder with an energy which set his heart beating high. He did not answer. He had heard no unusual sound, but he was not without faith in her.

"There!" she panted again. "Some one is hailing. Some one cried 'Elsie.' I am sure of it."

"Guess you'd better foot 'Arthur' on the off chance," said Gray.

Almost the last thing she remembered was the sound of her own wild scream. There came back to her a stronger shout and the bark of a dog. She had a blurred consciousness of a whole troop of men scrambling down the choked ravine, of glad questions and joyous answers, of a delirious dog leaping on board and yelping staccato assurances that everything was all right in a most wonderful world. Then she found herself in Courtenay's arms and heard him say in a rapture of delight:

"I owe my life to you, dear heart. That is the wonder of it. No need to tell me you ran away from the ship. I know. One kiss, Elsie, then full speed ahead for the Kansas. By the Lord, to think of it—you here, at the very gate of the inferno! Well, one more kiss! Yes, it is I, none other, and lit as a fiddle. Never got a scratch. There, now; I really must see the crew. We must be ready for the turn of the tide."

CHAPTER XIX

THE events of the next hour were shadowy as the dawn to Elsie. She knew that her lover placed men in each of the canoes, that the lifeboat itself was crowded and that it began the seaward journey after the others had started.

They shot out of the twilight into the shimmering glory of the open bay and never a savage host disturbed the solitude. Some of the Araucos had dragged up a couple of canoes from the beach, the two and raced off towards the village, others had forced their way past the vessel to the bay, where it lay. Here was the shore on the Araucanian side by which they kept, while the lifeboat towed by the force arrived [illegible].

They emerged into the [illegible] bay. The [illegible] were [illegible] the [illegible] ash [illegible] the [illegible] of a [illegible] boy was gazing at Suarez with [illegible] eyes, which as they [illegible] the shore.

"Gee! [illegible] the happy little [illegible] half sob, with which Elsie announced her discovery of the lady in the case.

"We owe a lot to that young person," he said. "None of us could make out a word she uttered when first we saw her. She loses what small amount of Spanish she can speak when she becomes excited, and it was sheer good fortune that some of the crew were with her when she swung herself down the side of the cliff to warn us of our danger; otherwise she might have been shot. I suppose Suarez told you what to expect?"

"You might as well be talking Alarabic of yourself for all I can follow what you are saying," murmured Elsie happily.

Whereupon Courtenay took thought and explained that the channel which flowed through that amazing cut in the cliff led to the crater of an extinct volcano, into which the sea poured twenty feet of water each tide. An almost everlasting maelstrom raged within, as the water entered by a sidelong channel and sent a whirlpool spinning with the hands of the clock until the enormous cistern was full and against them until it was empty. The sailors had taken refuge on a wide, sulphur coated ledge high above the vortex, and the presence of several skeletons showed that many an unfortunate had sought a last shelter there against pursuit. Every Araucanian knew of this retreat, but few dared approach it, as the roar of the water far below appalled them. There was only one path. When the hunters closed that their prey was safe. The alternative to capture was death by starvation. The Chileans and he himself during the past fourteen hours had subsisted on a bag of dried berries stolen by the girl when she first led the sailors thither.

"Didn't you see how eager we all were to search the lockers?" he asked. "But the rascals had cleared every scrap when the boat fell into their hands again with the falling tide."

She nestled close to him.

"I saw nothing," she whispered. "My mind held but one thought—that you were alive, though indeed I was mourning you as dead. But now I am restored to my senses. I think I can grasp what happened. Did Joey find you?"

"Yes. You can guess my bewilderment when he sprang on top of me. I was lying down. I heard our scarifies shouting, but paid no heed. As a matter of fact, Elsie, I, too, had abandoned hope. I could see no chance of escape. Great heaven—to think of you rowing to my rescue! What made you do it?"

"Please go on. Tell me all. You shall hear my story afterward."

"Well, I jumped up, and Joey nearly fell into the crater with delight. I was just in time to save Suarez from being shot. Luckily, he was a long way behind the dog, and I recognized his makeup."

Though Courtenay did not allow ten seconds to pass without a glance at the charming face by his side, he nevertheless had a sharp eye for events elsewhere. He saw smoke rising from the funnel of the ship. A line of flags dancing from the foremast told him that Boyle had discovered them as soon as they were clear of the deep shadow of Guanaco hill. But there were anxious moments yet in store. A fleet of canoes put off from Otter creek. There was every prospect of a fight before they reached their fortress. They had a long two miles to travel, and the Indians could attack them ere they covered half the distance.

A long blare from the ship's siren thrilled their hearts, but the excitement became frantic when three short, sharp blasts followed, and every sailor knew that the chief officer had signaled, "My engines are going full speed astern."

That was a pardonable exaggeration, but the Kansas was certainly moving. They could see the white foam churned up by her propeller. With one accord they cheered madly, and the oars, double handed now, bore the lifeboat onward at a pace which outstripped even the shallow canoes.

Then the Indians did a wise thing. They spared many of their own lives and perchance others of greater value to the world by ceasing to paddle. The unlooked for interference of the great vessel was too much for them. They merely stared and cackled in amaze, while the small Patria dashed on to the lowering black hull, and Boyle lowered the gangway in readiness to receive the captain, his bride elect and a good half of the passengers and crew.

Courtenay lost not an instant of favoring tide and fine weather. When Boyle told him that Walker could work the engines under easy steam, he dashed up to the bridge three steps at a time. With his hand on the telegraph he superintended the hoisting on board of the lifeboat and two of the canoes, which he meant to carry away as trophies. To be sure that Elsie's own special craft was one of them. Meanwhile Boyle saw to the safe stowing in the remaining canoes of the wounded Indians in the fore cabin, and a few insurance bars secured them to the deckhouse, whence their friends could fetch them to shore, etc.

IN last week's COURIER we stated, on the authority of well known residents, that corn—the king of crops—could not be successfully produced in this section. We might as well confess that we were unconvinced when we made the statement, having in mind the splendid crops of corn which we saw last season, but, with the object of stirring our farmers up and causing them to let the world know what Charlevoix soil will do, we sent the statement forth on its mission. Our object was accomplished and we have been informed that Charlevoix county can and does produce one hundred bushels of ear corn to the acre. Another thing not generally known is that several of our farmers are making a success in growing alfalfa. E. W. Coulter has cut his second crop this season and will soon cut a third. With a soil that will produce corn and alfalfa in abundance, why not keep more stock and add to the fertility of that soil is the question we ask this week. Please send in your answers.

One night last week while coming in from Boy City in Mr. Ward's auto E. B. Ward and Fred Brown found a pole thickly filled with nails laid squarely across the road. Fortunately the pole was discovered before any damage was done. If not loss of life might have resulted. The placing of such obstructions in the highway, endangering human life, is one of the most serious offenses known to our laws.

Harry Swazey, serving a term in the Petoskey jail on a statutory charge, attempted to escape the first of last week by sawing his way to liberty with a tool made from a case knife. His operations were noticed by another prisoner, who informed the sheriff's wife, Mrs. Jones. At Mrs. Jones' request the other prisoner entered Swazey's cell and by force secured the tools and spoiled Swazey's chances for liberty.—

The fire department was called out for the periodical blaze in the old postoffice building on the corner of Water and Lake streets. This building which is occupied by a restaurant, has caught on fire about half a dozen times during the past two years. The blaze this morning was started from a gasoline stove. The tank was full but fortunately did not explode. The damage was not great.—Boyne City Journal, Monday.

Cland Poquette, age nineteen, living in this city with his mother, met death very mysteriously Wednesday and it is thought that poison mixed in with his food was responsible for the same. He was very fond of cucumbers and would often get one to eat at meals and between meals and it is thought that he was poisoned by paris green which had been used for killing potato bugs and had accidentally got onto them or was poisoned by the cucumbers which are dangerous this hot weather. The mother was suffering from the effects of food poisoning but was not serious. —Boyne Citizen.

To give something of an idea of the magnitude of the cherry industry of the peninsula we give a few figures. Last week Geo. W. Lardie, of Traverse City, bought and shipped a little over 19,000 crates—nineteen carloads. In one day, Sunday, the Manistee & Northeastern Ry took out six carloads. In addition to this the express companies are loading carloads daily, the canning factory at Traverse City and the fruit preserving company at Old Mission are having great quantities, and in addition to all this the local consumption must be taken into account. Progress.

Neighborhood Notes

Pronounced the most successful meeting the State Rural Carriers' association ever held, the eighth annual convention came to a close at noon Wednesday at Big Rapids, with the election of officers and selection of Kalamazoo as the meeting place for 1910.

The officers elected were: President, Nelson W. Matteson, Flint; vice-president, W. F. Johnson, Rodney; secretary, H. E. Crumm, Hillsdale; treasurer, Gordon C. Knowles, Caro.

The executive committee is composed of the officers and C. L. Barnes of Kalamazoo, H. E. Crumm, Hillsdale, John K. Smith of Marshall, and Mr. Davis of Big Rapids, were named as delegates from the state association to the national rural carriers' convention to be held in Rochester, N. Y.

It seems like taking a leaf out of ancient history to read that Mrs. Martha Davis, who is visiting at Traverse City, is a sister of John Brown, the original John Brown, "whose soul goes marching on" in spite of the fact that "his body lies mouldering in the grave," and has done so since the stormier ones of civil war times. Mrs. Davis is a connecting link with the long distant past. She is 77 years of age and is the sole survivor of the family of which her noted brother was one.

It is settled beyond all question the anti-saloon league will make a fight to put Kent county into the local option column. Up to the present no city in the United States the size of Grand Rapids has been placed under prohibition through resort to local option laws. Whether it can be carried is a question, but there are some things that point towards a temperance victory. The saloons have gone on record as favoring the stringent enforcement of the law; Mayor Ellis, a game sport, vetoed a large number of licenses; the council is said to have five prohibitionists in its membership, no licenses are granted a saloonist who has a bad police record; no new men are granted licenses, and about thirty are out of business and there are that many less than last year.

The new barn at the county farm is finished except the painting and the cost has been less than $800. The county furnished all the timber for the barn except the siding or it would not have been possible to build it at that price. The county will be out about $150 because of the fire. The insurance money, $1500, has enabled the building of another barn as mentioned above and will replace the contents with the exception of the $150 above mentioned. There are about 25 inmates at the county house.—Mancelona News.

A meeting of the board of directors of the Citizens' Association was held yesterday afternoon to consider a canning factory proposition that has been presented through the instrumentality of F. P. Brown. The prospects of securing it look favorable. Mr. Brown met with the association, and as he will make a trip shortly into the vicinity of the present location of the parties, he was authorized to see them and invite them to visit Elk Rapids and meet with the association and present their proposition for consideration. The plant is one of the best in the country and has an established market for all the goods it can turn out. A canning factory here would benefit a larger number of people than any other industry we could possibly secure.—Elk Rapids Progress.

The death of Ernest N. Salling at Manistee last week removes one of the most conspicuous figures of the Michigan lumber industry and business world. He had been prominently identified with the lumber business of this section for over thirty years. Salling station at Otsego Lake is named for him. A press dispatch from Manistee says of him:

Ernest N. Salling, sixty-six years old, a type of the Michigan lumberman that worked up from the camps, died at his home in this city Sunday. He was a member of the firm of Salling & Hanson with headquarters at Grayling and agencies in several cities of the state.

Salling came to this country from Denmark in 1860, worked for Potter Palmer in Chicago a few years, then started the lumber business by securing employment in a Michigan camp.

Mrs. Frederick C. Burden and Mrs. Oren S. Hawes, of Detroit; Mrs. Harry W. Kahnmeyer of Flint, and Mrs. Elmer J. Cornwell of Saginaw are the surviving children.

CARE OF THE EYES.

How to Prevent a Strain and Relieve Inflammation by Simple Methods.

Persons who use their eyes constantly should observe some simple rules for preventing strain. For instance, at the end of a long day in an office, if the optics are bathed with a cooling application, the brightness as well as sight may be replenished. For such a bath boracic acid is invaluable. So is a weak solution of salt. Camphor water will draw out a smarting pain many times.

Five cents' worth of boracic acid will last for weeks, and the powder may be carried with little trouble. To use as much as is held on the point of the blade of a small pocketknife put into two tablespoonfuls of water. The powder floats for some time in tiny lumps, but later is absorbed and disappears.

If one has an eyeglass the liquefied borax is poured into it. This glass, which is an oval cup, so shaped that it goes over the eye, close against the skin, is held up, the head bent until the eye is over the liquid, and then the lid is opened and closed in the bath. There will be no smarting sensation, and the under part of the lids and the ball are flushed with a cooling application that will draw out any slight inflammation.

The bath may last for a minute, washing first one eye and then the other eye before returning to give the first another plunge. The same liquid may be used more than once, but so cheap is it that there can be no hesitation in throwing it away. No two persons should ever use the same solution, for serious eye disease may be transmitted in this way. If the eyes ache during the day this treatment, which takes but a moment to apply, will relieve them.

Camphor water, being a little stronger, is used more sparingly and is likely to cause a slight smarting. Nevertheless it is a gentle tonic that can do no harm. To use a couple of drops are put into the eyes by means of a medicine dropper. This may be done two or three times a day when there is such inflammation. Boracic acid dissolved in it in the same proportion as in plain water increases the beneficial properties.

Salt and water is an old fashioned remedy which should be used frequently. This mixture should be strong enough to cause the merest suggestion of a smart, but it must not be painful. If one has no eye cup any small cup or glass may be substituted and the eye winked in the bath. Done morning and night, this is strengthening in effect.

Cloths wrung out in hot water and laid over the eyes form one of the best methods of treatment for inflamed eyes. To take this application one must lie down, so the fomentations may be placed on as hot as can be borne, changing them frequently.

How to Wash Crocheted Articles.

Crocheted and knitted articles can be washed satisfactorily by sewing the articles in a pillow slip and then washing them in warm soapy water. The bag must be squeezed between the hands to make it clean, but it must not be rubbed between the hands. When you think the articles must be clean press all the water that you can out of the bag, but do not wring it. Then hang the bag in the air to drain and when it is perfectly dry rip open the pillowcase, and the article will be found in excellent condition. If the wool article is a baby's carriage blanket or a straight shawl it will be improved by drying it on a flat surface. It may be spread on the table or on the floor if clean papers or a clean cloth is spread on the floor first. The article should be patted until it is perfectly straight and flat and should then be left until it is perfectly dry.

Elephant Ear.

The elephant ear is one of the most striking plants for use in bedding, borders or for clump planting on the lawn. It grows from six to ten feet high, and its large green leaves grow to be three or four feet long and two and one-half feet wide. It has been used with great success in subtropical gardening in the central and southern states. It makes an excellent plant for the margins of aquatic gardens, as it thrives best if given plenty of water.

It grows from tubers, which are best started in pots in sand and grown indoors until June, when they should be planted out in well drained, warm, light soil. A rich soil and frequent waterings with liquid manure will produce excellent results. In the fall all the leaves except the central one should be cut back to within two inches of the crown. Let the plant remain in this condition for a few days to ripen and then take up and store in any cold frost proof place.

These plants have a variety of uses besides ornament. In the Pacific tropics they are made into a drink. The starchy roots are edible and in Japan are used much like our potatoes. The young leaves are also edible when boiled.

"And how did you greet the good news?"

"Got the family together and cheered for eighty-three minutes by a reliable clock."—Washington Herald.

The Ride of Nelson's Jim.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"Here you, Jim! Harness up and take Phoebe over to Sheldon's!" Seth Nelson smiled sardonically at the whitening face of his farm hand. "Git a move on you, now. Phoebe and Owen are going to town this afternoon to buy wedding trimmings. Owen's too busy to come after her, so do you harness up and take her over."

The man bent slowly clenched his big, brown hands, while the veins of his strong neck hardened into cords.

"So—you're going to let her marry that—that—" he panted between his teeth, while the older man leered at him smugly.

"You? Pshaw! It's none of your business. You ain't even to be! This settles and finishes us two! Get to work! When I took you out of the poorhouse I took you to help with the work, and not as a member of the family. Don't you dare to speak your mind to Phoebe till you git to be boss. She's thicker to death to—all him," he added coarsely as he walked away.

Without another word Jim—commonly known as "Nelson's Jim"—walked toward the barn. Presently he drove around to the side entrance of the house where Phoebe Nelson awaited him, shy and fluttering, her delicate cheeks alternately flushing and paling as he helped her into the buggy.

"AND—WELCOME!" HE DRAWLED, WITH A WRY SMILE

"Goodby, ma," she called in a high treble voice, waving her hand at the dining room window.

Mrs. Nelson's motherly face appeared for an instant, clouded with anxiety.

"Take good care of her, Jim!" she called after them.

Jim turned and nodded grimly at her. And then, lips set in a hard, straight line, as if he would repress the speech that had been forbidden him, he flung out his whip with a stinging lash across the mare's flank.

Phoebe uttered a frightened cry.

"Be careful, Jim! You know Bess won't stand the whip, and I'm afraid!" She turned an appealing glance toward him, but his eyes were fixed straight ahead between the pointed ears of the little black mare.

"What's the matter, Jim? You act so queer! I suppose you're mad about Owen and me, but I couldn't help it—pa just settled everything without asking me, and—and—I hate Owen Sheldon! I don't want to marry a widower!" Her voice broke suddenly, but his stern young face did not relax. Still he made no reply.

"Jim! What's the matter?" she cried again.

No reply.

"Oh, dear!" she was crying softly now under the wide brim of her flower trimmed hat. "I don't want to go—you know why, and ma knows, Jim—she likes you best—you're awful mean to make me tell it!"

Nelson's Jim turned tender brown eyes upon the young girl, and the hard lines about his mouth softened. His lips parted for an instant and then shut with a little click of his teeth. They had not yet reached Sheldon's farm.

There was a long silence then. The little black mare plunged bravely through the sand of the shore road and emerged into the highway at a point opposite the long lane of locust trees which led to Sheldon's. At this point Jim again plied his whip, and they flashed past the entrance to the lane and whirled away down the hill toward town with a shimmering stream of golden sand pouring from the tires and settling in their wake.

"Oh, Jim," cried Phoebe, with a frightened gasp. "What are you doing? I'm will kill me, so he will!" And Owen—he's got a terrible temper!" She clutched his arm frantically.

Then Jim spoke.

"I got a terrible temper myself," he said savagely. "I been holding it in for twelve years because I was waiting to grow up, so's I could meet your father on his own ground. He's twitted me with being a 'sylum boy and having no name. I've found out all about it. I ain't no lost heir, Phoebe, but I've got a name. It's Browning. All my folks are dead long ago. I've saved money, and I can take care of you. I'm going to the Baptist preacher's now. Is it all right, Phoebe, or

Phoebe hid her blushing face on his shoulder. "I'll go with you, Jim," she whispered, "and I guess I ain't afraid of pa and Owen after all."

* * * * * * *

Three hours later Nelson's Jim drove through the farm gate with his pale little wife clinging to his arm. Seth Nelson was raging around the yard with a shotgun in one hand, while his wife thrust a frightened face from the kitchen door.

With a quick leap Jim reached the ground and seized the barrel of the weapon as Nelson raised it to his shoulder.

"It ain't loaded, you old fool!" he shouted as he wrested the weapon from the former and hurled it into the wood shed. "As we were going to do, Seth Nelson, if you don't keep a civil tongue in your head before I tell you to, I'll give it you down!"

The old man [illegible] He glared [illegible] rals of [illegible] girl. He [illegible] speak:

"Shet up!" [illegible] law and [illegible] my home! [illegible]

The farmer [illegible]

"My [illegible] Jim on [illegible] my wife! [illegible] —Mrs. [illegible] name is!"

Seth Nelson scowled sullenly at his farm hand.

"If you want to be a father to her and a father-in-law to me, you can't decamp just at first. We have each other and we are married. Put $50 in the bank, and learn the care of her. We'll board here, and I'll work for you—hands is scarce, but you've got to remember we won't be bullied!"

"You—you—you!"—stuttered the farmer wildly, but his son-in-law cut him short with a wave of the hand and climbed into the buggy and turned it around. As they drove toward the gate Nelson strode after them. He cast one look around the barnyard, the unfinished chores, then away across the swelling acres waiting for the mowing machine, and the anger melted into chagrin.

"Say, you, Jim—Browning—you and your wife can board here if you want to," he said reluctantly.

"And—what?" demanded Jim Browning curtly.

Seth Nelson saw the tearful face of his wife in the doorway, and his grim face softened.

"And—welcome!" he replied, with a wry smile.

THE GREEN MORAY.

A Savage and Voracious Eel Found in Bermudian Waters.

The experienced sea fisherman takes care to kill every large conger eel as soon as it is brought into the boat. The conger has not only extraordinary jaw power—it can triturate shellfish, shells and all—but is also so abominably active that the fisherman's opinion of it coincides with that held of the Indian by the western plainsman, "No good conger except dead conger."

Ugly and savage brute as the conger is, it is a lamb compared with its relative, the green moray of Bermudian waters. This great eel is of an unnaturally brilliant green and has an eye which is the very epitome of intense and malignant ferocity. It is voracious and savage beyond words. The negro boatmen have such a holy horror of it that they absolutely refuse to allow a moray into the boat. An acquaintance of the writer, a marine officer, fishing in a small boat off Bermuda, hooked one of these fish, but as soon as his boatman saw the hideous head above the water he whipped out his knife and made to cut the line. The officer shouted to him to stop, but had to threaten to throw the man overboard before he would put up his knife. When the great eel was pulled over the side the negro went absolutely ashy with fright. As for the moray, no sooner was it in the boat than it doubled upon itself, and its jaws met with a clash in its own side, cutting out a chunk of white flesh as neatly as a scoop would cut cheese. That was enough for the officer. He picked up a boathook and forked the uncanny creature overboard.—Chambers' Journal.

A MANUFACTURED CLIMATE.

Methods of the Paris Market Gardeners In Forcing Nature.

The gardeners of Paris get their products on the market weeks before the regular season for them. This forcing of nature is described by Ernest Poole in Success Magazine.

The secret is simply this: The French maraichers have manufactured a climate to suit them. As one observer has said, "They have moved the climate of Monte Carlo up to the suburbs of Paris."

Some new prodigy of modern science, this? Not at all. Only enormous expense in money and in time. The gardens, whenever possible, are placed on land with a slope to the south and are well protected by walls on the north and east, walls built to reflect light as well as to give protection from the northeast winds.

The ground is practically covered with glass, not as in a greenhouse, but by glass frames in the open, "three light" frames of uniform size, 72 by 4½ feet, and also by glass bells. These, too, are of a uniform size, about the shape of a chapel bell, a little less than seventeen inches in diameter and from fourteen to fifteen inches high. The French call them cloches. You may often see over a thousand frames and over 10,000 glass bells in one two-acre plot in the suburbs of Paris.

A more recent innovation is the employment of hot water pipes run under the soil, making of the earth a veritable steam heated hotel, with this essential difference, that the hotel keeper here is desperately eager, not to keep his guests, but to persuade them to leave on the earliest possible day.

A Memorable Wreck.

The most memorable wreck in the history of the American surf was that of the bark Mexico, stranded on Hempstead beach, Long Island, early in the morning of Jan. 3, 1837. She carried 104 passengers and a crew of twelve men. Four passengers and four of the crew were saved by a surfboat from the beach under the command of Raynor Rock Smith. All others were frozen to death, though the wreck was so close to the shore that their cries and even some of their words were plainly heard on the beach. It was the story of this wreck, as published throughout the nation, that led to the establishment of the United States life saving service.—Scrap Book.

WON ON A BLUFF.

The Way One Prosperous Merchant Got His Start In Business.

There is a prosperous merchant in Chicago today who owes his success to his donation of a $5,000 organ to a church at a time when he didn't have money enough to buy a hand organ. This donation was a case of bluff pure and simple, but the bluff worked and resulted in the subsequent wealth of the lucky bluffer.

John Smith was seeking capital to start in business for himself, but as he had no security worth speaking of he could not borrow the money he needed.

When he had tried every person he could think of who would be likely to have the necessary cash and the inclination to lend it and had been turned down, he conceived the idea of presenting his church with an organ.

Young Napoleon John Smith therefore ordered his organ and allowed the future to look out for itself. The manufacturers of the organ never thought of questioning the financial standing of the philanthropist who was handing out $5,000 organs and agreed to have the instrument set up in the church on time.

Of course J. Smith was not a bad that was born to blush unseen, nor did he hide his beneficence under a bushel. He managed to bring in at least the flute stops no matter what the subject of conversation. Not only did the young Napoleon advertise himself by means of the church organ, but the pleased minister and the equally pleased congregation spread the news of his gift.

During this time John did not allow any alfalfa to grow under his feet. On the pretense of consulting some wealthy member of the congregation about some minor details of the organ he would drop into an office and before he left casually would mention the subject of the company that he was forming. Most of the men that he thus saw thought that it would be a good thing to be associated with a man who was making so much money that he was able to hand out $5,000 without missing it, so that all were anxious to take stock in J. Smith's company.

Long before the time came for the first payment on the organ Smith had gathered enough money to start his business and was doing so well he had no difficulty in borrowing the amount needed to make the payment. From that time he has made money so fast that now he could give away several $5,000 organs and pay for them as well.—Chicago Tribune.

What He Wanted.

"Be careful, young man. You know the old saying, 'Marry in haste and repent at leisure.'"

"That's why I'm rushing things. What I want is leisure."—Exchange.

The Captain of the Kansas.

By LOUIS TRACY,

Author of "The Wings of the Morning," "The Pillar of Light," Etc.

Copyright, 1906, by Edward J. Clode.

"May I ask Arthur to help?"

"He knows the worst of me already. One more shameful disclosure cannot add to my degradation."

"Isobel, how little you know him!" Thus spoke Elsie after fourteen days. Truly there is much enlightenment in a hug!

M. le Comte Edouard de Falneille, to his intense chagrin, found that a ship's captain has far reaching powers when he chooses to exert them. Rather than cater a Montevidean jail, where people have died suddenly of nasty fevers, he not only restored the missing documents, but submitted to a close scrutiny of his own belongings, which resulted in the pleasing discovery that he was not a French count, but a denizen of Martinique—most probably a defaulting valet or clerk. No one troubled to inquire further about him. His passage money was refunded, and he was bundled ashore. Courtenay's view was that he had heard by some means of Isobel's intended departure from Valparaiso and deemed it a good chance of winning her approval of his courtship, seeing that such titles are not subjected to serious investigation in South America. Suarez took his Fuegian bride up country, where Mr. Barlug and Dr. Christobal established them on a small ranch.

Isobel renewed her voyage somewhat chastened in spirit, but her volatile nature soon survived the shocks it had received. By the time the Kansas put her ashore at Tilbury, to be clasped in the arms of a timid and tearful aunt, she was ready as ever for the campaign of glory she had mapped out in London and Paris.

* * * * * * *

Captain Courtenay, R. N., and his wife are not such distinguished personages, but their romance had a sequel worthy of its unusual beginning. They were married quietly a week after the Kansas reached London. There was some war scare in full blast at the moment, and a lord of the admiralty who deigned to read the newspapers thought it was a pity that a smart sailor should not risk his life for his country rather than in behalf of base commerce. So he looked up Courtenay's record and found that it was excellent, the young lieutenant's reason for resigning his commission being the necessity of supporting his mother when her estate was swept away by a bank failure. The sea lords made him a first rate offer of reinstatement in the service at a higher rank without any loss of seniority, and they went about the business with such dignified leisure that Dr. Christobal had time to find out, through men whom he could trust, that Elsie's small estate in Chile contained one of the richest mines in the country. He secured a bid of many thousands of pounds for it and advised Mrs. Courtenay to accept half in cash and half in shares of the exploiting company.

It was not unreasonably that Gray should go back to Chile to take charge of Elsie's mine nor that Mr. Boyle should become captain and Walker chief engineer of the Kansas, while Tollemache settled down in England.

THE END.

A NATION OF SAVERS.

Frenchmen Are Thrifty and Invest In Government Bonds.

If you were a Frenchman with a very small surplus to invest, if even that surplus were but a modest franc, you might become the holder of a French government bond. From the cradle to the grave the French subject is taught to save and to turn his earnings into safe income producing account, says Charles Speare in the Review of Reviews.

The state pays a premium on thrift. It rewards its school children for various good performances with a tiny bank deposit which invariably will have grown into goodly size when the recipient has reached maturity. Having nursed its people through the early stages of economy, it directs their steps in the choice of investments and even assumes paternal power in arbitrarily transforming the savings bank account into government bonds or rentes. Thrift is a national characteristic. France is a nation of little savers, of little incomes and of little farms.

Collectively these exercise a tremendous power on the affairs of Europe. The holder of the one or two franc bond and the possessor of the bank account, so small that bankers of other countries would scorn it, have built up a monetary power that commands the respect of the world and indeed regulates the finances and politics of much more presumptuous nations. Bonds of states and governments, of railroads with a government guarantee, bonds of cities and towns, of mortgage companies, are the Frenchman's choice. It is safe to say that in Paris coupons are cut from the bonds of nearly every government under the sun.

"I really believe that you married me simply because I have money," said the heiress, who was as stingy as she was plain.

"No," replied her impecunious husband candidly, "I married you because I thought you'd let me have some of it."—London Pick-Me-Up.

PAYS TO RAISE WEEDS.

These "Plants Out of Place" Have a Fixed Market Value.

Money in weeds? To be sure. The national department of agriculture has been for many years telling the farmers of the large money value going to waste each year in this country in the shape of pernicious weeds and has been issuing bulletins with directions for collecting, curing and selling the weeds. A quarter of a century ago Dr. George B. Loring, the commissioner of agriculture, called attention to the fact that in Germany many of the commonest and most pernicious weeds that the American farmer has to contend with were successfully and profitably cultivated. Burdock, dandelion, witch grass, foxglove, mullein, horehound, jimson, mustard and water hemlock are among our commonest weeds and grow in great profusion almost everywhere in the United States. Ordinarily they are regarded merely as troublesome weeds. The trouble, of course, is in the lazy habit of attempting to grow weeds and cultivated crops on the same land at the same time. So it often happens that the witch grass between the potato rows is more valuable than the tubers in the hills. When you raise weeds you must make a business of it. Land that will raise nothing else will raise weeds. The jimson grows in rank profusion about the feed lot, the front yard is yellow with dandelion flowers, and the flowers of the mullein bedeck the pastures. The burdock grows in the roadside fence corners, and the waste lot produces an abundance of witch grass and comfrey, yet a majority of the drug weeds used in medicine in this country are still imported and paid for at a high rate.

Without counting wormwood, tansy and rhubarb, all of which are weeds in favored places, and without including catnip or pennyroyal or any of the mints, the American people are paying out more than $300,000 a year in hard earned money for imported weeds which are growing wild in nearly every part of the country. The imports for the year 1907-8 were as follows:

	Pounds imported.	Price per poound.	Total value.
Burdock	60,000	7	$4,200
Dandelion	115,542	5	5,776
Dock	125,000	6	7,500
Witch grass	250,000	6	15,000
Foxglove	55,000	7	3,850
Mullein	5,000	60	3,000
Horehound	30,000	6	1,800
Jimson weed	150,000	5	7,500
Water hemlock	20,000	5	1,000
Mustard	5,000,000	5	250,000

The knowledge that there is money in the very common and much despised weeds is spreading every year, and a very considerable industry in medicinal weeds has arisen, but it is far short of what it should be. The average farmer cannot bring himself to regard as other than a heresy the declaration that a weed is simply a useful plant out of place.

The price paid by big jobbing drug houses for leaves, flowers or roots of the commoner weeds which afflict the farmer with their presence when he lets them get out of place are as follows: Dandelion roots, dried; jimson weed, leaves and seeds, poison hemlock, freshly plucked, and dried flowers and leaves and dried and cleaned seed of black and white mustard, 5 cents a pound; burdock root, sliced and dried, 7 cents a pound; dried leaves and blossoms of horehound and wild foxglove, 6 to 7 cents a pound; dried blossoms of the tall pasture mullein, 60 cents a pound if sealed in tight jars. In addition to the above standard drugs the dried leaves of jokeweed and trillium, gold thread and jack-in-the-pulpit are marketed, as well as the leaves and flowers of tansy, lobelia, boneset, catnip and a dozen other very common plants, all of which are in demand at the market prices.

Sanitary Poultry Nest.

The present day tendency to employ sanitary measures in the dairy, the stable, the dog house, etc., has at last extended to the poultry yard. The industrious hen is to be provided with a sanitary nest which can be readily washed and scrubbed, as occasion demands. This recent development is shown in the accompanying illustration. The nest is made of wire and is supported in a suitable housing, both of which can be removed from the chicken house when cleaning is necessary. When thus removed they can be conveniently placed in a suitable receptacle containing boiling water and thoroughly cleansed of all impurities and undesirable insects.

Money in Honey.

Three hundred billion bees made enough honey last year to fill a train of cars long enough to reach from New York to Buffalo. At the low wholesale rate of 10 cents a pound it was worth $25,000,000.

Mothers' Day.

He was still in the heyday of youth, though he had squandered years through strong drink, from which God's grace had saved him. He was addressing a meeting, by invitation, that evening, and before him, on the front seat, sat a man, he found himself powerless to move. He was "bothered" by the fact, as he expressed it afterward, for he was very much in earnest and wished his words of warning to find lodgment in every heart present. But this man sat laughing and jeering, as if he found only amusement in the fervent message.

By and by the speaker referred to mother, how her influence is to day preached and sung, her power extolled, and yet, alas, he said, many men have gone so far from all good that even that holy name has no power to stir a heart-throb. He then spoke of his own mother, repeating her last words to him.

At this juncture, he noted a change come over the man on the front seat. He had stopped laughing and was listening intently. By and by tears filled his eyes, and, as the speaker—having finished his speech—stepped from the platform, the wretched man broke into great sobs with the broken words: "Oh, I can't bear it! I can't bear it! It was the last thing my mother said to me."

Mother's day is every day. No sun ever rises that does not lighten the path of some prodigal weeping his way back to his mother's God, and the stars shine softly every night upon some spot made holy by the remembrance of a mother's prayers. While we, as women, covet a place in God's work, let us not forget that He has made Home His altar and the woman who presides there a true priestess of souls; that when He prepared tasks for the children of men He reserved the most important for His daughters; that the life ofttimes seemingly narrow and circumscribed is after all the one which projects itself farthest into the realm of the eternal.

At a recent religious service, a gifted singer rendered a mother-song most exquisitively. A tender, brooding hush dropped over the congregation, then sighs and sobs broke forth,

"Across the years so marred by sin," memories of mother stole, and accomplished in a few moments what the earnest efforts of evangelist and people had been powerless before to effect.

"Tell mother I'll be there
In answer to her prayer."

sang a soloist one night, and a mother, standing with Christians in the assembly, whispered to her seventeen-year-old son sitting near, "Will you?" He placed his hand in the one she extended to him and took his place by her side.

Mothers have right of way. Their love, like God's sunshine and rain, falls alike "on the evil and on the good on the just and on the unjust."

"The memory cherished by some years,
My mother's love, my mother's tears,
The thought of all her constant care,
Does bring the answer to her prayer.
"O mother, when I think of thee,
'Tis but a step to Calvary,
Thy gentle hand upon thy brow
Is leading me to Jesus now."

Literary Notes

A Healthy Person Needs a Good Breakfast.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson, iconoclast-in-ordinary to the medical profession, as usual upsets our previous ideas of bodily health in an article in Woman's Home Companion for August. Doctor Hutchinson has a faculty for restoring to us our self-respect, and assuring us that, left alone, we are not such idiots, after all. In this particular article, for instance, he points out that the idea of eating little in the summer-time is a fallacy. Of breakfast, for instance, he says:

"It is customary to make the first meal of the day slightly the lightest and distinctly the plainest and simplest of the three. If there is any deficiency of the appetite, breakfast is the meal at which this is most likely to show itself. But this lack of appetite is in nine cases out of ten clearly traceable to sleeping in an unventilated room or to late hours in foul air the night before, or to insufficient exercise the preceding day, and is no indication that the body really requires less food at this time. Perfectly healthy, men who sleep with their windows open and go to bed at a reasonable hour will tell you that they enjoy their breakfast as well as any other meal of the day, and in any event call it their best meal.

"Another popular delusion in regard to the lightness and unimportance of the breakfast is that wide-spread subterfuge, the 'continental breakfast,' consisting of a cup of coffee and some fruit or a single roll. This is a very pretty breakfast as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far; and the sole basis for its adoption on the continent is that it is only intended as a temporary tide-over, until the real breakfast of meat, eggs, fish, with beer or wine, which is taken at about ten or eleven o'clock, like a very early luncheon. If you haven't a good appetite for breakfast, make it your business to go and get one, instead of allowing yourself to be bluded by this morbid state of affairs and deciding that all you really need is a cup of coffee and a roll or an orange or a puff of breakfast-bran."

A PLAY ABOUT SOMETHING.

SO YOU LOVE HIM. I HEARD EVERY WORD.

A graphic story of the Southland, full of color and action, inspiring in it's theme, thrilling in it's situations. It tells the story of a pure lamb-like girl, of a treacherous tiger in the guise of man, of a hero, the type of vigor and strength. It is a story of love—the new love sprung to life and throughout the play there is a tenderness and natural atmosphere which speaks volumes.

HE'S COMING HERE TONIGHT TO SEE YOUR DAUGHTER.

The play presents both possible and stirring situations and does it in the most delightfully entertaining and simple manner.

The characters are clean cut and vivid, and the story has both weight, depth and great sympathetic and absorbing interest. It goes into no large arguments, nor does it preach or battle with any problem.

THEATRICAL

Can't Do Without Him.

Bill Duncan in "The Tiger and the Lamb" is a fat old county sheriff who would rather borrow a "chaw of terbacco" from a man than arrest him. Bill's mother has dubbed him Cupid, he has a great habit of "buttin in" other folks love affairs and trying to fix things up. Bill says "his ma knowed her business when she called him Cupid," but as far himself, he was too durned fat for any woman to ever love him, that's why he has always been a widower. Bill is also a member of the school committee, but Bill's knowledge was never gained at a school, in fact we doubt if Bill ever saw the inside of a school house except when as a member of the committee he does his best on examination day and poses on the platform besides the teacher with a very important air. The smallest pupil in the school, no doubt, could floor Bill if he should unbend and put a few questions to the scholars, but Bill is too wise to take any chances. However we all like Bill—he is a clean minded, healthy old chap and "The Tiger and the Lamb" can't do without him. He will be at the Opera House Monday Aug. 9.

The Majestic will continue amateur night every Thursday also contest night every Tuesday after the second show that evening. The latter part of this week the management announces the Lazelles in "Pickings from Light Opera." The Musical Schreckers, refined musical artists and Harry Paul, German Philosopher. Tuesday evening, at great expense, the management have secured the official pictures of the Johnson—Burns contest, the greatest event in the world's listic history.

BURNED TO DEATH

Charles Weaver was by Bad Fire at Mancelona Last Friday

The Antrim Iron company sawmill was completely destroyed by fire Friday at a loss of about $30,000. Gilis McBain was badly burned and Charles Weaver, an aged man, lost his life.

The company states that the fire started from a hot box, and when discovered, had such a start that the mill could not be saved. McBain had left his bicycle inside and went back after it, being rescued with his clothes burned off. His back and arms were badly scorched.

Weaver, who was an aged man, was working on the second floor, and, it is thought, became confused by the smoke and fire and could not find his way out. When his body was discovered, the head had been burned completely off.

The mill will be rebuilt at once but until this is done forty-five men will be out of employment.

EMMET ADMITTED AT MEETING FRIDAY

Enthusiasm Shown in Every County Visited.

Librarinre Will Give Statistics of County—Send Information to Directors Payton and White of This County

Charlevoix, Mich., Aug. 7, 1909.

Mr. Editor.

Dear Sir:—

I have just returned from a meeting of the directors of the West Michigan Development Bureau, held at Baldwin, August 6, and I am enclosing you a synopsis of the meeting. If you wish to use it in your next issue, you may enlarge on it as you think best.

It would be hard to exaggerate on the enthusiasm, that is being manifested by the directors, in making West Michigan, second to none of the great displays that will be exhibited at Chicago, next November.

Very truly yours,
D. S. PAYTON.

Charlevoix, Mich., Aug. 7, 1909.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—

At a meeting of the West Michigan Development Bureau, held at Baldwin, August 6, eleven counties were represented. Emmet county was represented by E. A. Lilly, president of the Petoskey Fair and E. C. Rust, of the Tindle & Jackson Lumber Co. and asked to be, and were admitted. Kent, Kalkaska, Missaukee, Osceola, Mecosta and Ottawa counties were invited to join the bureau, provided, they do so before September 15th. Space 23x43 feet on the main floor, and 363 feet in the gallery of the Coloiseum at Chicago has been secured for the West Michigan exhibit at a cost of $2,200.

Mr. Rowe has visited each county in the district, and reported each one working enthusiastically. Mr. Rowe also gave a very elaborate account of the display that will be made at Chicago by the West Michigan Development Bureau, this display will consist of fruit, vegetables and cereals.

The literature that will be given away, will be a map and history of the county, giving the number of churches, schools, high schools and our normal, as well as the number of granges, giving the number of grangers in the county, and the value of grange property; it will also show the particular advantage of each city and village, with their sawmills and other manufacturing industries, together with a list of the cut-over lands held down by the several companies and individuals, the advantages we have to offer to manufacturers, and the facilities we have for shipping, both by rail and water. Our summer resorts will receive full consideration, showing the beautiful homes, not only on Lake Michigan, but also, on our inland lakes. The board adjourned to meet at Ludington September 15th.

Truly yours,
D. S. PAYTON.

DICKINSON AND POSTAL

Are Being Boomed for Lieutenant-Governor Nomination

On Republican Ticket—Suspicions of a "Wet" and "Dry" Contest.

There is a growing suspicion that the "wets" and "drys" of the state are each doing a little political maneuvring back in the foothills of their respective territories in an effort to put one across on the other in the campaign of next year.

For some time there have been whispers afloat that a certain man widely known in state politics had been out lining up things to nominate Fred Postal, Detroit hotel man and state fair promoter, for lieutenant governor on the republican ticket. Just as this fact seeps out where it becomes news word comes from Eaton that Senator Dickinson is being urged to get into the race for lieutenant governor. Dickinson is known to fame for his anti cigarette, primary reform and women suffrage bills which he introduces each and every session.

No one is saying that the "wets" are anxious to have Fred Postal for lieutenant governor, that they may name the senate committees, but there are reasons for believing there may be truth in this suspicion and of course Senator Dickinson would not hook up with any except the "drys." When their two bosses meet, if both stay in, there is sure to be a real contest, with much interest and all the high lights needed to keep the voters from forgetting there is a campaign on.

It is also said that the friends of ex-congressman Darragh are urging him to get into the race and a pretty contest is in sight.

PURCHASED SHEEP RANCH

Wyoming Man Will Invest in Northern Michigan

One thousand acres of northern Michigan land, what has been known as the Sand's farm near Highbridge, in Manistee county, has been sold to a Wyoming man, Ducan M. Gillier. The amount paid for the land and its buildings was $25,000. Mr. Giller is a Wyoming sheep ranch man, and he transfers his business from Wyoming to northern Michigan through his desire to reach the Chicago market with spring lambs in advance of the western shippers. But the important part in connection with this incident is that a Wyoming man, after thorough investigation, desires to invest $25,000 in a northMichigan tract of land, for a purpose in which he has had long and successful experience.

Judge Carpenter Analyzes Warner-Cramton Law

Michigan Liquor Dealers Will Have a Narrow Path to Follow

The Michigan State Brewers' Association is so anxious to see that the saloons remaining in Michigan obey the law, that they have retained William L. Carpenter, former justice of the Michigan Supreme Court, to analize the Warner-Cramton Law, and within the last few days a pamphlet containing Judge Carpenter's interpretation of the principal provisions of the law and a list of thirteen acts, which would be in violation of that law, has been put in the hands of every saloonkeeper in Michigan.

Here are the thirteen "Don'ts" against which Judge Carpenter warns the saloonkeepers:

It is a violation of the law, two convictions for which would forever debar a licensee from securing a license in Michigan.

1. To sell, furnish or give liquor of any kind, or any beverage containing liquor, to any minor, intoxicated person, habitual drunkard, Indian, or to any person when forbidden in writing to do so by the husband, wife, child, guardain, or employer of such person or by the superintendent, supervisor, or director of the poor of the county where such persons resides.

2. To permit any student, or minor, to play cards, dice, billiards, or any game of chance in any part of any building in which intoxicating drinks are sold, or to sell or give to any student any such liquor, except when prescribed by a physician.

3. To allow any minor to visit or remain in any room where liquors are sold, or kept for sale, unless accompanied by father or other legal guardian.

4. To sell, furnish, give or have in one's possession intoxicating liquors in any concert hall, theater, or any other place of amusement, or in any room of any building opening into such place of amusement.

5. To keep open on Sunday, election day, or legal holiday, or in the prohibited night hours, any place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale.

6. To adulterate any liquor intended for drink with any substance poisonous or injurious to health or to sell or offer for sale, or import into the state, any such adulterated liquor.

7. To sell any liquor unless the barrel, cask or other vessel from which it is taken shall be branded with the names, person, company or firm preparing the same, and also the words "Pure and without drugs or poison."

8. To put into any such branded barrel, cask or vessel, any adulterated liquors.

9. To fail to remove screens, curtains, etc., that obstruct the view of the bar from the sidewalk, street or alley, during the time when the law requires the place to be closed.

10. To engage in business without having obtained a license with every formality required and without keeping the license posted conspicuously in the place of business.

11. To continue to carry on the business without procuring a new bond after the county treasurer has cancelled the old bond.

12. To display any kind of a sign advertising liquors upon the outside of any part of any building used for retail liquors.

13. To establish a new bar or saloon within four hundred feet along the street line from the front entrance of a church or public schoolhouse, or to establish a new bar or saloon in any residence district without the consent of all the property owners within three hundred feet.

Important Business Change at East Jordan Last Week.

At East Jordan last week a business change took place which will be of particular interest to residents of this city, both of the principals being well known to our citizens, whereby Vernon S. Paytoo, son of County Clerk Payton, becomes the successor to L. C. Madison & Co. in the drug business in that village.

Mr. Madison, in point of continuous service, was the oldest business man in East Jordan, having conducted the business for the past twenty-five years. Mr. Payton, a registered pharmacist, has had several years experience in the drug business although a young man. He announces that he will add greatly to the stock and being possessed of these qualities which has made his father one of the best liked men in the county he is sure of success.

A REGULAR CAMP OUTFIT

Is Maintained by Katkaska's Road Builders

COUNTY IS UNDER COUNTY SYSTEM

Camp Plan is a Great Saving in Expense.

Outfit Consists of all the Necessary Articles Needed by the Men—Plan has been in Operation for the past Three Years

Among the interesting things seen by the "better roads" men during their visits to Kalkaska county is the camp of the Kalkaska road builders.

The road commissioners of Kalkaska county have found by experience that it is much better to keep the same road crew all summer than it is to depend upon the farmers in the different townships where work is being done, and that it is better to have the men fed and lodged near the job than to have them using up good energy getting to the job in the morning and returning home at night, so they have a complete camp outfit and take care of the men at county expense.

The outfit consists of four tents, tables, dishes, a range, bunks, bedding, etc. The horse tent is the largest. It is 30x50 feet in size, and is held up by three center poles. The tent now in use is the second one owned by the county, one having been lost by fire. Inside of the tent stalls have been made from rough boards.

The tent which does duty as a dining room, kitchen and cook's quarters is 30x10 feet in size. The dimensions of the bunk tent are 18x36 feet. The bunks are so arranged that they can be quickly taken apart and put together again. They furnish sleeping accommodations for 16 men. The tool tent is 16x24 feet in size. The tent is used by the foreman and for the purpose of keeping the more valuable of the tools under shelter. The camp outfit represents an investment of $600.

In the dining tent is the telephone, which is wired up with central whenever a new camp is established. This is the third year that the camp system has been in operation and the Kalkaska commissioners are well pleased with the results by its maintainance. The county hires the laborers for so much a day and board. The chairman of the board of county commissioners is responsible for all the purchasing and the board meets every second Saturday to audit bills. The county supplies are bought at a place 10 per cent below the regular retail price.

The Kalkaska county road camp will be moved, upon the completion of road building operations near Elle Lake, to Rapid River township, where a strip of road graded last year, is to be covered with gravel. From Rapid River township it will be moved to Cobbsprings township, where a mile of gravel road is to be built on a highway leading toward Rapid City. As few moves as possible are made in a season, as the expense of a move is in the neighborhood of $100.

FETCH EXHIBIT TO STATE GRANGE

From the Great Land and Irrigation Exposition

HELD IN CHICAGO IN DECEMBER

Traverse City Eagle Advocates the Plan Editorially

Northern Michigan's Opportunity to Impress the Farmer of Southern Michigan Should be Improved.

It has been suggested that the exhibit to be made by the West Michigan Development Bureau in Chicago at the Land and Irrigation Exposition be brought to Traverse City for the week that the Michigan State Grange is in session here. The dates of the two events are such as to make the carrying out of such a plan a very simple matter. The irrigation exposition closes December 4, and the state grange session comes during the week beginning December 12. Thus there is a full week between the close of one and the beginning of the other.

The grange is the largest and strongest farmers' organization in Michigan. It has at the present time a membership that is close to fifty thousand. These members are the leaders in the several agricultural communities of the state, the largest share of them being found in the counties south of Grand Rapids. The meeting to be held in Traverse City this year is the thirty-seventh annual session of the state organization. It will be the first meeting held further north than Saginaw.

When it was proposed that the state grange be taken to Traverse City, many of the pillars of the order held up their hands in holy horror. The mere idea of thinking of asking the great agricultural institution of the state to meet in the woods where the members might be set upon by wild animals, might get lost because of the lack of roads, and would probably have to seek entertainment in log cabins instead of hotels, was preposterous. "No! No! Never!" they said. "We will not risk life and comforts. We are not explorers. We are agriculturalists. There is no reason why we should leave the open country and plunge into a wild forest with only here and there an opening for a saw mill and a cluster of shanties. Let us hold our meetings in the heart of our own country, southern Michigan."

However, the grangers were induced to risk life and comforts in this northern country. And now that we have the opportunity to deal with them on our own ground, it is our duty to make the most of the opportunity. Very likely by the middle of December the ground will be covered with snow and about all the grangers will see as they come north from Grand Rapids will be the pine stumps sticking up through the snow fields. Therefore it is desirable that we have something by which we can prove to these farmers that this is truly a rich and wonderful country. What better way is there for forcing home the argument than by having the fruit exhibit on display.

The reputation of the Grand Traverse region for some years to come will to a degree rest upon the impression made upon these representative farmers at the time of their visit to us in December. Their reports to their neighbors in southern Michigan and their reports in the agricultural papers will count for much and for long as regards our reputation. Let us make the opportunity now ours—count for 100 per cent.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

For the month of July as Reported by Secretary of State Martindale

Correspondents very generally report wheat of excellent quality and the yield somewhat above the average; the prevailing opinion of the greater number of correspondents is that the final estimate which will be made October the first will considerably exceed the present figures. The average estimated yield per acre in the southern counties is 19 bushels, in the central counties 16, in the northern counties 15 and in the state 17 bushels. The per cent, of plowing done for wheat in the State, southern and central counties is 11, and in the northern counties 10.

The average estimated yield of rye per acre in the state is 15 bushels and in the central and northern counties 14 bushels.

The condition of corn as compared with an average in the state is 81, in the central counties 83 and in the northern counties 87. The condition one year ago was 92 in the northern counties and 79 in the state.

The estimated average yield of oats per acre in the state is 20 bushels and in the northern counties 26 bushels.

The condition of potatoes as compared with an average in the state and central counties is 86, in the southern counties 85 and in the northern counties 90.

The condition one year ago in the southern counties was 71, in the central counties 82, in the northern counties 89 and in the state 77.

The condition of beans, compared with an average per cent. in the southern and northern counties is 89, in the central counties 91, and in the state 90.

The condition one year ago in the southern counties was 78, in the central counties 89, in the northern counties 93 and in the state 84.

The condition of sugar beets as compared with an average in the state and southern counties is 88, in the central counties 89 and in the northern counties 85. The condition one year ago in the southern counties was 80, in the central and northern counties 87 and in the state 83.

The yield per acre of clover hay in tons, in the southern counties is 1.29, in the central counties 1.50, in the northern counties 1.21 and in the state 2.33.

The yield per acre of timothy hay in tons, in the southern counties is 1.32, in the central counties 1.33, in the northern counties 1.04 and in the state 1.28.

The almost universal lack of spraying has resulted in a heavy dropping of fruit during the month of July, which is the principal cause of the reduction in the prospect for a crop in the state from 66 per cent. on July 1st, to 53 per cent. on August 1st. The prospect for an average crop in the southern counties is 43, in the central counties 61, in the northern counties 82 and in the state 53. One year ago the prospect in the southern counties was 45, in the central counties 46, in the northern counties 59 and in the state 47.

The winter varieties that promise best are in their order: Northern Spy, Baldwin, Greening, Ben Davis, Wagner, King, Russet and Wealthy. Of the early sorts the most promising are Dutchess, Maiden Blush, Red Astrachan, Early Harvest, Pippin, Fameuse and Yellow Transparent.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

At the meeting of Kalamazoo District Association Judge Philip H. Padgham read the following paper:

The judge first made mention of the widespread awakening of public sentiment against the liquor traffic, "the worst enemy of mankind, the cause of more misery, want, and suffering than any one other cause." He defined "crime" as "any act to which the law attaches a penalty, without any particular reference to its moral turpitude." "The true and only reason for making any given act a crime is a public injury that would result from its frequent perpetration. Frequent repetition of the act makes it a social injury, and society accordingly takes the most efficient means for its prevention."

The judge continued: My subject naturally divides itself into two inquiries—does the liquor traffic in its relation to crime mean the crime of the individual himself, in becoming intoxicated (for the law deems it a crime for a person to become intoxicated in a public place); or does it mean that the liquor traffic affords men the opportunity to obtain intoxicating liquors as a beverage and by drinking such liquors become intoxicated and then commit crimes? I think the answer would naturally be that it applies to both conditions. Men get drunk (that is a crime in itself) and while drunk they commit other crimes of a more heinous nature of which society feels the effect. Then the strong arm of the law reaches out and administers punishment. Now, our inquiry is, what relation does this condition of the criminal, his drunkenness, bear to the probability of his having committed the particular crime? Is there any reason to suppose that, in this particular instance, liquor was the moving cause, and that without it, the offence would not have been committed? Let us suppose a case. A young man of good reputation in the neighborhood where he has resided a number of years, hitches his horse to the buggy and drives to town to do some errands. He is in the best of health and spirits, not a particle sick or ailing in any way, and to all appearances is at peace with himself and all the world. He arrives in town, meets an acquaintance, and after the usual greetings they speak of going home. Our young man, being there with his horse and buggy, the other on foot, invites his friend to ride with him, and this offer is accepted, but before starting for home these men, who only "take a drink occasionally," and "only when they feel like it," and who "can quit at any time they want to," invite each other into a saloon, and of course they drink and treat each other, and this is repeated several times; and before starting home, fearing they may be thirsty on the way, they purchase a bottle of whisky to drink when they "feel like it." The sequel would show that they "felt like it" a number of times, for while on the way they get into a violent quarrel and this is kept up until hot words and blows ensued; and this young man, who had left home sober in the morning, now infuriated with the liquid poison he had obtained at the saloon, deals his friend a blow which kills him, and a prosecution for murder ensues. I said at the beginning, let us suppose a case; but, my friends, this was not a case to be supposed; it was real and happened in this county, and nothing is left out but the names of the parties. Is it too much a stretch of the imagination to say that this crime was committed wholly in consequence of the use of this intoxicating liquor? No one doubts it; but some one will say this is an extreme and isolated case. Not so—it is far more common than many suppose. Not that murders are common in this county, but the same reasons apply to many other crimes that come before the courts for judicial investigation, and the commission of many of the serious crimes that come before us can be traced either directly or indirectly to the use of strong drink.

What was the relation of the liquor traffic to crime in this case? Unfortunately I have not the statistics at hand to show this matter in a light that might be more convincing to you, for statistics are sometimes convincing things and are hard to be refuted. I have no data for the state prisons of Michigan, but from the Indiana state prisons I have the statement that of the 11,000 men admitted during the last four years 51 per cent drank to excess, 34 per cent were moderate drinkers, and less than 15 per cent were total abstainers. This throws some light on our question, as far as it goes.

PSYCHIC HOUSEKEEPING.

In Which Everybody Works, Including Father.

The latest fashion in housekeeping is the psychic variety. Psychic housekeeping is simply a practical system that a Chicago woman has invented, wrought out and made an effective solution of the servant girl problem. In her house everybody works. The guests are hosts, and the hosts are guests, and all take turns at the dishpan and the washtub.

If you should happen to drop in at 5:30 a. m. you would see men and women in the kitchen, with aprons on and sleeves up to elbows, preparing breakfast. You would see one man serving the meal today and another tomorrow. In the evening the same scenes would be repeated.

Between the two meals one man is busy painting portraits and landscapes and seascapes in oil, another is healing the sick, others are at the counting house, while the women are entertaining or shopping or calling.

Saturday afternoons men and women sweep, beat rugs, wash and iron, and bake dainties for Sunday. And all this reduces the cost of living to $8 apiece a month.

Hitherto the management of the household has been considered woman's especial prerogative. Man has been general manager of railroad and factory and store and mine, but under the psychic system he becomes a general manager of housekeeping, a working manager in name and deed. The first man to hold the office and administer culinary and other domestic affairs is John Forsell, an artist, who lives in a big, square house at 1041 Waveland avenue, Chicago. The mistress of the mansion is Mrs. Forsell, yet she does not say "my home" when she speaks of it, but rather "our home," thereby wishing it understood that every occupant of this union habitation is as much the "boss" as she herself. She is the inventor of psychic housekeeping, a kind which she asserts is adaptable to two or more families or to one family and its relatives or friends.

What He Lacked.

It is related of a South American general, who was extremely well pleased with himself, that once when about to sally forth to a grand dance he surveyed himself contentedly in the mirror and then soliloquized thus:

"Ah! Thou hast all—bravery, wealth, position, good looks. Ah, what dost thou lack?"

Whereupon his orderly, who, unknown to the general, was close at hand, remarked:

"Sense, general, sense!"

GROUNDS OF WEST MICHIGAN STATE FAIR, AT GRAND RAPIDS

Organized in 1902, the West Michigan State Fair has enjoyed seven prosperous, fruitful years. Seven highly successful fairs have been given, and each succeeding year has been signalized by an extension of the organization's activities and the enlargement of its scope of usefulness to the people of Michigan. Now, with over $50,000 expended in making up-to-date and improving the old West Michigan Agricultural and Industrial society grounds at Comstock park, and with no excuses to offer for past failures to fulfill promises to the minutest detail, the West Michigan State Fair extends a cordial invitation to the people of the state to attend their own great fair, in Grand Rapids, Sept. 13 to 17, inclusive. Visitors are assured surpassing entry lists in every department and an exhibition devoid of all objectionable features, unclean shows, gambling devices and liquor selling. The railroads are assisting by offering reduced rates for round trip tickets.

MACK, THE WIZARD.

Many Major League Managers Would Like to Know His System.

IS A STUDENT OF THE GAME.

Silent Director of the Philadelphia Americans Gets Excellent Results From His Band of Youngsters—His Methods Are a Mystery.

Any good, medium good, manager should be able to take a team of baseball stars and shove it well to the top. But to take a bunch of inexperienced youths, bolstered up by a few veterans, and push that crowd to the front is an accomplishment that has been the achievement of Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Americans, and it stamps him as one of the greatest men in baseball.

There are methods and methods in baseball, and some clubs have no real methods, but the system adopted by the wily Cornelius McGillicuddy (long for Connie Mack) seems to have all others beat. It looks pretty to see Manager Hugh Jennings of Detroit out on the coaching lines, ranting around, tearing up grass and shouting until he is red in the face, but a system employing much less noise seems to have accomplished more for Mack.

Ever go to a ball game and try to discover the director general of the Athletics? Ever notice Connie Mack in the limelight? Ever see what becomes of him when a game is over? Well, if you never observed these things, take a look. You will be surprised.

Mack enters the ball park just when nobody knows. His presence is not heralded. He just comes. He never appears in front of the bench. During the game a long, lean, anxious looking mien may be discovered in the shade of the visiting club's bench, but that's the nearest he ever comes to the public gaze.

When the game commences Connie Mack crosses his legs, multiplies them, makes motions with a score card and records religiously just what happens to every batter. A gentle wave here or there of the ever present score card is enough to change the whole course of the game. Mack never passes his signals in a public way. He is the soft pedal manager. One wave of the card means this and another that. A peculiar little twist of the pasteboard removes one pitcher and substitutes another. There is no slack motion in C. Mack's movements. He has the wigwag lassitude down fine.

After the game C. Mack does not ride to the hotel in the bus with the players. Like the common people, he boards a street car and goes to the hotel. He usually walks till most of the crowd is out of the way. He doesn't like to be jostled.

With all this easy going style nothing escapes him. When the Athletics "lay off" a day Mack has his players go to see their rivals play.

He does not let his men sit in a box and he gazed at, as most of the diamond stars are wont to do. The Athletics sit about in the grand stand in groups of twos and threes, being distributed where they can see the most to the best advantage. It's dollars to dog buttons they are told what to observe before going and that C. Mack knows when they arrive at the hotel just what has impressed itself upon them.

Interviewing C. Mack is productive of much information—for C. Mack. Ask him how Krause is pitching and he will reply: "Very well. He is a good young man." And he will come back with, "Say, this Easterly has been hitting to left field pretty much lately, hasn't he?" The longer you talk to Connie Mack the less he tells you and the more he finds out from you. He's not reticent nor retiring, but he knows how to pump.

Just now Mack is engaged in the delightful pastime of swinging around the circuit with a ball club that is chasing Detroit hard. And this ball club is one of the wonders of the baseball world. It is composed of collegians mostly, a year or two out of school. They have snap and hustle, and they play with all the abandon that marks the typical college game. Cauley, Davis, Murphy and Ira Thomas are the old heads in the lineup regularly.

Where Connie Mack discovers all these phenoms is a mystery. He searches this college and that college and has turned up with a team of young players quick to think and quick to act. He is getting baseball out of them, too, and is pressing Detroit, a team composed of old, experienced hard hitters.

FORBIDDEN TEA PARTY.

What Happened at Function Given by a Rebellious Woman.

Tea was not brought over by the first settlers. When the pilgrims landed at Plymouth tea was selling in England at from $10 to $50 a pound. It was a luxury that had been known to Englishmen only a few years.

Early settlers got along without India or China tea for a long time. They used roots, herbs and leaves found in the fields and woods as a substitute for tea. Sassafras tea was a common drink.

Tea was advertised for sale in Boston in 1762 for the first time, according to historians. In 1768 patriots began to take the pledge not to drink tea because of the tax that the English government placed on it. It became fashionable for patriotic ladies not to serve India tea, but as substitutes therefor "Labrador tea" and "Liberty tea."

Captain Page of Danvers forbade his spouse to taste tea beneath his roof as long as the tax remained, but the strong minded and ingenious lady ascended to the flat roof of the house, invited her friends to follow, and there she served tea to them.

Some other ladies of the town fared less fortunately. They used to borrow for their tea parties the big teapot of the once famous Bell tavern. One day after drinking the forbidden beverage the master of the house unexpectedly walked in, jumped to the fire, grabbed the teapot and turned it over, and out rolled a big frog. The jovial patriots at the Bell tavern, suspecting the use of the pot, had placed the frog in it. Some of the dames never drank tea afterward, for it made them sick.

Isaac Wilson of Peabody persisted in selling tea, so the Sons of Liberty seized him and compelled him to walk about town penitently repeating:

I, Isaac Wilson, a Tory be,
I, Isaac Wilson, I sell tea.

The celebrated Boston tea party was followed by tea parties in other New England towns. In Salem soon after the Boston party David Mason was suspected of having had his negro servant smuggle two chests of tea into the house. Patriots entered and searched his house. They found the tea. They gave it to boys, who paraded with it to Salem common and there burned it.

Even after the Revolution the trade in tea was not wholly unrestricted. It appears that in some New England places dealers in tea were required to take out a license.

WHY PIRATES LEAD.

Seven Reasons Given For Splendid Showing of Pittsburgs.

GREAT C[illegible]T DUE CLARKE.

Manager of [illegible] Is One of the Headiest [illegible] in Game Today. Wagner and Leach Two Pillars of the Team.

To one who thinks the problem "Why does the Pittsburg club continue to lead the National league?" finds no easy solution. To the unthinking fan who cannot conceive of any other form of comparing the relative merits of the teams contending for the pennant than past performances the Pirates' triumphal stand at the top of the list is inexplainable.

Baseball statistics unfortunately cannot portray many of the salient reasons why a certain team continues to make a better showing than another. Hardworking statisticians have yet to evolve a system whereby every point and play that spells success in baseball can be served up in figure form for the questioning fans. Records can be and are compiled showing the comparative strength in batting, fielding, base running and pitching, but the many unknown and oftentimes misunderstood inside plays of baseball remain a sealed book as far as statistics and records go.

The Pirates lead the National league because of seven things. Six of these can be found by a careful perusal of the weekly records. The other must be classed under one head—inside baseball. This latter covers a multitude of virtues. To Fred Clarke, manager of the Pirates, must be given the credit for the successful operation of this essential part of the baseball machinery which keeps the Pirates on top. It is his originality which conceived the plays. It is he who has outguessed the opposing players, and it is he who continues to keep the Pirates ahead by a never failing prodding of his players in order that they may continue to display the aggressiveness, fighting spirit and headwork which are essential to a successful manipulation of his system.

In a statistical way the Pirates almost have a monopoly on the good things therein. Here can be found the six other reasons why the Pirates are in the lead. To begin with, the Pirates lead in club batting with an average of .263. Again, the Pirates are supreme in club fielding with a grand average of .968. Again, the Pirates are far in the lead in long hits by clubs, being near forty points ahead of Cincinnati, their nearest competitor.

With the team as a whole in the lead in these three departments, blending to the individuals it is found that they are also supreme. Hans Wagner is the peer of them all in batting. He leads the players with an average of .400. Wagner also tops the ten leading sluggers with a grand average of .526, sixty-two points ahead of Jordan. Clarke and Leach also appear in this list of ten sluggers.

Then there is the pitching department, where Pirates also excel. Camnitz, Frock, Willis, Leever, Phillippi, Lieibold and Maddox are among the leading fifteen twirlers in the National league.

It is true that "Jap" Barbeau at third and Miller at second have been of much assistance to the Pittsburg club this year, but when the real secret of the success of the organization is traced the fine work of Clarke, Wagner and Leach seems to be more than two-thirds responsible for it.

How to Purify Rainwater.

Rainwater is one of the best washes for the complexion in existence, but clean rainwater is often hard to get, for after every shower the water from the barrels is black with soot, etc., washed off the roof. To prevent this and to secure clean rainwater, get a bit of coarse, close canvas and make a little bag of it. Into this bag put some clean gravel, and tie the bag on to the end of the pipe, so that the water will have to pass through the gravel before reaching the barrel. The gravel makes a capital filter, and if it be changed from time to time and the barrel be kept clean you will always have clean soft water when required for any purpose.

A Composer's Compliment.

Wagner once said he would prefer to go to Vienna to hear the waltzes of Strauss to hearing Lohan opera. On a birthday of Mme. Strauss some years ago she had as guests many celebrated musicians. She passed around a fan on which the different composers and players were writing their names and excerpts from compositions of their own. When it reached Brahms he penned the first measure of the "Blue Danube" waltz and signed beneath, "Not, I regret to say, by your devoted friend Johannes Brahms."

An Opinion.

"Say, paw," said little Rollo, "why do they call George Washington the father of his country?"

"I dunno, son, unless it was because his country kept him hustling to keep it out of trouble and then came to look at him as a sort of old fogy whose advice didn't amount to much anyhow."—Washington Star.

Learn benevolence. It is the only cure of a morbid temper. To be happy you must forget yourself.—Pulver.

LEGAL NOTICES

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made by Daniel Faust and Ida L. Faust, his wife, to Peter Tuttle, dated the 29th day of November, A. D. 1905, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 16th day of June, A. D. 1906, in Liber 33 of Mortgages on page 502, and duly assigned by said Peter Tuttle to Laura A. Scott, by assignment in writing dated October 28th, 1907 and recorded in said Register's Office on October 28th, 1907, in Liber 34 of Mortgages on page 386, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of nine hundred forty dollars and seventy-seven cents, and an attorney's fee of twenty-five dollars, provided for in said mortgage and no suit or proceedings at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof:

Entered at Charlevoix Postoffice as second class matter.

THE fencing of farms has been an interesting study, nothing else perhaps, showing more strongly the difference between the old and the new and the rapid increase of timber and land values in our country. In pioneer days log and brush fences were not uncommon, to be succeeded in turn by the ordinary snake rail, stake and wire and post and rail, each of which served their purpose in a manner but took much space and were breeding spots for brush and weeds. Succeeding them came the barb wire which has numbered its victims by the thousands. To-day we have the woven wire fence which is practically the only new fence erected. It is not our purpose to say which we believe best, the hinge joint the continuous stay, knot style, welded joint, diamond mesh, square mesh, etc., which is a matter of opinion, but to point out that all are worthless unless the anchor posts are properly set and that justice to the manufacturer, the dealer and the farmer himself demands that extreme care be used in their erection. To properly set an anchor post of wood, select one of large size, dig your trench so as much of the post will go underneath the ground as above. If possible set in cement, if not dig your trench the proper depth, slightly wider than the post and two or three feet longer. Near the bottom nail pieces of plank on each side, fill and tamp down well until level with the tops of the plank, then fill in some large stones, fill and tamp until near the top, then nail a plank running the other way of the post on the side from which the strech will come and place large stones in front of same. Set your second post in nearly an equally secure manner and brace according to the instructions given by the manufacturers and stretch the fence tight. Don't use too few line posts and any fence will give good service.

WHILE the superior advantages of Charlevoix County as a section where fruit and root crops find their natural home is a point which we are always bringing to the front, we don't want our friends to think we can't produce any other crop grown in Michigan, at a profit. Just outside the city limits, of Charlevoix, B. P. Wilkinson has just completed the harvesting of a field of wheat which will rank with any in the state, the heads being of immense size, filled with large plump berries. On the same farm a field of oats are nearing the harvest which are as good as any oats grown anywhere in the state, notwithstanding the adverse weather conditions at the time of seeding. A short drive from this city in any direction, will convince any observer that hay, corn, wheat, rye, oats, barley, peas and beans can be as successfully produced here as fruit and roots, with the right kind of man behind the plow.

THE Osceola County Herald, which takes the place of the Osceola County Democrat, issued its first number last week. The new owners are McCall & McCall, proprietors of the Gratiot County Herald, which they have made one of the very best papers in the state, and G. E. Ganiard, formerly superintendent of Ithaca schools, whose name appears as managing editor. With new equipment throughout and this kind of a push behind it the Herald is bound to rank with the best.

THEATRICAL

The Majestic announces the following strong program for the latter part of this week Lakola and Loraine, jugglers and equilibrists and Monlton's happy family.

Monday night at the Charlevoix Theater, Colonel M. J. Warring will offer the biblical drama Moses, Prince of Egypt, presenting a magnificent scenic production, in which the sublime story of the young Hebrew who put aside the diadem of Egypt and became an outcast with a price upon his head, who might have become the greatest man in all Egypt, yet put it all behind him to follow whither God might lead him is beautifully told and will appeal to all people.

Southern Farmers in Missaukee.

George VanLiew, the Lake City real estate man, has been in the city this week attending to local real estate deals.

Mr. VanLiew says Missaukee county is fast filling up with farmers from Indiana, Ohio and Illinois during the past year. These purchasers were for the most part renters before coming here and are practical agriculturists. He predicts that within a very few years all the unoccupied land in this section will be taken as the great amount of publicity that real estate men are giving northern Michigan lands will bring it about.—Cadillac Citizen.

Do you go to the postoffice? Sure!

Well, when you do go, just step in and see POWERS, The Plumber, about that job of plumbing or heating you were thinking of the other day. He comes as near keeping everything you want in the plumbing and heating line as anybody in Northern Michigan. And that isn't all, he knows how to install your job and do it right, and he is no robber either. He charges you enough so that he can do you a good sanitary job and no more. Once he has done work for you, you will want no other plumber.

This advice certainly holds good with everyone this sort of weather

Soda served at our fountain is more than a tasty thirst-quenching beverage. It is tonic and refreshing and every glass a strengthener for the stomach.

L. H. Power and G. M. Dame of Northport recently did something that shows that this section as a fruit producer is superior to those more widely advertised. The California cherry growers send out fancy boxes containing three tiers of cherries. The Northport men filled the box up with the Grand Traverse product and it only took two tiers to do it. That certainly can be taken as evidence that Grand Traverse fruit will compare favorably and even show superiority over that raised in the west.

A shovelful is deposited every 25 feet.

The Traverse City Evening Record tells the following interesting story, editorially, in which Cadillac figures prominently:

Many and varied are the uses of the telephone. A few days ago a mill over at Williamsburg was saved because the farmers around the country were routed out of their beds by an energetic and faithful "central." With this incident still fresh in our minds comes another accomplishment.

It seems that a party of motorists forgot that there was such a thing as a speed law in Cadillac and burned up the brickbats in the main street of that village at the rate of 30 miles an hour, escaping the Cadillac police force, who handicapped by the lack of conveyances, could only make about 10. But did they tear their hair and despair and lay for the bunch on their return? Nay, nay, this is the 20th century if you please.

The Cadillac chief simply called up the Traverse chief at a cost of two bits and when the speeders came along, our chief nailed them. And were they haled back to Cadillac and made to lose time and burn much gasoline? Nay, nay, a couple of times more. Again was "old faithful" called into play and two bits more added to the costs. "Guilty," said the speeder. "Ten and $3.75 costs," said the judge. "I'll pay Chief Ashton," said the speeder, "O. K." said the judge. "Good-bye," "Good-bye, take keer of yourself."

Simple was'nt it? The local chief got the spreders, Cadillac got the money, the automobile man got hose and the telephone company got 50 cents.

It is interesting to think what would have happened a few years back, but then there were no automobiles then and the mail that could speed over the country roads wasn't born yet.

The American Passenger Association of the state has started a movement to change the school year so that the resort season will run two weeks into September. This would be a great thing for the resorts of northern Michigan. It is well on toward the middle of July before the tourist business is flourishing and in six weeks there is a general exodus, just at the time when the weather is most perfect up this way and the cities still sizzling. "I dread to go back to the city, but the children must be in school," is the lament of nine-tenths of our summer guests as they take their departure the 1st of September.

The Famous Kumiss

Kumiss is a valuable beverage for use in the sick-room. Heat one quart of milk to seventy-five degrees Fahrenheit, add one and one half tablespoonfuls of sugar, and one fourth of a yeast-cake dissolved in one tablespoonful of lukewarm water. Fill sterilized bottles to within one and one half inches of the top. Cork, and shake. Place the bottles inverted, where they may remain at a temperature of seventy degrees Fahrenheit for ten hours; then put in the ice-box or a cold place, and let stand forty-eight hours, shaking occasionally, to prevent the cream from clogging the mouth of the bottle. It is refreshing and nourishing.—Woman's Home Companion for August.

A Cocoa Egg-Nog

A cocoa egg nog is quickly made. Beat the white of one egg until stiff, and add gradually, while beating constantly, one teaspoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of breakfast cocoa and a few grains of salt. Add to one half the mixture, while beating constantly, three fourths of a cupful of cold milk. Turn into a glass and pile the remaining mixture on top.—Woman's Home Companion for August.

Fully Appreciated

Raymond, age five, returned from Sunday school in a state of evident excitement. He strutted around the room as if about to burst with importance. The sympathetic eye of his mother was not slow to observe this.

"What's the matter, Raymond?" she asked.

"Oh, mother," exclaimed the small boy, his eyes sparkling, "the superintendent said something awful nice about me in his prayer this morning."

"What did he say?"

"He said, 'Oh, Lord, we thank Thee for food and Raymond.'"—Woman's Home Companion for August.

A Yard-Fork.

Take a long kitchen-fork with three sharp, spreading tines, and bind the wire handle along the end of a sawed off broom handle (a nail in the end of the stick is a help in securing it firmly), and you have a most efficient aid in keeping the yard free of paper and other light trash.—Woman's Home Companion for August.

POINTS FOR THE HORSEMAN

W. R. Gilbert, the well known live stock authority, gives the following valuable points on treating simple ailments of horses:

Perhaps the most urgent cases of any and ones calling most for immediate treatment are the results of accidents, and of these I will speak first.

The most common accidents are perhaps sprung tendons and the throwing of the curb. The latter usually arises from the formation of the hocks, but this is not invariably the case, instances of the curb frequently arising from a slip on a piece of slippery ground while the horse is galloping, from a sudden strain or from the takeoff of a jump being bad. In such cases he generally shows great lameness at once. On arriving at his stable an enlargement is discernible immediately below the point of the hock or hocks, where the seat of the curb rests, and treatment cannot be resorted to too promptly. If taken in hand at once the animal may reasonably be expected to regain his soundness in the course of a week or so. It is hardly necessary to say that perfect rest is required after having been rubbed well with any spirit.

When delay in treatment has unavoidably occurred cold water is the best thing if it can be applied with sufficient force through a hose or from a pipe for from fifteen to twenty minutes. This may be followed by an application of one ounce of corrosive sublimate dissolved in one ounce of spirit of wine, applied with a paint brush at night and washed off the next morning with strong salt and water. It will not blister, and it is not necessary to cut the hair off the hock.

Sprains of all sorts naturally call for rest and a proper course of treatment, but there is for immediate use a good and simple liniment which should be rubbed in daily until proper surgical aid can be obtained. It is composed of camphor, three drams; oil of rosemary, three drams; turpentine, three drams; mercurial ointment, three ounces.

For wounds and cuts a capital wash is made of copperas, one teaspoonful; fine gunpowder, two teaspoonfuls; white vitriol, two teaspoonfuls. To this add a quart of boiling water and let the mixture stand till cool.

It is often necessary to plaster a wound up before a veterinarian has time to arrive, and therefore it may not be amiss to give a simple recipe for making sticking plaster. It is as follows: Tallow, two ounces; burgundy pitch, four ounces. Spread on linen while hot. To make an effectual blister melt the following ingredients over a slow fire till dissolved and then with the fingers rub the paste into the part affected: Cantharides (pulverized), four ounces; turpentine, two ounces; English rosin, two ounces; beeswax, two ounces.

Greasy heels are common complaints of the stable, but one for which it hardly seems necessary to call in advice, the remedy and, still more, the prevention being so simple. Sudden changes of temperature or diet are very likely to produce them, and horsemen should be very careful after washing the legs to dry them thoroughly, more especially if they have used warm water.

Underbred horses grow more hair about their fetlocks than well bred ones, and in such cases it is advisable not to clip their heels quite close and to guard against grit, dirt and damp. Horses with poor constitutions or those out of health are naturally more liable to be affected than others and therefore require the more care to protect them against grease or cracked heels.

When one is found to be suffering from grease a laxative should be given and a warm poultice be applied for several days to the part affected, this being changed every five or six hours. Every time it is changed care should be taken to cleanse the wound well with warm water and a solution of chloride of lime or zinc. Afterward an astringent application may be used. It may be made from either of the following: Equal parts of sulphate of zinc and sugar of lead dissolved in water or two drams of sulphate of zinc, one pint of water and enough flaxseed meal to make a paste. Soak a pledget of tow in the solution and fix it in its place by means of a bandage.

SLING FOR COLTS.

A Rest For Those Injured So That They Cannot Lie Down.

"I recently had a tenacious headed colt suffer a severe wire cut on its breast and forearms so that it could not lie down, so I set about to devise a sling to ease the animal," says a breeder. "I had none on hand, so I made one as follows:

"For the cloth part I secured a large cottonseed meal sack wide enough to support the entire underside of the colt's body. The ends of this sack I stitched securely over ordinary gas and a half inch steel tubing, allowing the end of the tube to project from the end several inches.

"As I did not want to cut the rope I had on hand for hanging this sling from the ceiling, I threw one end over a beam just above the colt's withers and shoved each end through the gas pipe and drew them up so the sling rested snugly against the colt's chest. The ends of the rope were then thrown over a joist above the colt's loins and drawn up so as to bring the other end of the sling against the colt's abdomen and then fastened securely.

"In a few minutes the colt caught on and was soon resting comfortably in the sling."

SUCCESS WITH SHEEP.

Some Points on the Management of the Flock In Summer.

A man should see his sheep at least once every day. There are so many little things that will come up, things that need not worry him at all if he will but take them in time, like finding an old ewe on her back in a hole, or an udder with too much milk therein, or a lamb with maggots, or the beginning of scours in the lambs (which is one of the signs of stomach worms), or a sheep going lame, the sure sign of trouble and to be attended to on the spot. The best thing to treat foot lameness when deep seated or when the sheep is to be treated in the field is butyrin of antimony. It is very sure and quick, which is the essential of a good remedy for this disease.

Salt is necessary for sheep and they should have plenty of it. If the flock is on pasture liable to cause bloat mix salt with air slaked lime, a little more lime than salt. They will eat it, and it seems to act favorably on the stomach and prevents bloat. Tobacco stems should at all times be kept before the flock. A good way to get the sheep to eating much tobacco is to dip the stems in weak brine and give no additional salt.

Now and then there will reappear within your flock that old and terrible disorder called foot rot. We have succeeded in eradicating it from our flock by causing the sheep to pass every day through a trough in which there was a solution of blue vitriol, water and quicklime. After we had seen no more of the disease for some time we left off using the vitriol and used simply the lime, making a thick whitewash. This destroys all germs that are of recent lodging, and when once the sheep are well and kept off the infected ground sufficient time for the germs in the soil to perish you will never again see the disease in your flock unless you bring to it a diseased sheep or allow them to trespass upon infected soil.

We do not find it necessary to feed grain to ewes on grass or green foods. We do find it profitable to feed grain to the lambs when we wish to market them fat in the early summer. We have found pumpkins a great help in feeding the flock in the fall. There is a great deal of nutriment in the pumpkin, and, besides this, the seeds themselves are stored with nutriment and are also quite efficient vermifuges, so that one will undoubtedly effect a considerable increase in the health of his flock by feeding liberally of pumpkins. In our practice we do not remove the seeds, but haul the entire pumpkins to the pasture in large quantities, letting the sheep gnaw their way into them as best they can. They will in this way eat the pumpkins clean, while if they were broken the seeds would all be eaten first and perhaps the flesh left to decay.—Joseph E. Wing in Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.

Milk Value of Corn Fodder.

Trials at the Vermont station show there is no material difference in milk producing value between immature and mature corn fodder when compared on the basis of dry matter. The same results were secured with silage made from mature and immature corn. A pound of dry matter of the immature corn produced the same results as a pound of dry matter of the mature corn. This suggests that if corn is cut too early the farmer loses too many pounds, and, on the other hand, if cut too late too much in the way of coarse butts is wasted.

The Dairyman's Silo.

With the excessively high price of mill feed the dairyman should turn to the silo. It is the cheapest food he can get for his cows. And the silo is not an expensive thing to build. With a little help any farmer can do it. Good land will produce tonnages of silage per acre and at a cost of only $1.50 per ton when it is landed in the silo. Silage gives juicy food all winter and thus takes the place of pasture and soiling for that season. Every farmer with milk cows should have a silo.

The Bayonet.

The bayonet was due to the fortunate inspiration of a Basque soldier who, when he and his regiment, having expended their ammunition, were driven to bay on a mountain ridge near Bayonne, suggested that they should fix the long knives with which they were armed into the musket barrels and charge the enemy. This advice, which was followed with complete success, was the means of introducing the weapon to the notice of military Europe.

HOLDING THE CROP.

The tiller of the soil who is so situated that he can hold his crop has a decided advantage over his fellow producer who cannot do so. It is a well known fact that the middleman, quite generally comprising wholesalers and commission men, like to get control of just as large a percentage of the supply of any product as possible and as soon as may be after it is fit or ready for market. This enables them to control the supply, while there accrues the added advantage of buying at the low prices which so often prevail when the many who cannot hold their product throw it on the market. It is a matter of mere observation that unless starting prices are abnormally high they advance materially as soon as the bulk of any commodity is out of the producers' hands. It is on this account that a hand to mouth policy in the matter of marketing stuff is to be discouraged, unless prices prevailing are unusually high. The adoption of this plan usually results in an increased price for grain, for some fruits and vegetables and often in the case of farm animals. To put it in another way, the suggestion may be made somewhat clearer by saying that one should endeavor to so equip himself that he shall not be a victim of the market circumstances which may happen to prevail at any given time.

AN OPEN MIND.

The interesting story is told of a Missouri farmer of forty-seven years who was so impressed with his son's progress in the state agricultural college that he sold his farm and is now taking a full course in the same school, and it is understood that the new pupil is making some of the kids scratch gravel to beat him in class room work. The incident as related emphasizes the fact, forgotten at times by some, that one never gets too old to learn and take advantage of the helpful things to be derived from the study and experience of other people. This keeping one's mind open to new things, while it may in rare instances be carried too far, is that which distinguishes the bright, alert man from the clod hopper and him who succeeds in life from him who plods along on a dead level of monotonous mediocrity or inferiority.

There be folks who somehow have the idea that there is virtue or merit of a sort in doing a given piece of work in a laborious and painstaking way when it might be done just as well with less time and energy in a different way. It is this disposition to save time and energy that accounts for one fellow's being forehanded with his work while his neighbor is just about as much behind with his.

THE HOT WATER CURE.

Among the many panaceas which have been recommended from time to time to cure the ills of ailing folks none seems to have had the efficacy of the water cure, which is just now receiving a good deal of attention. This consists in the drinking of hot water the first thing in the morning and at mealtimes, with just as many glasses of water between times as possible. The contention of those who recommend this copious use of water—and they are among the best medical authorities of the country—is that the average person does not consume enough water anywhere near to supply the needs of the body and because of this a generally sluggish condition results, which tends to aggravate any disorders which may exist. Many who have tried the cure have been greatly helped and are warm in their praises of it. It's cheap as dirt, and anybody can give it a trial.

ALCOHOL RECTIFIER.

Professor Snyder of the Minnesota experiment station has designed an alcohol rectifier costing about $38, which, with some modifications of a small type still, puts the cost of a complete still having a capacity of ten to twelve gallons of alcohol per day at about $100. On such a basis it would seem that the manufacture of alcohol might be considerably extended. Alcohol made in as inexpensive an outfit as this and extracted from the waste products of the farm would furnish the cheapest of all sources of light, heat and power.

Statistics show that the hens of the country produce as much wealth in six months as all of the iron mines in a year.

In the hilling of the celery bed the stalks should be held together firmly, so as to prevent dirt from getting into the crown of the plant, where the tenderest portions of the plant will grow.

During the heat of the midsummer it is especially necessary that flocks of hens which are confined should have a supply of green food in some form, with a plentiful supply of clean, fresh water.

However favorable irrigation may be as a means of using otherwise waste water, it is an interesting fact that of the water diverted into irrigation canals but one-third is finally utilized in the actual production of crops.

A good table relish may be had during the early fall days if some string beans are planted early in August after some other garden crop has been removed. They will be appreciated because the time of green things has gone by.

A Texas farmer living twenty miles from El Paso last year raised watermelons under dry farm conditions with a rainfall of but 9.84 inches during the year. It would sort of puzzle a fellow to tell just where the juice in these melons came from.

Unlike some other products, particularly those kept for long periods of time in cold storage, comb honey keeps best if stored where it is warm and dry, in temperatures ranging from 70 to 90 degrees. Exposed to frost and dampness it deteriorates very rapidly.

The Weyerhauser lumber interests have given 2,240 acres of land near the headwaters of the Mississippi in Minnesota to the state agricultural college to be used for experiments in scientific forestry. Here an attempt will be made to work out some of the more important general forestry problems, and particularly those pertaining to Minnesota and adjacent states.

Natives of Germany are often heard to speak of the large numbers of fruit trees which grow along the roadsides and furnish large quantities of fruit for nearby residents, the boys and girls especially appreciating the advantage. It seems a pity that this idea couldn't be adopted in America and some of the soil fertility that is being exhausted to produce roadside weeds devoted to growing fruit instead.

There is something in human nature that seems to make it impossible for some folks who get started on the downward road to really come to themselves until they have struck the last ditch—so low down that they take their provender from the hog trough as did the prodigal, or even worse. This makes mighty rough sledding, but it is about the only thing that will bring a body to his senses.

The foxtail or wild barley is coming to be one of the worst weed pests in many sections, requiring a good deal of work to eradicate. Botanists seem undecided whether to classify it as a winter annual or as a semi-perennial. It is hardy, ripens its seed early, and the fuzzy character of its seed head enables the wind to scatter it widely. Thorough and clean cultivation is the best method of getting rid of it.

Many a farm could easily produce the bulk of the sweets produced on its own table if two or three hives of bees were kept. Literature on the matter is easily available in the shape of pamphlets or a bee journal, while the degree of attention required for their proper care is light. Pure, fresh honey from the home hives is both cheaper than and far superior in quality to the "honeydew" maple sirups for which one has to pay a dollar a gallon.

A resident of Reading, Pa., departing from the usual practice of having his apiary in his back yard or orchard, has fitted up his garret for this purpose and there has some forty hives. The bees have access to the room through holes bored just beneath the window sills. They seem contented in their odd quarters and store their sweets there just as generously as out among the grass and flowers, some colonies producing as much as 300 pounds during a season.

Instances of death from descending into wells long unused are of too frequent occurrence. In such instances death is due to the presence in the well of carbon dioxide, which, being heavy, settles to the bottom and in which it is impossible for a human being to breathe. It is always well before going into such a well to lower a lantern by means of a rope. If it continues to burn at the bottom it means that the life giving oxygen is there and that it is safe to descend. If the light goes out the presence of carbon dioxide is shown, and this means that death lurks at the bottom.

Ties which are being scattered along most railways for repair work are black as your hat, showing evidence of treatment with creosote, one of the most effective wood preservatives known. Years ago the abundance and cheapness of ties were such that the question was one of minor consideration, but today even poor ties cost sixty cents apiece. It is estimated that the creosote bath costs from thirty to fifty cents per tie and increases its life three or four times. During 1908 56,000,000 gallons of creosote were used in preserving timber, as well as 19,000,000 pounds of zinc chloride.

Peas, beans or any other legume plowed under not only contribute a considerable supply of available nitrogen to the soil, but add a supply of humus in the shape of decayed vegetable matter.

The poorer stick of a tenant a fellow is the oftener he has to move, and the poorer stick the landlord is the oftener he will want to move. These two sticks are often found near together and are responsible for a heap of mighty slovenly farming.

Any man who is able to walk for a living, as the Weary Willies do, can usually muster enough energy to do a little work for the meal he calls for at the back door. If he isn't willing to do this introduce him to the dog and show him the highway.

It is estimated that it would take 200 or more of the poor dairy cows to be found in most any state to give the annual profit from their milk and butter yield that is realized from the one cow Jacoba Irene. Besides this, there is the job of milking the 200.

The average farm implement man can hardly view with alarm but a feeling of satisfaction the carelessness which so many farm owners exhibit in the matter of putting their machinery under cover, as it means an increased trade in repairs and new machines.

The Kansas fruit grower is in trouble from the operation of the pure food laws of the state, which require among other things, that a quart berry box shall contain a quart of berries and not seven-eighths of a quart. Under the new regulations the growers will be compelled to stamp seven-eighths of a quart on the short measure boxes.

There are thousands of farms the country over which would be transformed and the life therein made immensely brighter if eight or ten dairy cows were purchased, a silo installed and clover or alfalfa grown. This trilogy might well be called the faith, hope and charity of the agricultural world and will do more to save soft sinners from the wrath to come than any other virtues in the category.

Pure Food Commissioner Wright of Iowa has had an interesting problem shoved at him for solution—whether the sticking of a pin point through the shells of eggs, a practice followed by poultry fanciers to prevent the eggs they sell on the common market from being used for hatching purposes, is a violation of the state pure food law. This would seem to be getting the pure food law down to a pretty fine point.

New and old potatoes have been on a good deal of a soar the past couple of months. Spuds that were priced at 60 cents a hundred last fall brought $1.75 by spring, while this year's crop wholesaled in May for $1.55 per bushel, the local grocer charged about 5 cents a pound, or close to $3 per bushel. This year's high prices are the result of a 40 per cent shortage in the Texas crop and a belated spring which delayed three weeks the marketing of the new grown crop.

Kansas dairies seem to be suffering from transportation rates which are so adjusted as to give decided advantage to the big centralizer plants through less rates for long hauls. Twelve years ago there were 300 creameries in the state, while there are at present but 59. In contrast to this state of affairs, low rates on short hauls in the state of Minnesota have been in part responsible for an increase in the number of creameries from 300 to 920 in the same period.

Those orchardists who are receiving the largest returns quite generally follow the practice of hand thinning the fruit on overloaded trees. This not only relieves the heavy pull on trees which set too heavily, but insures a larger and more uniform size and better quality of fruit. This thinning, which is done when the apples are about an inch through, makes possible the elimination of dwarfed and defective fruit and reduces the work of picking by just so much at harvest time. In the thinning process no care is required in the handling of the apples, and the work can be done rapidly

One of the chief reasons for the increased wealth of the Danes is the fact that they have increased the average yearly production of butter fat in their dairy herds from 112 to 224 pounds per cow in the comparatively short period of twenty-three years. In this period the people have advanced from virtual bankruptcy to affluence. What is needed in the United States more than anything else is a campaign which will put the average butter yield of the dairy cows from 150 to 300 pounds. Could such a thing be brought about agricultural and economic conditions would be revolutionized.

WATER FOR BEES.

A western beekeeper recommends the following device for furnishing water for bees, which he thinks should be given fresh water at intervals of two or three days: He takes a keg or barrel and makes a hole near the bottom just large enough so that water will trickle out slowly on a sloping board, on which it spreads out where the bees can drink their fill without danger of drowning or being poisoned, as would be the case if they had to go to a running stream or nearby sprayed orchards.

Exactly.

Little Mrs. Hunter had heard so many jokes about the brides who couldn't market successfully that she made up her mind that the first request she made of the marketman would show her to be a sophisticated housewife. "Send me, please," she said, "two French chops and one hundred green peas."

CLOSE AUGUST FIFTEEN.

Open Season for Trout Will This Year—Not September 15.

The open season for brook trout and other kinds of trout found in the inland waters of the state will close this year on August fifteenth. Many people in all parts of the state have the impression that the new law, passed at the recent session of the legislature, making an open season from May first to September first. Others think that the season will close August fifteenth, and then reopen on the nineteenth and remain open until September first. Still others think that the season will close August fifteenth, reopen on September first and remain open until September fifteenth. The laws passed at the last session of the legislature will not go into effect until the first day of September; therefore the new law cannot effect the season this year, which will close finally August fifteenth. After this year the open season will be from May first to September first.

TRAGEDY AT EAST JORDAN

Infant Son of Milan Greenman Burned to Death

Mother had Left Child Alone While on Errand

Word comes of a terrible tragedy at East Jordan last night, whereby the five months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Milan Greenman, of that village lost its life.

Mr. Greenman and family, occupied a small house in that village, owned by D. C. Loveday. Mrs. Greenman had started to prepare supper between five and six o'clock and finding herself in need of butter went to a neighbors to secure some, leaving her five months old son in a baby cab near the stove. In some manner the fire caught and was a mass of flames before being discovered nothing whatever being saved.

The W. R. C. also holds its district convention at the same time and place.

Temperament.

Fatima had been exclusively educated at an exclusive school, and when, having entered the forbidden chamber, she beheld the several heads of Bluebeard's former wives she understood instantly

"There's temperament for you!" she exclaimed and thought how the other girls would envy her. It was a happy moment for Fatima.—Puck.

CIRCUS TO-MORROW

Boy City Will Have a Day of Fun Frolic and Sports

Has Widely Advertised Charlevoix-Boys Planning on Next Year

This week will see the closing of Boy City until another year. Saturday and Sunday interesting programs were carried out, an excursion from Traverse City bringing in one hundred and fifty people Sunday. Thursday will be circus day and will be the beginning of the end. This is widely heralded as a day of fun, frolic, fake and freaks. The annual circus is one of the important features of camp life at Boy City. As soon as the day breaks the boys begin preparations for the event and enjoy the fun to the uttermost. No better opportunity could be given to study the boy in his native element.

Nothing will be missing that goes to make up a real circus, all carried out by boys, from the menagerie to the concert at the close and the side shows where freaks from all over the universe will be shown.

Boy City has advertised our city from one end of the country to the other and the work will continue until it again opens. Many of the camps have made permanent improvements and are counting on their return next summer when they will bring more boys with them, who will start as they have to play the game of life square, as citizens of a city without graft.

PUBLIC ACTS OF 1909

Will Contain Nine Hundred and Forty Pages—14,000 Volumes Published.

The 1909 volume of public acts will be ready for issue soon after August 1 and will contain 940 pages, which is 300 more pages than in the public acts of 1907. In fact, it will be one of the bulkiest volumes ever compiled by the secretary of state.

This book will contain the laws enacted by the last legislature and one of the main reasons for the large increase in the size of the book is the law pertaining to the highway code.

However, in the number of acts, the book contains 18 less general laws than were passed by the legislature of 1907, and 10 less than the session of 1905. It had been estimated that as the legislature of 1909 would have to enact the necessary legislation to place some features of the new constitution into effect, the book would be a record breaker. Instead, although the book is more bulky, there are but 322 acts, a less number than before.

The state published 14,000 volumes of the public acts for the use of the state, county and municipal authorities and for general distribution throughout the state.

Records Show that Good Roads Increase Farm Values

Pleads for Federal and State Aid and Co-operation in Building of the Same—Other Expenditures Compared—

Good roads mean progress and prosperity and are a benefit to the people who live in cities and an advantage to people who live in the country. Like good streets they make habitation along them desirable. You never, or rarely ever, and then not for long, see a shabby home by the side of a modern road where everybody passes and sees how you live. They make people straighten up and put their best foot forward. The value of farms is enhanced. Statistics prove that in nearly every case the states having the highest percentage of improved roads are a powerful factor in encouraging the settlement of unused lands. Roads also have a far reaching influence in holding men to their farms and restraining them from drifting to the towns. While the manufacturing towns must have labor, who is here that will deny that if our counties had good roads the hundreds of good farmers would not have moved their families from the country home to town to work in the mills? So great an exodus occurred two or three years ago that farm labor was almost impossible to secure. These people are needed in the country; there they would have stayed had there been good roads, which makes farm life so much more attractive. As the price of land depends as much on accessibility to market as on productivity, it follows that road improvement, by holding people and attracting others, directly tends toward increase in values of all farm lands within touch of the improved highways. It is shown that in states where the average price of land is less than $20 an acre the percentage of improved roads is only 1.8, whereas in states where the acreage value is more than $20 the average of improved roads is 9 per cent of the total mileage.

There are records which show that roads have increased the value of farm lands from 50 to 500 per cent. It has been ascertained by a dozen railroads through their land and industrial departments that farms through which good roads run are enhanced in value from $2 to $9 an acre, and, whether conservative or enthusiastic, all concede that the increase is marked, immediate and inevitable. Suppose a county of 200,000 acres votes bonds, and, placing the enhanced value at only $1.50 an acre, it will be seen that the landowners thus benefitted would gain not less than $300,000. If the bond issue amounted to half a million, there would be $100,000 profit at once. The increase in the profit and price of farm products is equally certain and plain. The farmers produce is worth nothing unless it can be placed on the market. Time was in England when food would be rotting in one place, while people suffered for the lack of it in a community a few miles away because it was impossible to transport the products of the farms.

In the countries of Europe, where well nigh perfect roads are the pride of the citizens and the envy and admiration of visiting Americans, most jealous care is constantly given. A careful day by day inspection is made, and every depression is quickly filled and all inequalities rolled or tamped.

I am an earnest believer in federal and state aid and co-operation in building good roads, and I believe that the time is at hand when the government will hit upon some plan whereby it may co-operate with the state and the state with the county in the work. It has been argued that it is unconstitutional. Why should it be more so than the expenditure of money for river and harbor improvements, which often take the form of a private enterprise? As a matter of fact, it has been shown conclusively in congress that so far from being unconstitutional, the government in its very beginning began the construction of good roads and expended more than seven million on the old Cumberland road from Maryland to St Louis, a distance of 500 miles, and the work was only abandoned because there arose a question of authority and responsibility as to who should maintain and repair the road; the states or the government. What does the government do for the farmer? We spend millions annually on the army, a dead loss, though doubtless necessary; we spend some hundred millions on the navy; have spent a half billion on river and harbor improvements. During ten years we spent more than six billion dollars, of which forty-seven million went to the agricultural department; but not a dollar for the promotion of good roads, a common blessing for all the people. During fifty years, in all the vast sum our government has disbursed for one thing and another, not a dollar has been appropriated for roads. And yet the farmers of the county compose the bulk of population, and last year contributed to the national wealth some eight billions of dollars. The one horse farmer around behind the hill miles from town forms the foundation of the nation, and what has the government done for him? Nothing. The burden is upon him, he foots the bills; and the government takes his money and spends it on everything under the sun by the millions, on everything but on what affects him mostly—roads.

WHAT IT IS FOR

Porpose of the Exhibition at Chicago Next Winter

National Movement to Show What Can be Done With the Various Lands

E. T. Perkins, chairman of the advisory committee of the United States land and irrigation exposition, while in Washington, D. C., the other day, made the following statement regarding the purpose and work of the exposition.

"The idea is to exploit the lands of this country. The people of the United States will be given an opportunity of learning what chances there are for establishing homes on the waste and rocky lands of New England, on the swampy lands of Florida and Louisiana, on the dry farming lands of western Kansas and Nebraska and eastern Colorado, or on the irrigated lands of the west. It is a national movement and not local in any sense of the work.

"The space on the main floor of the Coliseum is being sold at $1.50 a square foot, which includes all decorations.

"In the annex there is to be a lecture room with a seating capacity of 250 people and there will be half-hourly lectures with colored lantern slides and moving pictures by various experts of the government on the particular work of their bureau.

"This exposition conducted on these broad and liberal lines, will be most instructive to the entire people of the United States and should be a forerunner of a permanent exposition established in Chicago, so near the center of population."

DROWNED IN PINE LAKE

Detroit Man Vietim of Accident Sunday Morning

Was Son-in-law of H. H. Smith of Hayes Township.

—G. H. Cogger, aged thirty-one, son-in-law of H. H. Smith, a prominent farmer of Hayes township, was drowned in Pine Lake near Brooks' dock, about noon Sunday.

Mr. Cogger, whose home was in Detroit, where he is connected with the Detroit Canning Company, with his wife and three-year-old son, was spending a few days at the home of Mr. Smith. Sunday Mr. Cogger went bathing in the lake near Brooks' dock. Ney Smith, son of H. H. Smith, was sailing in a boat belonging to Frank B. Brooks of Iowa, who is spending the summer at his home at that point. Mr. Cogger had started ashore while Mr. Smith was sailing to meet him. Mr. Brooks, in the meantime, was standing on the dock watching the men in the water. Mr. Smith's hat blew into the water and while he was engaged in attempting to recover the same, they temporarily lost sight of Mr. Cogger, and whether he started to swim to the hat or not is unknown. When they again looked for him he had disappeared. Word was sent to the life saving station in this city and a dredging party was sent out, the body being recovered Monday night and brought to this city where it was sent to South Lyon for burial.

DIED SUDDENLY

Mrs. George A. McCartney Wife of Former Courier Editor

At Her Home in Central Lake Thursday Morning August 12.

Mrs. Alta M. McCartney, wife of George A. McCartney, editor of the Central Lake Torch, died suddenly at her home in that village, Thursday morning of apoplexy.

Alta M. Wilcox was born in Southern Michigan in 1870, coming to Petoskey with her parents in infancy, where she lived the greater portion of her life. She was married at an early age to Morton A. Pelton, who was accidentally killed about ten years ago in a paper mill in Watervliet. Three children were the result of this marriage, Mrs. Charles L. Ball of Mackinaw, Mrs. F. R. Temple of Columbus Ohio, and Morton A. Pelton of Central Lake. November 17, 1907, she was married to George A. McCartney, who at that time was connected with the COURIER, of which he was the former editor, and moved with her husband, to Central Lake the fall following.

For ten years after the death of her first husband, Mrs. McCartney was the bread-winner of her family proving that sterling character which endeared her to her many friends. She leaves besides her husband and children, two sisters and one brother, Miss Irene Wilcox, Mrs. Gertrude Edwards and Arthur Wilcox of Petoskey, where the funeral was held Saturday Rev. W. J. Wilson officiating. Many beautiful floral tributes were received from numerous friends and fraternal organizations in Central Lake, Petoskey and this city.

ARE BUILDERS OF GOOD ROADS

Three-fourths Million Dollars Expended Last Year

BY THE PEOPLE OF WEST MICHIGAN

In the Improvement of the Highways of this Region

Charlevoix County Spent $23,859.83—Several Counties Have Miles of State Reward Roads

The western Michigan people understand the value of good facilities for the interchange of ideas and products. They know the importance of the means for easy communication. They are familiar enough with history to appreciate the fact that the high water marks of civilization have always been made at times when the opportunities for the exchange of thoughts and commodities were greatest and these high water marks were always made by people who took advantage of every opportunity of touching elbows with the rest of the world. The mere mention of imperial Rome and her wonderful roads is enough to prove the argument.

The people of western Michigan are already road builders. They expended nearly three-quarters of a million dollars last year for the purpose of improving their wagon roads. This year they are doing even more. They intend that it shall be like rolling down hill to get the products of the soil from the farms to the shipping stations. Their expenditures for highway purposes last year were as follows:

Kent	$100,825.18
Muskegon	78,516.16
Ottawa	71,082.01
Oceana	43,515.00
Wexford	42,737.55
Manistee	42,159.76
Newaygo	40,175.58
Mason	39,426.57
Emmet	30,467.22
Mecosta	30,339.90
Antrim	32,213.36
Osceola	29,005.50
Kalkaska	28,633.82
Charlevoix	23,859.83
Missaukee	20,218.98
Grand Traverse	18,825.87
Benzie	18,397.26
Leelanau	13,463.72
Lake	10,155.55
Total	$570,549.99

The state of Michigan some years since, realizing that good wagon roads would greatly help to develop its rural sections and thus the entire state, began to offer a bounty for all roads coming up to an established standard. Most of the western Michigan counties have taken advantage of the state's generosity and have earned state funds to help them with their better roads campaigns. The several amounts secured by the different counties up to January 1st last were as follows:

Mason	$10,910.00
Oceana	9,999.00
Muskegon	9,647.00
Manistee	8,717.00
Kalkaska	7,922.60
Kent	6,800.00
Antrim	5,951.00
Osceola	3,582.00
Mecosta	1,978.00
Benzie	1,502.00
Grand Traverse	510.00
Wexford	501.80
Lake	500.00
Total	$67,019.00

WILL BE A HUMMER

Secretary Nicholas Planning a Record Breaking Fair

Many Special Free Attractions—Improvements to the Grounds

The county fair promises to be a hummer this year. Secretary A. B. Nicholas Jr., is hustling every minute to make it a huge success. He informs us that horsemen are allready asking for reservations, the increase in size of the purses proving a strong attraction. Many special free attractions are planned the chief of which will be Major R. H. Hendershot, the original "Drummer Boy of Rappahannock," and son, the world's greatest lifer and drummer. Mr. Nicholas is also planning a huge game of button, button, who's got the button, which will prove one of the biggest stunts ever pulled off. Watch for the program.

The grounds have been improved by the setting of posts in the center of the field which will accomodate about three hundred teams.

The premium list has been thoroughly revised and will soon be ready for distribution. Anyone desiring a copy should address Secretary Nicholas at East Jordan.

MOVING PICTURES

The Manufacture of Films is Very Fascinating.

The making of moving picture films as described in the September number of Popular Mechanics is an interesting process from start to finish. The article, which is well illustrated, states:

"Every feature of the regular theater finds its counterpart in the huge glass studio of the moving picture company. The producers have a stock company of 20 or 30 actors whose names never appear on a program, but whose productions are witnessed by some million people daily. In addition there are regular stage managers, producers, dramatists, carpenters, artists, electricians and the "prop" boys. For some subjects, special scenery must be painted, or a unique room must be constructed and both the artist and the stage carpenter are used. Also the lighting effects must be different or unusual in other subjects and the electrician must show his ability. And while these people are performing their duties, the actors and actresses are going through motions that are being recorded in the camera, the rate being 16 pictures to the foot."

The Majestic offers the following bill, the coming week: Thursday night, Besley & Williams, the banjoist and the soubrette, also Holden, the laugh provoker. Friday and Saturday Moore & St. Clair sketch artists. Monday and Tuesday Butler & LeMar, Evelyn Diamond, also F. C. Cragg in a bicycle act. Change of motion pictures every night.

Pomona Held Successful Meeting at Maple Grove

tion. D. E. McClure Delivered Principal Address—Will Assist in Work of Development Bureau—A Busy Session.

Charlevoix Pomona Grange met with Maple Grove grange Thursday. The rain the night before made the day an ideal one and the patrons began arriving early from all parts of the county, representatives being present from all the townships in the county, on the mainland, except two.

The forenoon session was called to order by Worthy Master Ward, who announced that beyond filling the vacancies in the staff of officers nothing further would be done until after dinner. After dinner the program as arranged by the lecturer, was taken up, Worthy Master Stroud of Maple Grove, delivered a hearty address of welcome, which was responded to by Henry Black, the veteran treasurer of Pomona. Brother D. E. McClure, state speaker gave the principal address of the day taking for his subject "The Strength and Weakness of Organization," Brother McClure was at his best and at the close the patrons were still anxious for more.

Brother D. S. Payton explained the plans of the Development Bureau and asked the co-operation of the patrons. A committee was appointed to visit the granges in each district for the purpose of securing the best of our farm products and all available information which will advance the interests of Charlevoix County.

The committee on Pomona granges reported that the master be instructed to go ahead and make arrangements for the transportation of five hundred patrons, from this county, to the meeting of State Grange; that any grange desiring a special meeting of Pomona notify the master and that the annual meeting of Pomona be held after the meeting of State Grange. Report was adopted.

The committee on Good of the Order recommended that secretarys report their meetings to the COURIER. On reports of subordinate granges, that South Arm grange be declared the banner grange of the county. Both reports were adopted.

The committee on subordinate granges made a comprehensive report in regard to lecture work which will be found in the grange department. Reports from subordinate granges indicate a membership at the close of last quarter, of nine hundred with property valued at eleven thousand dollars.

In the evening the degree of Pomona was conferred on a class of thirty-seven, the Marion Center crack degree team doing the work. This was a record-breaking class, and their names follow: Orson Cook, John Gray, Richard Lewis, Julia Lewis, W. J. Smith, J. C. Wallace, Blanche Wallace, Fred J. Rice, E. W. Coulter, Ella Kane, Grace Sterner, Rob Minier, Iva Lewis, Neil Kemp, Georgia Scroggie, Otto Stott, George Scott, George Shearer, Josephine Stott, May Webster, Ney Perry Smith, Addie Howe, John Price, H. E. Gilbert, Carl Shearer, Lillian Bartholomew, Alva VanHoesen, Leo Wilson, Platt Webster, Olive Webster, Oscar Tillotson, E. G. Wightman, Mrs. Wightman, Frank Kane, Arthur Wooden, Edward Couch. The next meeting will be held with Pine Lake grange in October, date to be announced later. N. P. Hull, master of the State grange will be the state speaker.

Maple Grove grange, while one of our newer granges, is composed of hustlers and proved their ability to entertain Pomona by the good meals they gave them as well as the splendid music furnished during the session.

Films developed and pictures finished at the Ivy Drug Store. All work guaranteed. 33-t-1.

BIG ENTRY LIST RECEIVED.

New York, Philadelphia and Many Western and Canadian Clubs Well Represented—All Races One Mile and a Quarter—Middle States Event.

Great preparations are being made for the thirty-seventh annual regatta of the National Association of Oarsmen on the Detroit river, Aug. 6 and 7, and already the oarsmen of the country are turning their attention to winning one of the much coveted medals.

There will be a small entry list from around Boston, but the New York, Philadelphia, western and Canadian clubs have more than made up for it, and, to say the least, the entry list is one of the largest ever received.

With Cary Faulkner of the Riversides, Boston, eliminated from the association singles, there is every reason to believe that Howard Murphy of the St. Josephs will be induced by Captain Wardwell of the H. A. A. to enter. Murphy was not seen at his best in the rough water at the late regatta in Boston, and those in a position to know say that he was covering the course very close to ten minutes.

He has the youth and strength to make a good sculler and has always shown speed. In Springfield, Mass., they are trailing Warnock and the double, Fitzgerald and Brosnahan, for the national, and so far these appear to be about the only entries from this section of the country.

The New York A. C. will send the two Miller brothers for the association and championship singles, and they will also send a senior double, four and eight. The Harlem club of New York will send its big four and Fred Shepheard in the championship singles. The big sailor sculler is said to have developed speed the past spring, and Jack Nagle predicts big things for him, even to beating O'Neil of Halifax and Durando Miller of the N. Y. A. C.

The Minnesota Boat club crew, coached by an old Yale oarsman and which rowed so well at Springfield last season, is again on the water, as is the Detroit crew, under the care of Vivian Nickalls, the English amateur.

To the Detroits and Minnesotas this country will have to look, for the Canadians are to swoop down in great numbers both from Toronto and the northwest and will make a big try to make a clean sweep of the important

DURANDO MILLER, CRACK OARSMAN OF THE NEW YORK A. C.

The different clubs in Philadelphia are planning what crews will be sent to the national regatta and to the middle states regatta in New York on Labor day. This latter will attract practically the full strength of the Schuylkill Navy, but the national will also draw several entries from this city.

The Quaker City Barge club will send to Detroit the intermediate eight oared crew which was beaten by the West Philadelphia eight in the people's regatta recently. This eight will also row at New York on Labor day, as will the Smith brothers in the junior doubles. H. Smith in the junior singles and probably a junior octoped the personnel of which has not yet been determined.

The Vesper club will probably send the senior eight oared crew which won in the people's regatta to Detroit for the national regatta and later to New York for the middle states regatta.

The West Philadelphia Boat club may send to Detroit its intermediate eight oared crew which won in the people's regatta, while Allison, another winner, will likely compete in the association singles. The eight and Allison will also go to New York, as will a double with Blair at bow and Otterson at stroke.

The events for the national regatta at Detroit are as follows:

Quarter mile dash, senior; single scull shells, intermediate; association senior single scull; championship senior single sculls; double scull shells, intermediate; double scull shell, senior; octodouble sculls, senior; four oared shells, intermediate; four oared shells, senior; four oared shells, senior international; eight oared shells, intermediate; eight oared shells, senior. All races are one mile and a quarter over a straightaway course.

LOW RATES TO WEST MICH. FAIR

One and One-half One Way Fares For Round Trip to Grand Rapids, Sept. 13-17, on All Roads.

All roads lead to the West Michigan State Fair in Grand Rapids Sept. 13 to 17.

Better still, all roads converging in Grand Rapids are making it worth while to the public to attend the fair by materially reducing their transportation rates for the occasion.

The Michigan Passenger association, which has jurisdiction over the granting of special rates on all roads, has determined upon one and one-half the one way fare for the round trip as the rate which shall prevail during the big fair. Thus a regular fare of $1 each way may be obtained, going and coming, for $1.50, the saving in transportation paying admission to the grounds, no inconsiderable item in the necessary expenses of a trip to one of the greatest of educational exhibits.

This is a reduction over last year's rates, which were one and two-thirds the regular fare, denoting the growing importance of the West Michigan Fair as viewed by the transportation companies.

How to Go to the Fair.

Any railroad that enters or connects with others entering Grand Rapids will take you to the West Michigan State Fair, which will be held Sept. 13-17 this year. Further, they will give you reduced rates, one and one-half times the one way fare for the round trip, a very material saving where the trip is of any distance.

Two roads, the G. R. & I. and the Pere Marquette, maintain a station at Comstock park, directly opposite the upper entrance to the fair grounds. This is an especial convenience for visitors from the north. Passengers from the city are transported to Comstock park with comfort and celerity by the street railway company, whose fair service has ever been marked by splendid management. All roads, in fact, lead to western Michigan's great state fair.

GOLF STARS COMING OVER.

Sixteen Women, Leading Players of Great Britain, Plan Trip.

Sixteen of the leading woman golfers of Great Britain have engaged passage to America to compete in the championship of the United States Golf association at the Merion Cricket club grounds, Philadelphia, in October. Rhona Adair, reputed to be one of the greatest woman golfers in the old world, and Miss Dorothy Campbell, the Scottish woman champion, may accompany the party. It is said, and in that event would become central figures in the tourney.

Other British woman golfers who are mentioned are Miss Maud Titterson, runner up in the Scottish championship; Miss Elizabeth Kyle, Miss Duncan, the Welsh title holder, and Miss May Hezlet, winner of the Irish championship.

It will be the first time that British women have entered an American tourney in such numbers, and the event will have all the marks of an international tournament.

Plans for a match between teams of the American and European golfers already are in the making. It is probable that several western women would compete on such a team, although at present eastern women appear the strongest and no doubt would contribute the lion's share of the competitors on an all American team.

GERMAN SONDER YACHTS.

Trio Selected to Race Yankee Boats For Taft Trophy.

The American sonder yacht owners, many of whom have been tuning up their little boats for the trials in August off Marblehead, Mass., are greatly interested in the selection of the little Wittelsbach V., the Hevella and the Seehund II. by the committee of the Kaiserlicher Yacht club as the German challengers for the Taft and Draper cup races during the latter part of the summer.

Captain Otto Protzen, one of the owners of the Hevella, is very familiar with conditions here, as his boat, the Watusee, not only participated in the first international sonder races in 1906, but captured one of the races from the American fleet, a feat which brought him enthusiastic congratulations by his rivals as well as his fellow countrymen. The other German yachtsmen, Captain Alts of the Wittelsbach V. and Captain Bergholf of the Seehund II., while strangers in American waters, will nevertheless be heartily welcomed.

Weekly contests among the dozen or more American boats have developed some fast yachts, and up to the present time the Crooner, owned by C. F. Adams, Jr., and the Spokane III., owned by Vice Commodore F. Lewis Clark of Spokane, Wash., have proved the fastest.

CHESS EXPERT COMING.

Rubinstein, Russian Champion, Plans to Visit America This Fall.

Jose R. Capablanca, Cuban chess champion, recently victorious over Frank J. Marshall by the score of eight games to one with fourteen drawn, is not to be allowed to rest upon his laurels long. It appears, for already there is a desire on the part of one of the world's greatest players to meet him in single combat in the fall.

A letter has been received by Capablanca's manager from Lodz, Russia, the residence of A. Rubinstein, champion of Russia and the player who tied for first and second places with Dr. E. Lasker in the international tournament at St. Petersburg and subsequently challenged the champion to play off the tie, without being accorded that opportunity, however.

In the letter Rubinstein announces his desire to visit this country next fall and winter and incidentally states his readiness to participate in a match with Capablanca in case the latter should be willing to enter the lists with him. Such a match would be of worldwide interest, exceeding even that of the match with Marshall, which placed the Cuban in the front rank of the great players of the day.

New Record For Roping a Steer.

At a cowboy tournament in Mexico recently Ed Hall of Nutt, N. M., made a new world's record of 21 seconds for roping and tying a wild steer. The best previous time was 21 1-5 seconds.

Twirler Fromme In Good Form.

Pitcher Fromme, who was given to Cincinnati without a murmur, is showing grand ability. Many critics always maintained that this fellow was a star if he had decent luck behind him.

FUTURE SPORT EVENTS

The annual tournament of the National Archery association is to be held in Chicago, Aug. 17 to 20.

The Century Road Club association of Brooklyn is to hold a hundred mile bicycle and motorcycle race Aug. 29.

The national rifle and revolver matches will begin at Camp Perry, O., Aug. 25. It is expected that from 1,000 to 1,500 competitors will participate in the matches.

Indianapolis will entertain the national motorcycle convention Aug. 12 and 13. The races will be held on the motor speedway, which was first opened to the public during the recent balloon races.

Joliet (Ingall park track) will be the scene of the rehabilitation of the thoroughbred in Illinois Aug. 21 to 28. Ostensibly the meeting is to be for light harness horses. The running race will merely be sandwiched in.

Lady Washington Cake.

One egg, one-half cup of sugar, one-half cup of molasses, two-thirds cup of cold water, one-half teaspoonful of soda, piece of butter the size of an egg, two and one-half cups of flour, one heaping teaspoonful of ginger, one heaping teaspoonful of allspice, one level teaspoonful of cloves. Bake in three layers.

Filling—One and one-half cups of granulated sugar, five tablespoonfuls of hot water, the white of one and one-half eggs, one full cup of finely chopped stoned raisins and four marshmallows. Boil the sugar, water and marshmallows together until the mixture hardens when dropped in cold water. Remove crystals from the side of the pan with a damp cloth and pour over the stiffly beaten whites and beat until nearly ready to put on the cake. Then add the chopped raisins and a little vanilla.—Good Housekeeping.

What is not necessary is dear at a penny.—Cato.

THINGS are beginning to warm up for next year's primary campaign. The several candidates are sounding the sentiments of the voters in different portions of the state in regard to their preference for United States senator and governor. The COURIER believes in the future and not in the past. It believes and shall advocate the choice of a candidate who has a future before him and who by his ability shown in national legislative halls, has won the admiration of the people of Michigan until he seems destined to be the first senator chosen by direct vote of the people themselves; who is a leader and not a follower. Of the two candidates now in the field this description only would fit one, Charles E. Townsend of Jackson. For governer of Michigan all over the state the cry goes up, let Chase S. Osborne announce himself and he shall be our candidate, a position which is joined in by the COURIER.

A trip through the country last week demonstrated that Charlevoix county, in this vicinity, is adapted to the raising of beans, several splendid fields being in sight in Hayes Township. A good crop of beans is one of the most profitable crops our farmers can raise. Not only do they receive good returns for the crop itself, but in the pods, they have feed for sheep or cattle equal in value to clover hay. Another source of profit in the crop lies in the condition in which it leaves the soil. After the harvesting of a field of beans, which has been properly cared for, the soil is left in ideal condition for the sowing of small grain crops, after a little work in preparing the seed-bed. While an exhaustive crop on the soil, like all other crops if the land is properly taken care of no elements of fertility is lost and with the cultivation which the crop requires it will be maintained and increased.

THEATRICAL

A Company of Exceptional Ability.

The most phenominal story success of another generation, the "Hidden Hand", of which fifteen millions of copies were sold before the authoress died, reappears as a play, a new dramatization, written by a noted actor, "Eugene Moore. This play will be seen at the Charlevoix Theatre, Monday night August 23. It will be presented by Fred G. Conrad, a well known manager, who has gathered a company of exceptional ability. Mr. Moore is a friend and co-worker of Mr. Conrad and the two have combined their resources to make their production of the "Hidden Hand" the best ever offered. Mr. Moore has avoided the vicious excess of cheap melodramas and Mr. Conrad has furnished the proper kind of company and scenery. This new dramatization is in four acts. Capitola of course remains the heroine. The part of Black Donald, the villian, has been strengthened until it is one of the best roles of its kind in any play. The sunkissed hills and valleys of old Virginia are reproduced and the "folks" are seen living their natural, intense, happy lives. At the Charlevoix Theatre Monday night, August 23

For the first time on any stage Charlevoix Theater goers had Monday night the pleasure of seeing Henry Thorn Hunt's new drama, "Moses, Prince of Egypt," and it was a real pleasure. The company has been well selected and all act their parts in spirit with the intention of the author. Well staged, well played and with special scenery selected with care and study, it will prove to be one of the successes of the stage.

"Vanda Enos and her Girls"

Musical circles are astir over the announcement that "Vanda Enos and her Girls" are to appear at the Charlevoix Theater Saturday evening August 28 and those who have been contending that the future of the city was extremely bright, point to the fact that the securing of this attraction marks the beginning of the new epoch.

"Vanda Enos and her Girls" is a big city attraction. It is unusual and remarkable in the annals of amusements when she appears in a town of this size, and the local manager is to be congratulated for his enterprise in bringing such a meritorious company to this city.

The Detrot Free Press, in speaking of Miss Enos, says: "Her violin solos were enthusiastically received and she was recalled time and time again amid great applause." The Brooklyn Sentinel pronounces her playing "facinating and delightful." The Toledo Blade says she was "on the program for two numbers but was compelled to give six." There are hundreds of press clippings from newspapers of equal prominence which bring the assurance that the attraction is just as it is represented. More convincing still are the reports which come from neighboring cities. The local manager has been assured time and time again, since the attraction was booked, that the company is one at unusual merit, and Miss Enos the most wonderful violin player in the world.

THEATRE TALK NO. 3.

It is doubtful if in all the range and realism of fiction a more popular story was ever written than "The Hidden Hand." MRS. E. D. E. N. SOUTHWORTH was one of the most popular novelists of her time, and it was this famous story that infused new blood into the New York Ledger, one of a number of family story papers that were in great vogue in the early 70's. It is doubtful if there has ever been a literary heroine, a child of an author's fertile brain, who could vie with the captivating madcap CAPITOLA in exciting the admiration of readers, or winning and keeping their hearts. She is bright, spirited, sagacious, so dauntless and yet so innocent and childlike that she takes all readers captive and holds them by her fascinating way clear to the last page of the narrative.

THE WAY TO GET CHEERFUL

EUGENE MOORE, who has dramatized this wonderful book, has built a comedy-drama of sterling worth, retaining the familiar characters of Capitola, Old Hurricane, Black Donald, Mrs. Conliment, and the two exceedingly funny darkey characters, Wool and Pinpit. The play will be presented here in the near future.

Seldom if ever, has a play of this calibre achieved the remarkable success that has been accorded this play. As a dramatic offering it is said to be a gem of the first water, possessing as it does a story of thrilling interest, while its characters are picturesque and human throughout. It is a play for the healthy minded, intelligently inclined audiences and appeals strongly to lovers of stories with a heart interest.

THE COMPANY PRESENTING THIS SPLENDID PLAY is a carefully selected one, being especially engaged for a sixteen months trans-continental tour, at the termination of which an Australian trip is contemplated, negotiations for which are now in active progress and, it is more than likely that the same production and cast will be seen on tour of the principal Antipodean cities, where "THE HIDDEN HAND" HAS NOT YET BEEN PRODUCED.

If you care for a good play, so admirably played that it will give you an evening of thorough enjoyment, you will not be disappointed. "OUR MONEY'S WORTH OR YOUR MONEY BACK." USUAL PRICES WILL PREVAIL.

TO THE EDITOR

Dear Sir: I sent you a poem last week and asked you to publish it in your paper. You declined, and returned it to me with the crushing reply that I was no poet, and that you "could turn out better poetry out of a sausage machine." Now I won't be crushed, and I propose to shew up your attempt to throttle budding genius. Publish this card and the following poem in your column and charge me at your advertising rates. Yours,

JAMES MITCALF RILEY.

THE POEM.

I stood upon the golden sandy Beach,
And with a reed I did write upon the sand these words,
"I love, I love thee!"
But the winds came and the waves rolled mountains high,
And blotted out the fair impress on.
Cruel waves, treacherous sand, fragile reed;
No longer will I trust to thee.
But from the highest mountain peak
I'll pluck the tallest pine,
And, dipped in the crater of Vesuvius,
with it I will write
Upon the high and burnished heavens these words:
"The Hidden Hand" is drawing the largest audiences ever known
And giving an entertainment that will take your breath away."
And I would like to see any dog-gone wave wash that out.

Do you go to the postoffice? Sure!

Well, when you do go, just step in and see POWERS, The Plumber, about that job of plumbing or heating you were thinking of the other day. He comes as near keeping everything you want in the plumbing and heating line as anybody in Northern Michigan. And that isn't all, he knows how to install your job and do it right, and he is no robber either. He charges you enough so that he can do you a good sanitary job and no more. Once he has done work for you, you will want no other plumber.

A newspaper exchange gives this as a definition of what an automobile is: "The automobile is a large iron and rubber contrivance for transforming gasoline into speed, luxury, excitement and obituaries. It consists of a leather upholstered carriage body mounted on fat rubber tired wheels and containing a gizzard full of machinery suffering from different ailments. It is the speediest and most stylish for all transportation known. It has run over 100 miles an hour and costs $1,000 a minute. It can transport seven people from the front porch to the police station, the bankruptcy court or the golden gates in less time than any other known method."

It is a black shiny bug with a needle "bill" that penetrates the potato bug and kills it. Burdick has one in a bottle and feeds it potato bugs on which it thrives.—Manton Tribune.

S. D. Williams, editor of the Modern Maccabee, the newspaper representative of more than 100,000 members of that organization in Michigan, who is something of a student and philosopher in various directions, declares that it looks like a good time for the farmer boy to stay on the farm. He approaches the conclusion which leads him to believe that for some years to come farming will be almost the most profitable industry that man can engage in, through a review of the increased production of gold and silver and through the further fact that this country's cheaper labor is drifting toward the cities. "Unless you have a good and sure thing in the city you had better bide a wee bit with dad on the old farm, for the pendulum is swinging that way," is his concluding admonition.

The number of inmates in the Northern Michigan asylum, at Traverse City, for the month of June, was larger than for the previous month, there being an increase among both sexes. At the close of May a total of 1,396—788 males and 608 females, were receiving care there, but at the end of June this number has been increased to 1,407—793 males and 615 females. A total of 25 new inmates were admitted—16 males and nine females; four males and six females previously confined there were readmitted and two probationers were returned, while one escaped inmate was brought back. These figures were only partially offset by ten males and five females being discharged during the month and the death of six males and four females. During the month of June a total of 1,434 persons were confined in this institution.

While the managers of the Emmet county poor farm were away one day last week, one of the male inmates attempted to commit suicide by hanging himself in the barn. He was discovered by a boy, who immediately informed Mr. Edgerton's married daughter, who had been left in charge, and who is apparently a woman of nerve and muscle, for she soon had the rope untied and let the man down. He did not appreciate the favor, however, and was bound to finish the deed he had started out to do, and put up a hard fight, but the woman took him down and held him till her father's handcuffs were brought by the boy, when she put them on the man by force, marched him to the house and locked him in a room.

Luther N. Gordan and Agnes Beaver settled for a few days outing on Lognn island, near Bellaire, as husband and wife. Gordan represented himself as a wealthy gentleman from Indiana, out for a little outing, traveling and repairing pianos and organs. They took up quarters on the island, and everything went lovely until Gordan broke his leg. Agnes assumed the roll of nurse, and at the same time confided to some other woman that "that feller is not my husband."

Justice was not slow to act. The pair was arrested and Judge Mayne sentenced Gordan to Detroit house of correction for ten months, and the festive Aggie to the county jail until the next term of court. Gordan is 40 and Agnes 20.

Shelley Was a Queer Boy.

The poet Percy Bysshe Shelley as a small boy was an eccentric little being. He used to dress his four sisters to represent fiends, and, filling a fire stove with some inflammable fluid and setting it aflame, he would marshal the diabolical procession to the back door. As a boy at Eton he would watch the livelong night for ghosts and consulted his books how to raise one. His diet in after years was meager enough to bring him weird fancies. Bread became his chief sustenance, and his pockets were well stored with it.

A circle upon the carpet, clearly defined by an ample verge of crumbs, often marked the place where he had long sat at his studies, his face nearly in contact with his book, devouring bread at intervals amid his profound abstractions. Sometimes he ate raisins with it, and his sweet tooth was immense.

POSSIBILITIES IN CORN.

With Special Reference to Several Varieties of Sweet Brands.

It is not too late to consider sweet corn, of which there are several varieties. The illustration gives an idea of the high state of perfection to which any species of corn, sweet or, otherwise, can attain when cultivated with care. The illustration shows the possibilities of the better brands when properly planted and grown under good conditions.

A popular standard of sweet corn is the Early White Cob Cory. The White Cob has all the good qualities of its parent and with the added advantage of having a white cob and pure white grains. The stalks are of medium height, stout and stocky, allowing a close planting. In good land, well fertilized, two ears may be grown to the stalk. It is not only the best early variety, producing marketable ears fifty-five days from germination, but it is also the best corn to plant for the early fall markets.

The Country Gentleman is the best second early variety for the private family as well as for the retail trade. The corn is of delicious quality—considered the sweetest in cultivation. Planted on rich ground and given extra fertilizing and culture, two or three large ears can be grown to the stalk. Stowell's Evergreen is the standard variety both for market and for the private family. The ears are of large size, grains deep, tender and sweet, a vigorous grower, producing one to two large ears to the stalk. It requires fully sixty days to mature marketable ears.

To have a succession plant every twelve days. The ground for sweet corn should be deeply plowed, harrowed and rolled until fine and mellow. Spread well rotted, rich manure in the furrow, then sow 400 pounds of a complete fertilizer to the acre on top of the mixture; mix the manure and phosphate with the earth; drop three grains twenty inches apart in the row. Hubbard squash or crook neck pumpkins may be planted in every fifth row. Give frequent and thorough culture. Two good workings with the hoe should be given. In eastern corn states the varieties referred to are planted as late as the last of July.

FRESHNESS OF FOOD.

Simple Scotch and English Methods For Preservation Explained.

Consul Maxwell Blake, writing from Dunfermline, says of the simple methods used in Great Britain to keep fruit and eggs fresh:

"A correspondent in Stirlingshire writes me that he has recently conducted some successful experiments in reference to the packing of fruit for transit without the aid of refrigeration. His method being simply to pluck the fruit at height of sun, to avoid all adhering dampness, and immediately pack in prepared cases containing granulated sugar. Care must be taken that the sugar utilized for the purpose is also quite devoid of moisture, and the cases should be so constructed as to be as nearly as possible impervious to atmospheric vapors. Both the sugar and the cases, as may be inferred, should be designed for and adapt of constant reuse.

"The great fluctuation in the price of fresh eggs in Great Britain, ranging from 15 cents a dozen in summer to from 60 to 75 cents a dozen in winter and prepared with difficulty even then, give peculiarity to the economical practice of artificially preserving them during the cheap season, the most successful method employed by the householder being as follows:

"Mix together in an earthenware jar nine parts of boiled water, which has been thoroughly cooled, and one part of glass water. Glass water is obtained by fusing two parts of quartz sand with one of sodium carbonate, adding one-tenth part of small coal. Place the cool cleaned eggs into a jar and cover well with the liquid, continually adding sufficient liquid to keep the eggs entirely covered as others are added. Water glass can be purchased in this country from chemists and generally bears on the labels the exact proportion to be used, varying from 5 to 10 per cent. Eggs preserved in this way are less brittle in the shell than those preserved in limewater and will sometimes boil without cracking if a small pin point aperture is made in them."

"The proportions used for the lime preservative in Scotland are twenty gallons of water, four of lime and one of salt. Allow to stand for a few hours, then pour it over the eggs in the same way as the water glass. A little lime should be added from time to time during the period of preservation; otherwise the solution will lose its strength. The eggs preserved in this way become rough and brittle and must be handled carefully when taken out for use.

"The popular method of preserving eggs by cold storage in the United States is not at all general in this country, and it is rather surprising that more has not been done along these lines.

"When eggs are only required to be preserved for two or three months they keep very well packed in dry salt or bran. The meat of the egg may shrink and rattle within the shell when shaken, but its edibility is not impaired. Coating the egg with vaseline or butter will also keep it for a short time, or any application which effectively seals the pores of the shell and excludes air will prolong the freshness of eggs. If it is even momentarily submerged in boiling water the albumen thereby becomes sufficiently coagulated to prevent the entrance of air."

Meal For Hogs.

The following meal mixture for hog feeding is recommended by a contemporary: Oats, finely ground, 50 per cent; barley, finely ground, 20 per cent; shorts, 20 per cent; oilmeal, 20 per cent.

Poultry Pointers.

A cellar cave is the best place for the incubator if it is operated in hot weather.

Even with but a few birds it is worth while to use trap-nests and know which ones are paying their board.

Bath water in abundance is as good for ducks as dust bath for hens. Breeding ducks especially should be amply provided.

Encourage the fowls to follow the plow when breaking the sod. They will pick up many worms and bugs that would otherwise injure the crop planted and convert them into eggs.

More careful attention should be given to the dressing, packing and shipping of poultry on the farm than is generally done. Uniformity is one great thing with market poultry, and generally the most salable is the medium sized bird having a plump and shapely body.

Young turkeys are very delicate and must be handled very carefully in order to raise a good percentage of the brood. They are better cared for when away from the older birds than with them, since the older ones are such inveterate wanderers that many of the little ones are lost.

Plenty of exercise is necessary for little chicks, but it is not best to allow them to run in the tall grass before the dew has dried away. They should be kept in the coop until after 8 a. m.; then they can be turned out and allowed to run. If it is not desirable to allow the hen to run, stretch a long wire and tie the hen to a ring, so she can pass from one end of the wire to the other.

Not more than forty hens should be kept in run. Thirty would do much better. The larger the flock is the sooner they clear off the surface food. During the spring and summer, where fowls have the free range of the farm, there is plenty of room for a large flock, but when fowls are limited in their runs the flocks must be smaller. Unless other conditions are supplied a large flock will eat up the profits.

Milk For Poultry.

All kinds of poultry have a great fondness for either sweet or sour milk. It is a cheap food when properly fed. Separator milk, direct from the factory, mixed with corn chop, makes one of the best foods to fatten old hens. For laying hens and half grown chickens it may be poured into troughs just as it comes from the factory. For young chickens and turkeys it should be made into curds. The milk must be fed with judgment, especially to young turkeys, as all overfeeding will prove fatal. A moderate feed is all right, but too much will cause a loss. Give a small feed of curd mixed with corn chop late in the afternoon.

To Revive Grass.

No top dressing or fertilizer will do more to revive grass than nitrate of soda, and it should be used in combination with materials containing phosphoric acid and potash. A mixture of 150 pounds of nitrate of soda, 150 pounds of acid phosphate and 75 pounds of muriate of potash is recommended. Grass, even in the old meadows, will respond very quickly to this treatment.

Long Handled Tools.

Every farmer should use long handled tools instead of short ones and have his row handles as far apart again as most of them are. The seats on his vehicles should be high enough and deep enough to enable him to sit up straight and not require a humped back.

AIRSHIPS ARE TO RACE

ROY KNABENSHUE AND LINCOLN BEACHEY AT MICHIGAN STATE FAIR.

World's Famous Aviators Will Contest for $5,000 Stakes—No Similar Contest Ever Before Held in the United States.

The Michigan State Fair has arranged for an airship race between Roy Knabenshue, who is known all over the continent for his daring work above the clouds, and Lincoln Beachey, another equally famous aviator, who made successful flights at the Michigan State Fair last fall. This race was brought about in a rather strange manner.

Mr. Beachey happened to be in the city early this week and in a conversation with General Superintendent Doherty the latter casually said:

"Beachey, would you race Roy Knabenshue if the Michigan State Fair offered a purse of $5,000, $4,000 to go to the winner and $1,000 to the loser?"

"Make the offer and see," responded Beachey.

"All right, we'll do it," said Mr. Doherty.

"You can't challenge Knabenshue too quickly for me," replied Beachey.

Mr. Doherty immediately wired Knabenshue at Toledo, and the latter responded so quickly that even Mr. Doherty was surprised.

"Tell Beachey I will race him at the Michigan State Fair or around the world, if he wants to," Knabenshue responded.

The latter was then called to Detroit, and after discussing the preliminaries the contract was signed for the most exciting race that has ever been held in the United States.

Other airship races have been planned, but none like that arranged for the Michigan State Fair. Two years ago a race against time was held in St. Louis, but the aviators did not start at the same moment.

The contest between Mr. Knabenshue and Mr. Beachey will be the real thing. The aviators must start side by side from a given point and rush to the eastward, passing over the grandstand to a large tree two miles away, and on the top of which will be erected a large flag. After circling this tree the ships will return, sailing to the westward until the grandstand is reached.

It is agreed that seven heats shall be run, beginning on the afternoon of Sept. 4 and each afternoon thereafter until Sept. 10. The aviator who wins four of these heats will be awarded $4,000, while the loser will be given $1,000.

It required considerable tact on the part of Mr. Doherty to arrange details satisfactory to both parties. Mr. Knabenshue at first wanted to use the big ship he sailed so successfully last winter in California. Mr. Beachey objected, because his ship is not of the same dimensions. Mr. Knabenshue finally declared that he would build a new ship similar to that owned by Beachey. That settled all difficulty and the contract was signed for the most exciting race ever held in the United States.

It was stipulated in the agreement with these two aviators that they shall give exhibition flights every forenoon during their races, beginning on Sept. 4.

RAILROADS AID EXHIBITORS.

Easy Facilities and Direct Home Shipments Are Granted to Cattlemen and Others Who Are Coming to Michigan State Fair.

The Michigan freight committee, representing the different railroads doing business throughout the state, have recommended new rules governing the shipping of exhibits to the Michigan Fair that will greatly facilitate stock raisers and every one else who plan to contest for premiums.

Under the proposed rules exhibitors are allowed to ship to the first fair, paying full charges one way, then in the next fair and receive credit for half the money paid. After he has made his circuit of the fairs, he may ship by the nearest route home, paying only half rates. Heretofore exhibitors have been compelled to pay full rates one way and then return free, providing they returned over the route from whence they started, which was usually inconvenient and consumed considerable extra time. According to the new plan they will pay half fare each way and return home by the nearest route.

These proposed rules are due largely to the efforts of I. H. Butterfield, secretary of the Michigan State Fair, who first suggested the plan in an effort to save the delay and expense of exhibitors. The scheme no doubt will largely increase the exhibits at the fair in Detroit, which when it opens on Sept. 2, will be one of the largest of the kind ever held in the State of Michigan.

FAIR PROSPECTS ENCOURAGING.

Everything Points to the Greatest Exhibition Ever Held in Michigan; Sec'y Butterfield Pleased; Grounds More Beautiful Than Ever.

Secretary Butterfield of the Michigan State Fair, which opens this year on Sept. 2, says that never were the prospects so encouraging as during the present year and he has been connected with the executive department of this institution for the past thirty years. Entries are coming in earlier, and more of them, than any time in his history. Interest in this big fair seems to increase each year and the great difficulty now is to take good care of all the exhibits with the present facilities. It was thought when the present buildings were completed they would answer all purposes for years to come, but there is already a lack of buildings.

As in former years a complete catalogue will be issued, containing a list of all the entries, the number, the owners, location, attractions, race program, and in fact everything that anyone would want to know who attends the fair.

BRAZIL TO SHOW PRODUCTS.

South American Country Becomes Interest in the Michigan Fair; Coffee, Lumber and Various Other Things Exploited.

The government of Brail will make an exhibit at the Michigan State Fair, which opens this year on Sept. 2 and continues until Sept. 10. Clinton D. Smith, of the Agricultural College at Piracicaba, has shipped to Detroit a great collection representing various products produced in that southern country. It consists of about everything grown in the tropics and will be of great educational value to every one who attends the State Fair. Brail is a great coffee country and furnishes many countries of the world with a fine product in this line.

Great varieties of this berry will be seen in the Brazilian exhibit. The berry will be shown hanging to branches, in various stages of maturity. The lumber display will also be interesting. Mr. Smith in his letter to Secretary Butterfield says:

"The Brazilian exhibit will consist of the important kinds of lumber produced in the State of St. Paul. To keep this exhibit within bounds, yet to show the quality of timber, the specimens are relatively small and shown in the rough. It contains one hundred kinds of wood which the Michigan people will want before many years are past. After the fair is over this collection is to be sent to the Michigan Agricultural college.

"The exhibit also contains the various kinds of coffee grown in Brazil. This will require some expense to get into shape but I authorize Prof. Taft to attend to this and the Brazilian government will pay all bills. The State of St. Paul is producing as good coffee as can be found anywhere in the world, but it is also raising some very poor stuff. Most of the latter is kept for home consumption, but it is included in the samples. This coffee collection ought to be of value to Detroit merchants, and I suggest that it be kept in your chamber of commerce just to show what can be obtained here. With the coffee exhibit are samples of the soil, rich in iron, yet not poisonous to vegetation. I am also sending branches of coffee trees laden with fruit so the people can see just how the thing looks in nature."

LOW RATES FOR STATE FAIR.

Michigan Passenger Association Decides to Sell Tickets to Detroit for One and One-Half Fare, Round Trip.

The Michigan Passenger Association, which passes on the matter of granting special rates over railroads, has decided this year to give a rate to the Michigan State Fair, which opens in Detroit on September 2 and continues until September 10, of one and one-half fare for the round trip from any given point in the state. This rate will be good all through the exhibition and the tickets thus purchased may be used on returning as late as September 11.

The railroads, through this concession, will aid largely in swelling the crowds at the state fair and making it one of the greatest successes in the history of Michigan.

The management of the State Fair is now hard at work perfecting plans and arranging for the big fall event. Concessions are still being booked and some of the finest attractions to be secured will be seen at this fair.

There seems to be a strife on among the majority of states this year to make the annual exhibits more interesting and attractive than usual. Michigan has absorbed the same spirit and by the aid of enthusiastic officials, the event in Detroit will be worth traveling the entire length of Michigan to witness.

With cheap passenger rates and liberal shipping facilities for exhibitors, the management of the Michigan State Fair is planning for a great display the coming fall. It is suggested that persons who contemplate a trip this summer, defer such pleasure until fair week, take advantage of the low railroad rates and attend the big exhibit.

The offer of $1,500 in prizes by the Michigan State Fair for the automobile races has brought out a flood of requests for entry blanks from fast drivers all over the country. Scores of automobile manufacturing concerns are going to enter cars. Among the first to make their entries are the Chalmers, Buick and Maxwell concerns.

These races will be the real thing, and records no doubt will be broken. The State Fair management plans to make this event one of the most exciting of the many attractions booked for this year. The races will be held two days—Friday and Saturday, Sept. 3 and 4.

THE BROOKLYN TEAM.

Showing of Trolley Dodgers This Season Hard to Understand.

CLUB HAS GOOD PLAYERS.

Lumley, Jordan and Lennox All Stars In Their Positions—Team Has One of Strongest Pitching Staffs In the National League.

By TOMMY CLARK.

What is the trouble with the Brooklyn National league club? This question has been asked many times this season. On day the team plays championship ball and the next like a bunch of amateurs. Brooklyn should have a better season this year. Injuries did help to put Dooley's men out of the running for awhile, but the team should have been fortified.

Just what is really the matter with the club is, as Mr. Kipling is wont to remark, another story. You can't tell that from the grand stand. All you can see from that edge of vantage is that in nine games out of ten they play without system and without spirit.

Manager Harry Lumley, it would seem, either has no confidence in himself or else he does not care. If his indifference is not due to some personal inability, but to some strained relations with the owner, then it's up to Mr. Ebbets.

Baseball in these days is like any other industry. It requires a single head that is a directing agent. No theater or manufactory will thrive without a man at the helm who makes things hum. Doubtless the Brooklyn club is making a nice income and perhaps the owners are satisfied with that, but the magnates of a big baseball club have a duty to the public.

Brooklyn has an abundance of good baseball material on hand. The team is stronger individually than St. Louis, Cincinnati, Boston or Philadelphia. All that is needed to make the Trolley Dodgers a first division team is a hustling and aggressive leader with a free hand. Give McGraw, Jennings, Clarke or Bresnahan the club and either one of the four would have the Brooklynites up fighting with the leaders.

Look at the wonders Bresnahan has worked with the St. Louis Cardinals. Last year the club started off in last place and finished there. With a team weaker than it was the season before "Fighting Roger" is making the stronger clubs sit up and take notice. Give him the players Brooklyn has and he will come pretty near capturing the banner.

Brooklyn has the material for a first division team, there is no doubt about it. Take the players separately. Billy Bergen is one of the best catchers in the league. Few base runners can take any liberties on the bases with him behind the bat. Outside of Chance and Tenney, Jordan is the best first sacker in the National league. Alperman at second is a fairly good player. Hummell played short in many games this season, but "Silent John" belongs in the outfield. "Little Tommy" McMillan is a promising shortstop and with a little more experience will develop into a star. Lennox at third is one of the great finds of the season. He covers considerable ground and has a splendid throwing arm. Manager Lumley in right is one of the best outfielders in the league. Burch in center is a good one. Clement, who has been playing in left the past month or so, will not do. His judgment of fly balls is very poor; besides, his throwing arm is also under suspicion. Lumley should play Hummell in left. He is a sure catch and a good thrower.

The Trolley Dodgers have about the best pitching staff in the National league. Bucker, Bell, McIntyre, Hunter, Scanlon, Wilhelm and Pastorius present as formidable an array of twirling talent as any other club can produce. Besides being star box artists, nearly all of them are good batters. The team has three men who can bat around .300—Lumley, Jordan and Lennox. Alperman, Hummell, McMillan and Burch can also wallop the ball.

What Brooklyn needs is a leader who will make the men play with the never say die spirit. One can easily see where Brooklyn lacks in contrasting its team with the New Yorks. Lose or win, McGraw is out there all the time, the operating head of an efficient machine. He gets the most there is out of his men. If he does not happen to have the material this season to win the pennant he proved to his patrons at least that he is doing his best, which cannot be said of Lumley.

The Brooklyn manager is a fine fellow personally and a skilled ball player. But why isn't he out there like Clarke, Chance, Griffith, McGraw, Bresnahan and Jennings? These men are older than Lumley and not so spry as they used to be. Nevertheless every game finds them going into a minute, actively participating on the coaching line or in actual play. This kind of fellows win pennants.

How Much Gold Can a Man Carry?

If a man of average muscular strength, a strong man and a very strong man were told they might have as much gold as they could carry a mile—

The average man might carry 100 pounds of gold a mile. He would have over $20,000 if he succeeded.

The strong man could perhaps get to the end of his mile with 150 pounds of gold. He would have about $30,750.

The very strong man could possibly struggle to the end of his mile with 200 pounds. That would give him about $53,000.

The committee on subordinate granges at the Maple Grove Pomona presented the following suggestions for subordinate granges.

1 Get as many as possible to take part in the lecturer's hour—this may be done by having the children sing together. Ask the lecturer to encourage and make the diffident, backward and poor members feel at home and take part in the work.

2 Have an author's program—have members give quotations from this author—have some member give a paper on this author—have some tell the story of the author's life—have recitations—try such a program with our Michigan poets.

3 Call the lecture-hour promptly on time—encourage the lecturer by every member of the grange accepting the duty assigned. Do not discourage the lecturer by refusing to help.

4 Have programs centered on some anniversary days of poets, Whittier, Longfellow, Lincoln, Feb. 12, Washington, Feb. 22—have Christmas program—have Labor program—any of these programs may be arranged on some night nearest the anniversary day—have patriotic programs with patriotic songs—have a General Grant anniversary program.

5 Some where near June 14 have Flag-Day program—write Brother DuBois for program.

6 Have a corn program—write congressman of your district for Farmer's Bulletin on corn—get all of them.

7 Have a school program once a year in county grange—have the commissioner of schools suggest a program.

8 Make the grange a social center, and have bright, cheery, inspiring meetings to get and hold the young folks.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange No. 815 met in regular session Saturday evening August 7th with Worthy Master St. John presiding. After vacancies in offices were filled we proceeded with the business of the order. Rae K. Milford was balloted on and accepted into the order. Owing to the death of Walter Murphy, the dance which was billed for the 27th was postponed for one month.

Recess, after which lecturer's hour was carried out with songs, recitation and discussion. Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

Our grange has placed an order for fertilizer with the Grange Fertilizer Co. of Detroit, the fertilizers heretofore used having given good results.

Our degree team was unable to be present at Pomona at Maple Grove, but we will endeavor to do better at the special meeting with us in September.

The safest, gentlest, most pleasant and in every way desirable bowel regulator for children, as well as for adults, are Rexall Orderlies. They are eaten like candy. They soothe and invigorate the delicate intestines, making them strong and active. They relieve constipation and overcome the necessity of the regular use of laxative. If they don't do as we claim we will return the price paid us for them. Two sizes, 10c. and 25c.

Grateful Rejected One.

"I am truly sorry to give you pain, Mr. Hankinson," said the young lady, "but please do not allude to this subject again. I can never be your wife."

"That is your final answer, Miss Irene?"

"It is."

"Nothing can induce you to change your decision?"

"My mind is finally and unalterably made up."

"Miss Irene," said the young man, rising and looking about for his hat, "before coming here this evening I made a bet of $5 with Van Perkins that you would say 'No!' to my proposal. I have won. It was taking a risk, but I was dead broke, Miss Irene," he continued, his voice quivering with emotion, "you have saved a despairing man from the fate of a suicide and won the lifelong respect and esteem of a grateful heart. Brilliant Alpine Flora.

Comparisons made by Dr. Dufour show that the superior purity and splendor of floral colors in the Alps are not imaginary or a mere effect of contrast. The cells, lines and yellows of the mountain blossoms are much more intense than those of the same species of flowers grown at ordinary levels. The leaves also have a deeper and richer green, and microscopic examination shows that chlorophyl is more abundant in Alpine plants than in those of the plains. One fact which seems quite natural, yet is very interesting, is that on the mountain plants have relatively small aerial organs and larger subterranean ones. Thus a graceful flower which in the plains is seen nodding at the summit of an aspiring stem will be found high on the mountain slopes hugging the soil, anchored by comparatively heavy roots and bursting up with accentuated beauty from the ground.—Pearson's Weekly.

KRAUSE, PITCHING SENSATION

Philadelphia Young Southpaw Now Leading Twirler in American League.

Another picture hangs in the hall of baseball fame. Harry Krause has won undying fame in the great pastime of a great nation. From dull obscurity to the highest pinnacle of public admiration has he curved a path, all within the short period of a twelvemonth. Of his future time alone holds the key. Of his grand achievement not even time can rob him. He has won his spurs. Should his deterioration even prove as meteoric as his rise to fame he would yet stand boldly out as one of the greatest diamond sensations of history.

Krause won ten consecutive victories as a big league pitcher this year. The virtue of the accomplishment, which has been seldom bettered in baseball history, lives chiefly in the fact that the record has been set on the youngster's first appearance in fast company. Furthermore, Krause is a left handed pitcher. His victorious debut explodes the time honored fallacy that southpaws are of necessity strictly in and outers.

Krause himself lays his success to the coaching of Connie Mack and Eddie Plank, almost perfect control and large slathers of luck. But he is modest. It is true that he appears to have very little on the ball, but somehow or other he is seldom hit safely, and his record of bases on balls compares favorably with that of any other pitcher in either of the big leagues.

In a way Krause was lucky even to join the Athletics. Connie Mack located him out on the Pacific coast late in the 1907 campaign. Mack had made a few derogatory remarks about Silk O'Loughlin's ability as an umpire after that famous 9 to 9 tie between the Athletics and the Tigers and, rather than take a call from the powers that be at the winter meeting, decided to take a trip to California.

While there he was tipped off about Krause. He saw him work and signed him, with orders to report in time to take the 1908 training trip. He caught on and was taken on the first western trip. His first chance came at St. Louis. He started fairly well, but was nervous, and the Browns batted him out of the box.

Mack still had all kinds of faith in him, but saw he needed more seasoning and shipped him to Harrisburg, of the Tri-state league. There he won seventeen out of twenty-one games and was yanked back to Philadelphia.

JOSS HAS NEW CURVE.

Cleveland's Crack Twirler's "False Rise" May Prove a Puzzler.

A new curve has come to light. It is called the "false rise ball," and its owner is Eddie Joss of the Cleveland Americans. Joss delivers the ball with his arm at full length. Just before the sphere reaches the batter its downward progress is suddenly arrested and it shoots horizontally across the plate. The latter, as a rule, strikes under the ball and cannot very easily distinguish it from a drop, as its course is somewhat similar to a down twist until it reaches the plate.

Pitcher Hart's Long Career.

Hart, who is pitching for Little Rock of the Southern league, is in his twenty-fourth year of professional baseball. He is the leading pitcher in the league, with eight victories out of ten games.

Parent Still a Speedy Base Runner.

Freddy Parent, the Chicago American shortstop, is surprising the oldest inhabitant by his fast running.

BASEBALL FOINTERS

Cincinnati's new pitcher, Laudermilk, is even taller than big Larry McLean.

Third Baseman Purtell of the Chicago Americans is a terror in killing bunt hits.

Manager Cantillon of Washington seems to have picked up a likely hitter in Ledell.

Pitcher Arellanes of the Boston Americans is not only a willing worker, but a great ball player.

Elmer Flick has braced up the Cleveland's wonderfully. Since the dandy fine outfielder has returned to the game the Sooners entry has been coming rapidly.

"If war is what General Sherman said it was," observed Manager Murray of the Phillies the other day, "heaven only knows what managing a losing team is."

THEATRE TALK NO. 4.

THERE IS ALWAYS A SWEET FEELING OF REST, contentment and simplicity in the far away country villages and cross-road hamlets far from the hum and bustle of city life. There is a truthfulness that admits of open cheer and hospitable welcome. A newcomer is looked upon as a friend until proven otherwise. Each individual in the hamlet knows the movements of his friends and neighbors. The rugged life led by the inhabitants of the mountain districts of old Virginia admits portrayals which evolve themselves into the acme of stage pictures.

"THE HIDDEN HAND" IS A HOMELIKE, OLD FASHIONED STORY OF OLD VIRGINIA written by Mrs. Southworth and appeared as a serial in the New York Ledger when that famous story paper was riding on the top wave of success and prosperity. The story has been dramatized by Eugene Moore and will be presented in this city before many days. Both play and company have received unstinted praise from both public and press. It is so seldom in this up-to-date world of ours that a homelike and interesting drama with a taste of the hills a real flavor of the woods and valleys is seen, that "THE HIDDEN HAND" comes as a relief. Concerning this production the Cincinnati Enquirer of a recent date made these few pleasing remarks:

HOW TO GET A HAPPY FEELING

"THE HIDDEN HAND" COMPANY appeared last night in this city in time for the opening at the Lyceum Theatre, where they were kindly welcomed by a large and appreciative audience. The motif of the play deals with the good old times in old Virginia with darkies, laughter, music and a love story with the inevitable villain to overcome. "THE HIDDEN HAND" COULD NOT FIND FAVOR UNLESS PRESENTED BY A CAPABLE CAST. It is pleasant to note that those who took part gave a good account of themselves and the earnestness with which the different actors entered into their work gave a distinct value to the character of the play. There was enough action in the play to make it interesting and thrilling and the scenery showing some interesting spots in Virginia is well worth seeing."

NEW FISH AND GAME LAWS

As Passed By the Last Session of Legislature

WILL BECOME EFFECTIVE NEXT MONTH

Principal Change Increase in Size of Mesh of Nets

Closed Season is Cut Down—Fishermen Given Two Years to Use up Old Nets—Other Points

Beginning next month, when the new fish and game laws become effective in Michigan, commercial fishing interests will undergo a complete revolution. The new law changes the size of net mesh and provides for several innovations in equipement not carried by the commercial fishers tnday.

Because the change in equipment is so sweeping the law gives the fisherman two years in which to use up their old nets. At the expiration of that period every net will have to be in accordance with specifications of the statute.

While the new law puts something of a hardship on the fishing interests and gives the game warden's department of the state better facilities for enforcing the law and detecting its violators, the fishermen are not entering any objection. The new law clears up some difficulties encountered by the fishermen in conflicting sections of the statute.

The law is a compromise of the demands of the fishermen and the game warden's department. The commercial fishers of the Great Lakes are awakening to the necessity of preserving the fish and are making less objection to the strict enforcement of fair laws. There was little difficulty getting them to agree with the demands of the game warden at the last session of the legislature and the new law was the means of getting these constitutional enemies together for the first time in the history of the state.

The principal change provided by the law calls for an increase in the legal size of the mesh nets. This is reduced from four and one-fourth to four and one-half inches In the existing law the sections relating to the legal size of fish taken and the legal size of mesh used, are mismates, in other words, a legal net would capture great quantities of undersized fish. The fishermen wanted the new law to provide that all the fish taken in legal nets might be marketed, but this, the game warden pointed out, would defeat the whole purpose of the law. So a compromise was agreed upon by which the mesh is made larger. The size of legal fish taken has been changed from one and three-fourths pounds, dressed for whitefish and one and one-fourth pound, dressed for lake trout, to one and one-half pounds in the round for trout and two pounds in the round for whitefish. This was in accordance with the demand of the commercial fishing interests.

Each fishing vessel is obliged to hold a state license under the new law and each of its nets must be marked by buoys bearing the license number of its owner or the fishing vessel. This, obviously, is to facilitate identification of nets. It simplifies the work of the game warden and makes it an easy matter to identify and prosecute the owner of any net of illegal size or illegally set. That the fishermen readily agreed to this feature of the law is in itself evidence that they are determined to lend their efforts to the perpetuation of fish in the lakes.

The new law cuts down the closed season. Under the present statute, fish may not be taken between Oct. 31 and Dec. 15. Under the new law the closed season will be only from Nov. 15 to Dec. 15. But during the spawning season, each fishing vessel will be obliged to carry an extra man, whose work it shall be to strip and fertilize the spawn as fish come in. This will be turned over to the state and will do away with a lot of the expense attached to the work of propagation under the present law. It will give the fishermen more opportunity to market fish at a season of the year when they are comparatively scarce and command good market prices. All spawn not needed by the state will have to be deposited on the natural spawning beds of the fish in the lakes.

Chief Deputy Game Warden Charles Hoyt is perhaps one of the best authorities on commercial fishery in western Michigan. He says, while the new law will work something of a temporary hardship upon the fishermen, it will react to their benefit in the long run. He has found no criticisms of the new law among the fishers and is inclined to the belief that everyone concerned will be benefited by the new statute in spite of its revolutionary dictation.

FARMER'S PICNIC

Will be Held at Held at Maple Grove Next Saturday

Athletic Sports, Dance and Address by Hon. John C. Ketcham

The members of Maple Grove Grange are making elaborate arrangements for their second annual picnic to be held at their grounds, Saturday. Something doing all the time is the program which they have mapped out.

Hon J. C. Ketcham of Hastings, who is well known as one of Michigans most eloquent speakers, is advertised to deliver the principal address. Mr. Ketcham needs no recommendation to an audience of Charlevoix county farmers, having charmed all who heard him at the East Jordan institute and the Pomona Grange meeting at Marion Center, but the members of Maple Grove particularly desire the attendance of the residents of the cities at this picnic. Other speakers will be Dan McClellan of Horton Bay and Glenn M. DuBois Pomona lecturer and COURIER editor.

All kinds of athletic sports have been arranged for including a fast game of base ball. A dance in the evening will round out a day of pleasure. If you want to see what organized effort on the part of farmers will accomplish, take a day off, go to Maple Grove and see a grange home which is unexcelled by beauty of location by any in Michigan if not in the world.

CLEVER PLAN TO ESCAPE

Discovered Yesterday Afternoon by Jailer Driggett

BY FOLLET AND WOODHUFF

Large Hole had Been Sawed in Floor of Jail

Planned Get-away for Last Night—Had had Tools for Past Six Weeks—Everything Well Planned.

Yesterday n cleverly constructed and well nigh successful escape, from the county jail, on the part of Follet and Woodruff was discovered by Jailer Driggett.

Woodruff and Follett, who were sentenced to long terms last week, were the only two men left in the jail. Yesterday afternoon Woodruff, a trusty who has been confined in jail for the past nine months awaiting trial, borrowed a hammer of Jailer Driggett, claiming he wished to drive down a nail in a chair which had torn his clothes. When Driggett took him the hammer he discovered the bed had been moved in a vacant cell and on making further investigation, found that a hole had been cut in the floor, large enough for a man to get through. On further search a saw was found concealed in Follet's clothes and the following letter written to his wife which shows how carefully the plans were laid and that she had knowledge of the same:

"May, the hole is open and if I can get through I am going tonight but you come over in the morning just the same and if I am gone you can take my clothes home with you. They cannot give me any more, they gave me the full extent of the law. If I cannot get through I will be here. I hope I can get out. I will do my best to stay away so do not worry if I am gone. You will hear from me soon.

Do not cry if I do not get to see you and they should get me again. I will write as soon as I can and then you can send my things to me and if I can get away I will send for you within a year and I can send money to you. Go to Petoskey for your mail every two weeks till they either catch me or I tell you what to do.

Delos.

To my darling May: You have been true to me and been my friend and God will bless you. I am not afraid that you will ever turn back on me for you promised you would stand by me. May, if any night you hear a stone or stick drop on the house, get up, dress, and walk back towards the old hog pen. I will whistle very low, but go right on and I will see you some way. See that no one is watching or following you. I will probably go away then for good till I can get you to me. Read this, then burn it or destroy it anyway so the officers can't get a hold of it.

Delos."

To a representative of the COURIER Woodruff said that he had several opportunities to escape while confined in the jail, but did not wish to abuse the confidence reposed in him by Driggett. He further confessed that he had another saw concealed under his bed and search revealed the same. For the past six weeks the men have been in possession of the tools and only the chance discovery on the part of Driggett prevented the success of their well laid plans.

In Flourishing Condition.

The annual meeting of the board of directors of the Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan counties was held at Petoskey Thursday. All the directors but one were present, and report the company in a very flourishing condition. The old indebtedness has been largely reduced and the expenses have been reduced two thirds. Only three hundred dollars of this year's assessments remain unpaid against two thousand four hundred dollars a few years ago which indicates a superior class of risks.

Knopp Released on Probation—Woodruff Drew From One to Ten Years—Liquor Cases Continued

Our record of the proceeding in circuit court closed last week with the case of the people vs. William Knopp, charged with rape on trial. After being out a short time the jury brought in a verdict of guilty of assault and battery.

The next case was that of the people vs. Luther Delos Follett, charged with a serious crime on the person of his own daughter. Prosecuting Attorney Nicholas appeared on behalf of the people, while the defense was in the hands of Hon. W. S. Mesick of Petoskey and W. A. Seegmiller of Detroit, who stubbornly contested the case, which was very revolting in character. The case was given to the jury after dinner Friday who brought in a verdict of guilty. Judge Davis of Ionia, who presided, sentenced the prisoner to from seven and one half to fifteen years at Ionia prison with a recommended of seven and one-half years. After sentence, Follett confessed to one of the jurors his guilt of the crime charged.

Saturday Judge Mayne sentenced Woodruff convicted last week of obtaining goods under false pretenses to from one year to ten years at Jackson prison, with a recommendation of two years. William Knopp was released on probation. Grant Nelson pleaded guilty of forgery and was released on parole.

All the liquor cases and the cases of the people vs. Hetriek, assault with intent to commit rape; people vs. Barney Kleinhinz and Edith Fry, lewd and lacivinus cohabitation; people vs. Guy McCain, embezzlement; people vs. Ben Williams, forgery were continued. The case of people vs. Jonas Race non-support, nolle-pros.

People vs. Joseph Swails, assault with inteat to do great bodily harm less than the crime of murder, bail declared forfeited.

In the chancery case of Edward T. Conch, petitioner, vs. Hattie Conch, insane, petition to sell dower, petition was granted.

Court was adjourned until August 30 when the jury will return and take up the civil cases on the caleudar.

There will be no admission charge, but each person in attendance will purchase a 10c badge to cover a small portion of the necessary expenses.

Everyone is invited to leave his cares at home and come out to this picnic prepared to enjoy himself to the limit, as well as reap substantial benefit from interchange of ideas and methods, and the mingling with friends and neighbors.

MACHINE MILK COWS

They Will Be Seen in Operation at the Michigan State Fair.

The farmer who laboriously milks fifteen or twenty cows by hand these days is doing unnecessary work, is the belief of Ladd Brothers, of Saginaw, who have arranged for a fine exhibit at the Michigan State Fair. This firm is manufacturing a novel machine that takes the place of the farm hand in the milking line. These machines will be in operation every day at the Fair. Scores of animals will be milked before large crowds and the quickness of the operation will be a surprise.

Besides being a great labor saving device, these milking machines are guaranteed to be death to germs, as they can be kept scrupulously clean and do not come in touch with the human hands. A large platform will be erected on the fair grounds, and on this the machines will be established. Then, several times during the day, cows will be driven there to be milked.

The apparatus is operated by a gasoline engine which, when it is not used for this purpose, can be employed for other work, such as running the corn cutter and the washing machine. Skilled operators will be present and show how everything is done. This will be one of the most interesting features of the Fair and should not be missed by anyone who attends.

REPORT OF WARDEN PIERCE

Of the State Game and Fish Department

Gives Many Facts of Interest to Michigan Taxpayers

The annual report of the game and fish department in charge of C. S. Pierce, will show some very interesting facts and figures which will be of interest to all tax payers of the state. A few of the figures follow:

In 1907 there were 1,329 investigations made and for the year 1908 1,649 were made. Out of this number there were but 525 prosecutions made during the first year and 714 were made last year. His deputies were successful in securing convictions to the number of 432 in 1907 and 578 in 1908. Fines amounting to $7,591.87 were collected in 1907, as compared with $10,371.97 in 1908. By dividing the expense of the department, which was $40,389.72 by the number of prosecutions for 1908, the cost of prosecution per conviction is seen to be but $69.99. This is $1.91 more than it was the year previous.

The added cost of conducting the department, according to the report, is due to the addition of four deputies, the increase in clerk and stenographer hire, and the addition of a steamship on the lakes, which has not only prevented a number of violations of the law, but has also assisted in securing more arrests. The boat cost the state $8,003.12 during the past year. On the other hand the traveling expenses of the state warden and his chief deputy have dropped about $718.12 while the addition of four deputies has raised their traveling expenses a little more than this amount and added to the state salary list the sum of $1,665.20.

Mr. Pierce points out that the department is more than self supporting. The figurs of the years 1907'08 show that the total revenue to the state was $77,993.79, while the total expenses amounted to $68,848.97, leaving a balance exceeding the expenditures of $9,144.82.

Besides this sum there were tons of fish which were sent to county and state institutions and the value of which is never estimated or reported. These fish are not of legal size and so cannot be sold. During the months of July, August and September there were 24,544 pounds of undersized fish seized and most of the fish was sent to different state institutions.

The mere figures showing the number of prosecutions does not reveal what the department is doing in many ways especially in having a restraining influence on illegal fishing. Not infrequently prosecution in certain localities drop way down but it is not the purpose of this department to see how many prosecutions can be secured but rather to get the people to respect the law, and to live up to it.

RURAL SCHOOLS OF CHARLEVOIX

Are Among the Very Best in the State of Michigan

COM'R MILFORD PRACTICAL MAN

Who has the Co-Operation of Teachers, Patrons and Officers.

Rural Schools Ably Supplemented by High Schools and County Normal—Some Eloquent Facts and Figures

Charlevoix County is proud of her schools, and any one contemplating moving into this section can be assured that he will find the schools, teachers and officers fully abreast of the times. J. H. Milford, county commissioner of schools, who is filling his second term is a thoroughgoing, practical up-to-date man who has the full confidence of the pupils, teachers, patrons and officers and is constantly on the lookout for and is applying modern methods as the schools become ready for them.

The rural schools of the county are so located, that, with the exception of one or two schools in the timbered parts of the county, every resident of the county is in reach of a schoolhouse. Residents of the newer districts have been urged by the companies, holding the timbered lands, to go ahead and build good schoolhouses and, while driving through the newer portions of the county, one is pleased and surprised to come in sight of a neatly cleared school ground with buildings that would make many of the older districts of the state blush with shame. The residents of the county, both city and rural, are aiming to make the school system, reach the highest standard of efficiency and no expense has been spared in securing the very best in the line of teachers and necessary appliances for successful school work.

A county normal is located at Charlevoix which ranks with the highest in the state and has done much for the schools of the county. There is a healthy and growing sentiment in favor of good schools and the truancy law, while rigidly enforced, meets with very little disfavor among the patrons of the schools.

To show the extent of the work of the school system in this county a few figures will prove of interest to our readers. During the year 1908-9, one hundred forty-six teachers were employed in the public schools of the county and the total of wages paid to teachers was about sixty-five thousand dollars. The average length of the school year is nine months.

The value of the school property of the county is approximately two hundred thousand dollars, nearly all of which is paid for, the records showing the bonded indebtedness of the various districts to be very light and rapidly decreasing.

There were five thousand, four hundred and fifty-eight names on the school census taken in 1908 and the census of 1909 will be in excess of six thousand. The actual enrollment of the year was thirty-eight hundred and the percentage of attendance eighty-five.

The county has been very free from dangerous diseases of any kind, the health of the school children being excellent, only one school in the county being closed during the year on account of disease and that was on account of whooping cough. Sixty members of last year's eighth grade class were given state eighth grade diplomas and many others will enter the high schools this fall.

There are four good high schools in the county, three of which are on the accredited list of the University of Michigan. Music and drawing is taught in all the high schools and in many of the rural schools of the county, while the City of Charlevoix has a well organized commercial department in connection with the high school.

How to Remove Grease From Soup.

"You never can use that broth today," said an old housekeeper who was making a rich lamb broth for an invalid. "It will be so greasy no digestion could stand it."

"Watch me," laughed the girl, "and your experience may gain a lesson from a novice."

She cut half dozen squares of brown paper that fitted easily over the top of the soup kettle and put a layer over the floating grease on top of the liquid. In a short time the paper was soaked with grease and was removed and thrown into the stove. The other pieces of paper in turn were used in the same way until the broth was freer from grease than if it had been stood on the ice for a day to form a solid cake.

How to Brighten Gold Ornaments.

Even a gold hatpin will grow tarnished, and the best in this condition is anything but ornamental. When the workmanship is such that the usual brushing process is out of the question put the pin heads in a tumbler of ammonia in which two tablespoonfuls of some powder cleaner is placed. This settles to the bottom, and the pin can be churned back and forth on the substance and cleaned. This is an excellent method for cleaning hatpins containing small jewels. Any soap powder can be added to the ammonia. Belt pins and buckles can be cleaned in the same manner.

How to Take Grease From Carpets.

An excellent paste for getting grease from carpets is made by mixing fuller's earth with ammonia and water. Apply the mixture thick, let it remain overnight, then remove with a stiff brush. The ammonia may be omitted if the colors in the carpet are delicate. After the grease is out the colors may be freshened by sweeping with moist salt.

How to Get an Insect Out of the Ear.

An insect in the ear may be destroyed by pouring a teaspoonful of warm olive oil or camphorated oil into the ear and keeping it there for some time, holding the head in a position to retain the oil, which will afterward come away with the dead insect.

In Doubt.

A prominent church worker of Baltimore was delivering one Sabbath a talk to a class comprising pupils who lived in a rather squalid section of the town, says Harper's Weekly.

The good man touched upon the quality of untruthfulness, and at one point in his address he said:

"I want every little boy who has never told a lie to raise his hand."

Not a hand went up. But a lad in the rear rose to ask a question.

"What is it, my boy?"

"Well, sir, what I want to ask is: Is it a lie if nobody ever knows?"

THE "GHOST FLUID."

A Test by Which May Be Discerned the Digital Effluvia.

There is an experiment, first made by Dr. J. Maxwell, advocate general at the court of appeals in Paris, a distinguished magistrate and physician, which may be repeated in any drawing room.

Place a screen covered with a dark colored cloth in front of a window so that the light falls full upon it. Between the window and the screen put the subject of your experiment. Let him hold his hands, palms toward the breast, finger tips touching, in such a position that they are projected against the dark background of the screen. Then let him slowly separate his hands, keeping the fingers extended widely. Standing behind him you will observe a sort of bluish gray cloud which seems to unite one hand to the other. Eight people out of ten will see this, says Vance Thompson in Hampton's Magazine. In 300 tests made by Dr. Maxwell personally 250 folk of one sex and the other discerned the digital effluvia; about 5 per cent saw it tinged a decided blue, two saw it yellow in tone, and in one instance the spectator saw it of a reddish hue.

The experiment succeeds best in a warm room. Cold and damp work against it. The duration of durability is four or five seconds.

Rammed by a Shark.

The strangest shark story which ever came to the writer's ears was of a shark that charged a steamer. This was in Queen Charlotte's sound, and an account of the incident appeared in a Vancouver paper. The captain of the steamer, which was a small craft of only fifty tons or so, saw the shark on the surface on the port bow and could not resist the temptation of taking a shot at it with his rifle. He hit his mark, whereupon the monster, said to have been fully twenty feet in length, deliberately charged the steamer. The boat quivered from stem to stern, and the captain said afterward that it was like striking a rock. After this display of temper Master Shark had had enough of it and sank out of sight.—T. C. Bridges in Chambers' Journal.

Did He Mean to Be Funny?

The editor of a newspaper whose policy it is to print many letters from correspondents in neighboring towns recently received such a communication from his representative in one place as to which he was not quite sure. He could not decide whether the correspondent was unconsciously humorous or whether he was endeavoring to comply with the standing instructions of the paper to "always be on the lookout for any little touch of humor that may brighten up our columns." The item read as follows: "Mr. Harry Spinks, the well-known butcher of this place, has been losing flesh rapidly of late."—Lippincott's.

FLEE CIRCUS IS THE LATEST.

Little Insects Trained to Do Wonderful Things on the Michigan State Fair Midway.

When Frank Spellman, of Cincinnati, who has charge of the Michigan State Fair Midway, told Assistant General Manager Slocum that a flea circus was to be a feature of the Midway this year, Mr. Slocum looked Mr. Spellman over and asked if the latter was undergoing mental deterioration.

"It's a fact," declared Spellman, "and I will show you."

And, sure enough, Spellman made good and has proven to every official of the Michigan State Fair that a flea can be trained and will perform at the coming state exposition. These fleas are not the miserable creatures that cause troublesome lumps while one is enjoying the evening air in the north end. They are known as the German flea, and grow to be quite large. They are intelligent and very apt pupils in the hands of a skillful trainer.

Prof. John Ruhl, who is master of the flea circus in Mr. Spellman's Midway, has something like 500 performers, and their diversified acts are simply marvelous. Acrobats, gymnasts, dancers, tight-rope performers, dramatic actors, soldiers, artisans, builders, etc., are members of Prof. Ruhl's aggregation. One of the most pleasing features is the grand ball given by Mr. and Mrs. Asteroidt Flea, to which are invited one hundred of the upper crust in the flea real society. The costumes worn are of extreme elegance, and the dances beautifully executed, whether a square dance of the olden times or the modern waltz or two-step. The gentlemen fleas are gallant, while the ladies are graceful, coquettish, and not a few are veritable flirts. The acrobats and jugglers are expert in their work, holding the spectators spellbound in amazement as the little performers promptly respond to their master's word of command.

Prof. Ruhl has two fleas that were trained many years ago by his great-grandfather about the time when Napoleon crossed the Alps. Five other fleas were trained by his grandfather in the days when King Wimam was only a schoolboy, and with some of his companions visited the exhibition of trained fleas presented in those days by Prof. Carl Ruhl, the elder.

SCULPTOR TO WORK BUTTER.

Carlo Romanelli Will Carve Out a Farmhouse With Yards, Cattle and Barns for Peter Smith & Sons, Detroit; Will Be Seen at State Fair.

The famous sculptor, Carlo Romanelli, has been secured to do more of his famous "butter sculpture" at the Michigan State fair, which opens at Detroit on September 2 and continues until September 10. Peter Smith & Sons, the Detroit grocers, have signed a contract whereby they will spend $1,000 for the reproduction by Mr. Romanelli of a miniature farmhouse with yards, barns and cattle.

Peter Smith & Sons have also contracted with a well known butter manufacturer for 1,000 pounds of that product. Specifications call for the best butter that can be made. No salt will be used and after the design is completed it will be placed in refrigeration until the opening day of the fair.

Mr. Romanelli starts for Europe in a short time and it is necessary for him to begin the work as soon as the butter is made. It will take some time and is said to be a difficult piece of work. The butter has to be kept at a certain temperature and a change is liable to ruin everything the sculptor produces.

After the fair is over this 1,000 pounds of butter will be sold for grease. Peter Smith & Sons are also arranging for other beautiful features in their fair exhibit.

LIVESTOCK SHOW TO BE GREAT.

Superintendent Tyler of the Michigan State Fair Declares It Will Be the Greatest Display Ever Held.

C. A. Tyler, superintendent of cattle at the Michigan State Fair, is planning something new in the way of stock parades for Wednesday, Sept. 8. While Mr. Tyler has always excelled in this feature, he again has something new planned, but refuses to give even a hint as to what it is. The usual livestock parade will be put on at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday, Sept. 8. Then as a grand conclusion will follow the big feature which Mr. Tyler declares no one shall know until the last minute. He says it is a hummer and will excell anything of the kind ever attempted by a state fair. Mr. Tyler answers all questions by saying:

"Just wait and I will give you something to talk about after the parade and exhibition is over.

"I went you to understand," continued Mr. Tyler in talking state fair exhibits, "that this exhibition is not simply limited to Michigan farmers. It is open to the entire world and anyone can come in here and compete for the prizes. We will have fully as many cattle exhibitors from Ohio and surrounding states as there will be from Michigan. Unusual facilities are at hand this year for distant exhibitors to compete. The cattle display opens Tuesday, Sept. 7, and permission has been given exhibitors to reach the grounds as late as Monday, providing they are in readiness to show their stock promptly when the display is open to the public on Tuesday morning. This is a privilege not granted heretofore by the Michigan State Fair officials. It simply means that scores of cattle men from Ohio and other surrounding states are going to show at this fair.

"I have personally visited many parts of the state in the interest of the fair. I never saw such fine cattle. They are a marvel even to me. The fine condition is all due to the excellent grass yield this summer. Heavy crops have also made the farmers prosperous and given them ample resources for attending the fair. It will be the greatest display of farm products ever held in this state."

SCHOOL'S MODEL FLAT

How Chicago Girls Are Taught Practical Housekeeping.

FIVE MINIATURE ROOMS USED

Pupils Divided Into Classes of About Thirty Each—Every Class Has to Learn Proper Care of All Rooms. Real Meals Are Cooked, No School-girl Delicacies.

Arithmetic never cooked a meal and spelling never washed a dish, but there are several hundred girls in Chicago, pupils at the Jamie vocation school who will be trained as model housekeepers as well as in reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic before the summer is over. And while the girls are learning to cook, sew and keep house the boys are learning future occupations, in the manual arts and crafts departments.

A Real Little Flat.

A model five room flat in miniature has been installed in one of the class rooms. It really is a little flat, with walls and partitions and all the furniture and fittings that are to be found in a real apartment. The flat is in charge of a teacher of domestic science and the several hundred little girls are divided into classes of about thirty each.

It is the task of each class to take care of one room of the flat on a given day. In the parlor there is the furniture to be dusted and polished. In the bedrooms there are the beds to be made. In the dining room there is the table to be decorated and arranged and the linen and dishes to be cared for. In the kitchen—most important of all—there are meals to be cooked—real meals and not schoolgirl delicacies. Then there is a bathroom to be cared for in the most approved sanitary way.

Plan Seems to Be a Success.

When each class has completed a "one room" course to the satisfaction of the teacher it is assigned to another room of the flat and so on until every class has learned the proper care of every room and has a good foundation knowledge of practical housekeeping.

"The plan seems to be a great success," declared Assistant Superintendent William M. Roberts the other day. "Mr. Shoup, supervisor of vacation schools, and I were invited out to the school for luncheon a day or two ago. We inspected the model flat and it was model, too—and then the children served luncheon of their own cooking. I don't remember the menu, but it was a good luncheon."

THE WRIGHT AEROPLANE.

Description of Machine In Which Orville Set a New Mark.

Orville Wright's aeroplane, in which he broke all records by steering a passenger carrying flying machine around the Fort Myer parade ground at Washington for one hour, twelve minutes and forty seconds, consists of two planes, one five feet above the other and measuring thirty-six feet from tip to tip. The seat for the operator is placed in the center of the lower plane, off to the left of the motor. The passenger sits on the other side of the motor.

The motor itself is a product of the Wright brothers—a four cylinder thirty horsepower water cooled gasoline engine. The gasoline is pumped directly into the intake pipes, there being no carbureters.

The tips of the planes are flexible for the space of about twelve feet. By means of a lever they can be turned in a curve resembling a helicoid, the wings moving in opposite directions. A second lever controls the twin rudders, which are supported by a brace ten feet from the rear of the plane. By working the two levers together the equilibrium of the machine is maintained.

Ten feet in front of the operator's seat two planes resembling a box kite about fifteen by three feet are used for controlling the ascent and descent. Two propellers about nine feet in diameter and revolving in opposite directions are used to thrust the aeroplane forward.

The weight of the machine, including both operator and passenger, is a trifle under 1,200 pounds.

By his achievement Mr. Wright, who was accompanied in his flight by Lieutenant Frank P. Lahm, exceeds the requirements of the war department's specifications by more than twelve minutes and breaks the world's record for a flight with a passenger by three minutes and five seconds.

Crowless Roosters.

Herbert Joyce of Springdale, Wash., has for years been experimenting with a peculiar breed of poultry which he says he brought from one of the Sandwich group of islands, in the Pacific ocean. When he first got hold of the wild birds they made a noise not unlike the hiss of a goose. He crossed his wild birds with various types of domesticated poultry and has at last obtained a rooster perfect in all respects with the exception of the crowing ability.

Not One Man in This Bank.

Woman's latest venture is the Woman's Savings bank, organized in Toronto, Canada. It is conducted on plans approved by women and managed by a corps of women who constitute its president, cashiers, tellers and bookkeepers. Not a man is employed in this bank.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

I am convinced that the liquor traffic encourages crime and is responsible for a large share of it and for the evil results following it. No same person will deny the proposition that the majority of the people in any civilized community abhor crime, and detest it when it is named murder, arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or larceny and the like, and no person in the community could be found who would openly declare in favor of the commission of any of the foregoing offenses. Then why should people be found who will openly declare in favor of and uphold a system which directly feeds the flames of criminality and which encourages the very crimes that, if left unchecked, would put an end to all good government and end in anarchy and death?

I stated in the beginning of this paper that the public were getting awake to the situation, and are counting the cost of "the relation of the liquor traffic to crime," and our own people, with those of many of our neighboring counties, have just spoken in no uncertain tones and placed the seal of their condemnation upon the traffic through the open saloon. The voice of the people has been heard and it must be obeyed.

The saloon with its allied evils, the brothel and gambling house, must be held responsible for a very large percentage of the crimes committed. We must expect a large crop of criminals just as long as we permit these crime-producers to continue to sow broadcast their poisonous seeds. What a short-sighted business policy, laying aside all moral considerations, for governments to permit the sale of strong drink for the sake of the revenues, and then tax the citizens fabulous sums to maintain criminal courts, police forces, and other institutions made necessary by the drink evil! The liquor traffic as carried on in the open saloon is not a legitimate business, although licensed and tolerated by the state. Its business is to make drunkards and take their money for that which does them no good does them positive harm. It unfits them for citizenship and destroys their usefulness for the common duties of life.

See how the drunkard and drunkenness have been rated since the early dawn of civilization. Here is what St. Augustine said: "Drunkenness is a flattering devil, a sweet poison, a pleasant sin, which whosoever hath, hath not himself." Jeremy Taylor wrote: "Drunkenness calls off the watchmen from their towers, and then all evils that proceed from a loose heart, an untied tongue, and a dissolute spirit, are put upon its account." William Cobbett, the English writer and author, wrote these scathing words a hundred years ago: "When this vice (drunkenness) has taken fast hold of a man, farewell industry, farewell education, farewell attention to things worthy of attention, farewell love of virtuous society, farewell decency of manners, and farewell, too, even attention to person. Everything is sunk by this predominant and brutal passion. In how many instances do we see men who have begun life with the brightest prospects, and who have closed it without one ray of comfort or consolation! Young men with good fortunes, good talents, good tempers, good hearts and sound constitutions, only being drawn into the vortex of the drunkard, have become by degrees the most loathsome and despicable of mankind. In the home of the drunkard there is no happiness for any one. All is uncertainty and anxiety. He is not the same man for any one day at a time. No one knows his outgoings or his incomings. When he will rise or when he will lie down to rest is wholly a matter of chance. That which he swallows for what he calls pleasure brings pain as surely as the night brings the morning. Poverty and misery are in the train."

Such are the estimates that these writers have put upon the finished product of the saloon (the drunkard); and the nefarious business of making drunkards is what the state legalizes by solemn enactments upon its state books, when it authorizes and permits one man to put poison into another man's mouth for a price. The hollow mockery of such legislation is becoming more and more apparent to hosts of Christian men and women of this commonwealth, who are so thoroughly convinced of this gigantic public evil that they will not rest nor be quieted until the fundamental law of the state shall declare that it shall be unlawful for any person, under any and all circumstances, to sell, give, or furnish spirituous and intoxicating liquors as a beverage. The flat has gone forth, "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day or night and shall lift up a standard among the people."

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO

Their Unceasing Work Keeps Us Strong and Healthy

All the blood in the body passes through the kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys filter the blood. They work night and day. When healthy they remove about 500 grains of impure matter daily, when unhealthy some parts of this impure matter is left in the blood. This brings on many diseases and symptoms—pain in the back, headache, nervousness, hot dry skin, rheumatism, gout, gravel, disorders of the eyesight and hearing, dizziness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, dropsy, deposits in the urine etc. But if you keep the filters right you will have no trouble with your kidneys.

Mrs. John Chamberlin, Forest St., Mancelona, Mich., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills an excellent preparation for kidney disorders, in fact, I found them far superior to any other kidney remedy I ever used. My backached severely and I had pains in my loins, coupled with other symptoms of disordered kidneys. When Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice, I obtained a box and their use brought me prompt relief from the aches and pains. I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills at every opportunity."

A Quaint Cookbook.

Amid the horrors of the siege of Paris in 1871 one Cadet found time to issue a book of recipes for the preparation of the strange fare to which the city was reduced. "Our stomachs are turned into natural history museums," he wrote, "but we must make the best of circumstances and render our food as palatable as we can." So house wives were instructed how to disguise the flesh of dogs, horses, asses, rats and mice and were shown that, despite the old adage, one can make an omelet without breaking eggs. The recipe for an eggless omelet was as follows: "Soak an army biscuit in sugared water flavored with orange flower, chop finely and spread on a hot dish, powder well with sugar and then pour over and set light to a liberal helping of rum." With eggs at $6 a dozen and rum at but little more than its normal price, this palatable imitation of an "omelette au rhum" became a most popular dish.

Professional Advice.

The irate victim blustered into the office of the secondhand automobile dealer.

"Look here, sir," he thundered, "the automobile you sold me yesterday won't run. One of the cylinders is cracked, the spark plug is badly connected, the steering gear is loose, one wheel is wabbly, and—and"—

"Hold on a minute," the dealer interposed. "Did I sell you a machine yesterday?"

"You certainly did."

"And you paid me for it?"

"Of course I did!" was the emphatic response.

"Then the machine belongs to you, doesn't it?"

"Why, to be sure it does."

"Well, that being the case, I'd advise you not to amble through the city shouting about its defects. If you do, I'd like to know how you expect to sell it."—Lippincott's.

Birthdays and Health.

For several years I have noticed that in a period of from about three to two weeks preceding the anniversary of my birth I have had a feeling of returning vigor, a renewal of vitality such as I have not experienced at any other time of the year. This has lasted for from two to eight days, but has always ceased some days before the anniversary; hence it has occurred to me that there may be some connection between the approach or recurrence of one's birth date and the maintenance of one's health.—London Graphic.

A Modern Miracle.

"I caused the dumb to speak today."

"How was that?"

"I was stopped in the street by a beggar with a 'I Am Deaf and Dumb' placard on his breast, and when I expressed the opinion that he was an impostor he immediately recovered his speech and in vigorous Anglo-Saxon requested me to go to—er—the place that the new theology tells us doesn't exist and mind my own business and he'd mind his!"—New York Times.

Alain Chartier, the French poet, is the hero of a romantic legend. One day he sat down in a public place and, being weary and exhausted by the heat of the day, fell into a slumber. As he slept Margaret of Scotland, the wife of the dauphin, afterward known in history as Louis XI., chanced to pass with her attendants. She glanced at the unconscious man and recognized in him the poet whose verses she so loved. Then, motioning to her maids to be still, she gently stepped forward and, stooping, imprinted a kiss on the sleeping poet's lips.

IN ANTRIM COUNTY

Question of Local Option Is Sure to be Submitted.

The secretary of the county local option committee, Dr. A. S. Evans of Bellaire, reports to the News that the canvassers of the different townships of the county are meeting with excellent success in regard to the petitions.

In order to get the matter of local option before the people at the next spring election, one third of the voters of the county must sign a petition to the board of supervisors asking that the question be submitted.

Dr. Evans has heard from only eight of the townships thus far and the percentage of the voters signing ran from 60 to 90. The required number of voters necessary is estimated at 927, according to the last general election and with only eight townships heard from with a total at present of over 1,000 names, it looks very much as if success was sure and that the question would be submitted.

Thus far Banks township has shown the largest number of names, which is 285. Kearney has 230, so far. Central Lake, Elk Rapids and Mancelona are not finished yet, in fact none of the townships have completed the work of canvassing but will be completed and in shape for presentation at the October sitting of the board. FRUIT GROWERS' ORGANIZE

At Meeting Held at Northport Saturday August 7.

Last Saturday afternoon a number of the fruit growers of this township in response to the call in last week's Leader met in the town hall and formed an organization that eventually will prove of great benefit to the growers here in a financial way, as organized over individual effort is fully demonstrated in every line of business. The meeting was called to order by C. A. Nelson acting as temporary chairman. The organization was then perfected by electing W. F. Steele as president and W. H. Steele as secretary and naming the organization the Leelanau Township Fruit Growers Association.

No definite outline of the policy of the organization was formulated, but the general plan will be that of holding regular meetings, keeping the members thoroughly informed on prices and condition of the crop all over the country. A committee of three was appointed to draw up articles of association to report at the next meeting which will be held Saturday afternoon in the town hall immediately after the dairymen's association meeting which will be at 2 o'clock, and as a good many are identified with both organizations, there should be two rousing meetings that are for the benefit of the entire community.—Leader.

Michigan Soldiers' Home.

The month of June was a busy one at the Michigan Soldiers' Home, located at Grand Rapids, although the total attendance did not reach the figures of the previous month, the number of charges was large.

At the close of May there were 1,046 persons in the Home 924 men and 122 women, as compared to 931 at the close of June 823 men and 103 women. However, nineteen new admissions were recorded, twenty-four former inmates readmitted and 318 absentees returned.

These figures were offset by twenty-eight persons being discharged during the month, 411 being dismissed on vacation or indefinite absence while fifteen deaths—fourteen males and one female were recorded.

A One Sided "Us."

Two brothers, grown men now, are fond of sitting down and comparing past experiences. One particularly happy recollection is this:

There was an old cider mill in the attic which, as boys, they greatly desired to possess. One of them, Tom by name, sought his mother and begged her to give it to them.

"I don't believe I can, Tom," said she mercifully, "I should like to, but I'm afraid I can't."

"But why, mother?" urged Tom, "You don't use it."

"No, We don't use it."

"Then why won't you give it to us?"

"Well, dear," said the mother gently, "I'm afraid you and Ben will get to quarreling over it."

"Oh, no, we shan't," cried Tom eagerly. "You needn't be afraid of that, mother. I won't let Ben touch it."

MUSIC—
"A twin of poetry."
—POPE.

Vanda Enos is an artist with a message, a message not only of supreme beauty, but of compelling power. To her the power has been given, as it has to few, to translate into tones the greatest inspirations of the past masters of her instrument.

There is something fascinating, something inspiring in her wonderful exhibition of power under control. To analyze the achievements of Vanda Enos is like applying the spectrum to a sunbeam that pierces a cloud to gladden the heart.

It is all well enough to talk of the "masters" and their achievements; to honor is both a right and a pleasure, but none of them play the violin as she plays it.

All that is heard is music, music so pure and beautiful that the sense is ravished.

What will it avail to talk of a technique that is so sure and perfect that nothing is impossible to it, to talk of a tone that has everything from the richness and warmth of a 'cello to the faintest harmonic known to the violin. To dwell upon the grace and humor that is put into certain phrases, while passion, sorrow and even tragic bigness sounds out from others, what shall all this avail when all these things are but means toward one lovely end, the presenting of music, music, music!

Miss Vanda Enos is an artist and her playing is the feature of the entertainment. She has wonderful command of her bow and her technique is astonishing as well as marvelous. —Brooklyn Eagle.

Miss Vanda Enos is by far the most accomplished artist ever seen in Worcester. The pure tones, remarkable bowing and wizard technique enchant and delight beyond expression. —Worcester Telegram.

BACK TO THE FARM

Big Opportunities In Fruit Fund In Western Michigan.

STATISTICS SHOW IT ONE OF THE MOST FAVORED REGIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Western Michigan affords as fine opportunities for farmers and fruit growers as any place in the world. Abundant evidence is at hand to back up this strong statement. The be-advertised regions of Yakima, Hood River, Pecos and Arizona fail to produce anything like the same percentage of profit that intelligent growers get in Western Michigan.

We are led to make this statement, says the Ludington Record-Appeal, by some bulletins accompanying a letter from Mrs. R. C. Witte now in Arizona. Mrs. Witte herself, while indorsing the Phoenix climate, is not so enthusiastic in regard to horticultural or agricultural opportunities, but the Phoenix and Maricopa County Board of Trade send out some advertising which is certainly bold and brassy enough.

Here is a specimen of Phoenix advertising for a 40-acre ranch. This tract, the bulletin says, will cost $6,000 and will produce a net profit of $1,250 above the cost of the land all in one year, the first year. The bulletin draws its conclusions as follows:

5 acres cantaloupes at $200 per acre	$1,000
10 acres alfalfa, 80 tons, at $10 per ton	800
5 acres sugar beets, 20 tons per acre, at $5 per ton	500
3½ acres strawberries and 5 acres watermelons	3,200
5 acres pasture, providing for a home site and truck garden for family use; and will keep six head of livestock, together with 100 chickens, the proceeds from which will provide groceries and clothing for family, and will sell all told per year	1,750
	$6,000
	$7,250
	$6,000
First year, land paid for, and net profit	$1,250

Now let us apply some of this same reasoning to Western Michigan. A fruit grower living within five miles of Ludington owns 60 acres. He actually has 60 Montmorenci real cherry trees, occupying less than one-half acre. From these trees in 1908 he actually picked an average of five cases per tree and sold them at an average price, real money, of a little better than $1 per case. In other words his receipts from less than one-half acre amounted to $500.

The Phoenix bulletin does not state that anybody actually did pay $6,000 for a 40-acre tract and actually did clear $1,250 the first year above the cost of the land. It simply says this might be done. On the same kind of figuring it may be said that a Mason county forty will produce $40,000 because one grower cleared $500 from a half acre.

All this brings us back to our original statement that Western Michigan affords as fine opportunity to farmers and fruit growers as any place in the world. In 1907 a local grower got more than $2,000 from two acres of plums; from 12 peach trees another grower picked 60 bushels and sold them for $60, which is equivalent to $540 per acre; from one and one-fourth acres of tomatoes another grower reaped $512; another grower from a 40-acre farm not in the market, but worth any $6,000, actually cleared up from small fruit between $2,800 and $2,900 or 48 per cent on his total investment, which includes a sightly farm home and other good buildings. These are typical instances of what actually has been done. They are taken almost at random from a few incidents that have attracted our personal attention. Everybody knows they are hardly fair to local growers in as much as they incompletely set forth local possibilities.

The Traverse City Board of Trade has compiled some statistics in regard to Grand Traverse county. Being selected with some care they make a fairer, a better-showing for this region. Here is an instance of what one man did, not what "anyone might do," but of what was actually done. It is a sworn statement and reads as follows:

Guy Tompkins, of Peninsula township, Grand Traverse county, Michigan, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

My cherry crop for 1907 from 227 trees, covering about two acres, was 1,942 cases of Morenci cherries, which I sold at $1.40 a case or $2,718.80. (This was from my cherry orchard on the home place.)

My cherry crop for the season of 1908 from what is known as the "Johnson farm," was 3,700 cases, which I sold at $1.25 a case, or $4,625. (This farm contains 40 acres. The orchard from which the above crop was harvested covered 7 acres. This farm I purchased for $3,800.)

Signed, Guy Tompkins. Sworn to and subscribed before me this 18th day of January, 1909. Chas. M. Beers, Notary Public.

Compare this with the Phoenix incident. The Phoenix Board of Trade says you pay $150 per acre. The Traverse City man swears he paid $95 per acre, only two-thirds as much, and the latter price probably included buildings, which would have to be erected on the Phoenix piece. The Traverse City man made 122 per cent real money, from seven acres, less than one-fifth of his total purchase; the Phoenix man made 120 per cent prospective money, only by working his entire forty. The Traverse City man in the same kind of money, the maybe, perhaps, guess, possible kind, made 730 per cent.

Let no man be mislead by the glittering glamour of western advertising. More money in proportion to the actual investment can be made in Western Michigan today than in the west or southwest. The most brilliant opportunities are at our door. Acres of diamonds are scattered around us.

And yet there is nothing new in these opportunities. They have been here for years, and like the acres of diamonds in the story, they have passed unheralded and unknown for the want of some one to exploit them. The Western Michigan Development Bureau has made it its care to spread abroad the story of the opportunities in Western Michigan, and it deserves the support of every good citizen in the work of its doing.

ADVERTISING WESTERN MICHIGAN.

Significance attaches to the recent presence of the Stanislaus county cars in Western Michigan. The cars are sent out by the county of Stanislaus, California, for advertising purpose pure and simple and their presence here was full of suggestion to our people because just now they are so much interested in works of similar sort.

A representative from the cars stated that the first cost of the two cars was $35,000, that it cost $50 a day to operate them, that they had been out a little more than two years and that the time of their return was uncertain. Eight men accompany the cars to distribute advertising matter and to herald the virtues and glories of Stanislaus county.

Here is the situation in a nutshell: Stanislaus county is spending $37,000 a year, more than $75,000 in all. For what? Advertising. Nor is the case of Stanislaus county exceptional. Other counties have done the same. Under such circumstances is it any wonder that California has achieved a great reputation. And other western states than California owe their name and fame largely to the same kind of effort. Tens of thousands of dollars are spent annually to tell the advantages of Hood River, the Yakims, the Pecos and other western "paradises."

The tendency in Western Michigan is to emulate these progressive regions of the west. There is a growing appreciation that we have as many, even more, advantages, "talking points," than these much lauded and so widely heralded 'Edens." In soil productiveness we stand well, in nearness of market we are pre-eminent, even in climate we compare not unfavorably. And it is unquestioned that in percentage of profit upon investment no western region is our superior.

The vital question is when shall we begin our campaign?

The Western Michigan Development Bureau stands ready to push the good work, but it lacks the funds. The boards of supervisors in this and the twelve other counties covered by the Bureau could hardly do a better thing than appropriate money at their approaching sessions.

Today there is an interurban electric railroad in just one of the thirteen counties comprising the Western Michigan Development Bureau. With the increase in population that will attend the efforts of that organization it may be expected that each county will soon be crossed by such lines, thereby greatly improving transportation facilities.

California and other western states have advertised themselves so extensively that they have made the people of Western Michigan think their opportunities equal to ours. The Western Michigan Development Bureau purposes showing to homeseekers that this is the real land of opportunity.

The old story of acres of diamonds is repeated in the history of Western Michigan. There are no greater opportunities in the world than those existing in this part of the state. The Western Michigan Development Bureau will awaken people as to what this region offers.

The Western Michigan Development Bureau is no new experiment along untried lines. The marvelously rapid growth of certain western states is largely due to identically such work and such methods as the present organization purposes applying to Western Michigan.

There is no region in the United States with greater natural opportunities for summer resorts than this part of Michigan, and the Western Michigan Development Bureau has set out to develop this source of wealth.

One county, Stanilaus, in California, spends $35,000 a year advertising its resources. The eleven counties comprising the Western Michigan Development Bureau can surely do as much.

The resorts of Western Michigan while a great source of wealth are really no more than in their infancy. To develop this line of business is a part of the function of the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

No one familiar with the facts can question that such work as is outlined by the Western Michigan Development Bureau will tremendously stimulate the growth of Western Michigan.

The famous regions of the west have been made valuable by exactly the same methods as are proposed by the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

The laws of California provide for the support by taxation of organizations similar to the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

STATE FAIR'S MIDWAY

GREATEST AGGREGATION OF SHOWS EVER GATHERED FOR EXHIBITION.

Mammoth Hippodrome, Wild West, Flea Circus, Animal Congress, Palace of Illusions, Human Laundry, and Lots of Other Interesting Features.

The Midway at the Michigan State Fair this year will be one of the prettiest attractions to be found anywhere on the grounds. The shows are owned and managed by Frank Spellman, of Cincinnati, a well-known amusement man. The midway court this year will be in the shape of a hollow square. The front will be one solid section and entrances to the different attractions have the appearance of theater doors. Everything about the scheme is elaborate, even to the illumination. The apparatus used for this was secured from the city of Cincinnati and used to illuminate Fountain Square in that city during the recent Turner convention. It consists of thousands of lights radiating from a common center, that make the Midway court as brilliant as day. The following are some of the attractions that will be seen on the fair Midway:

Hippodrome and Wild West—Show contains rough riding, cowboy scenes, breaking wild and untamable horses, trick riding, broncho busting, and in fact all big scenes as seen by the leading Wild West Shows, carrying a company of 30 people and 12 head of horses.

The Spellman Show.—The most unique and pretentious show ever produced in the way of equipment; built at a cost of $1,500 for equipment. This is a new idea in the way of an open front and contains four platforms shows combined into one show, and one price of admission is charged to all four shows, namely 10c. It is called "Congress of World's Novelties" and includes the two fattest women in the world, also the, two smallest midgets in the world, a three-leggsd boy and one other clean freak as yet to be secured.

European Wild Animal Congress.—Largest and best wild animal show, with no superior, containing lions, tigers, leopards, and an array of the world's greatest and best animal trainers—ten in number. This is the finest and best-equipped wild animal congress today in America with no exception.

The Whirlwind.—A new show—never seen before 1909. Composed of unsual and wholesome amusement devices, including dippy walks, moving stairways, dark passages, and also the human roulette wheel. Size of show, 40 feet by 20 feet.

The Human Laundry.—A new mechanical amusement device—interior in darkness, comprising wringers, wash-tubs, bamboo slides, movable staircases, flying walks, air blowers, the canvass walk, etc. This show has been the biggest money-maker at all the leading amusement parks throughout the country.

The Devil in Art.—A new departure in the line of Girl Shows, being taken from the famous Marcesu's Living Picture craze, using ten ladies, carrying a gold frame for interior exhibition and using the latest electrical and cloud effects in behind the pictures, making it one of the most entertaining shows that can be produced.

The Palace of Illusions.—Consists of one large pebble illusion, "Spider and Fly" illusion, "Herod's Daughter" illusion, the "Vanishing Boy" illusion, and the "Queen of Roses" illusion.

Midget City.—This is a miniature of a small city and embraces the world's smallest people, using nothing in same but small miniature equipment and four small midgets, who give an entertainment and various performances. Interior is handsomely equipped in every detail.

The Whirlpool.—A new amusement device used for the first time in 1909 and being constructed by the Chester Park Amusement Co., Cincinnati, O. Comprises a set of large rollers, large staircases that close up and down. A show that will please the most fastidious.

Determination.—A remarkable performance given by a person who has neither arms nor legs.

Tinymite, the Smallest Horse in all the World.—Tinymite is seven years old, weighs 31 pounds, is 18 inches high, and has the most beautiful equipment ever introduced with a show of this caliber. A show that particularly appeals to ladies and children.

The Nut College.—A series of new devices, including the slide-out stairway, and underground grottos, electric walks. The interior is composed of passages with certain obstructions, buzzers, bells, air blasts, etc., all which create laughter and amusement.

Cremation.—An electrical spectacular show, picturing birth and then the death by cremation, with varied electrical effects, making a very fine finished performance.

The Limit.—A new fast and furious show, filled with laughter from start to finish, comprising the revolving swing, the house upside down, the movable and collapsible floors, and a solid interior of amusement from the start to the finish.

Dreamland.—A new spectacular stunt written around the "Feast and Furies" show and comprised of spectacles embracing the service of twelve people in the Birdland ballet. An entire new show in every detail.

The Eruption.—A graphic description of the late holocaust, showing the volcano at its hight, being preceded by a series of poses plastique.

The state fair buildings are now undergoing a thorough renovation for the opening. When the exhibition starts on Sept. 2 everything will be in fine condition. The grounds never looked better. The nursery firms have an enormous line of shrubs and flowers that will be in full bloom during the exposition and make the grounds more attractive than ever. These plants were started early in the season and after much labor have been brought to perfection. With the flower beds and foliage plants maintained by the State Fair itself, the grounds are made to appear like a great city park.

Saturday Mr. West of Grand Rapids, representing the Michigan Inspection Bureau, was in town. Mr. West informs us that if Charlevoix wishes to keep it's insurance rates down more care must be used in keeping the back of our business places in a clean condition. We not only should do this on account of the insurance rates but also to make every part of our city a place of beauty.

The Alden regatta was the most successful ever held there, more than 2000 visitors being in the village. The free-for-all race for a $150 cup was won by P. D. Q., owned by Glenn Power and Harry S. Prosecuting Attorney Ernest C. Smith of Kalkaska county warns the people of his bailiwick against selling the so-called "unfermented beers," going under the names of "near-beer," "hop pop," "great American hop ale" and various other misleading terms. Agents of breweries sell them in local option counties, representing that they do not contain alcohol and can be sold without violating the law. Mr. Smith obtained samples and sent them to Lansing to the state chemist for an analysis. The state analyist says they are "a brewed, slightly fermented beverage of the beer type of low alcholic strength." Mr. Smith says "the sale of these beverages is therefore a violation of the local option law, and subjects the seller to prosecution." His warning to the "soft drink" dealers is published in the Kalkaska papers, and he further says: "In fact, all the so-called beer substitutes contain some alcohol, and the guarantee of the agent selling them that they do not contain alcohol will not protect the retailer of them from prosecution."

Through the courtesy of E. S. Noble, purchasing agent of the Elk Cement & Lime Company, we are permitted to publish some figures that will give some idea of the magnitude of the operations of the company.—During the month of July there were used at the works 2,753 tons of coal and 10,384 tons of lime stone and clay. A total of 31,319 barrels of cement were manufactured. The business given by the company to the Pere Marquette is far beyond the knowledge of even our own people. Of rock and coal 322 cars were received during the month, and approximately 200 cars of manufactured product were shipped out. Taking into consideration loaded and empty cars handled, the Elk Cement & Lime Co. gives the railroad company more business than any other single concern north of Grand Rapids, as many as fifty cars in and out being handled daily. Besides the rail shipments considerable freight goes by water. The company's freight bills run between $5,000 and $6,000 monthly.—Progress

G. A. Myers showed us a bunch of alfalfa which he raised on his farm. The plant when cut was 44 inches high, and looked very thrifty. The stalk was large and rank. Mr. Myers has experimented with alfalfa for a number of years, each succeeding year with a little more success. He finds that it grows better when sown with red clover than alone. Mr. Myers is very enthusiastic over its culture and believes that it can be raised successfully, if properly handled.—Kalkaskian.

The immense lumber firm of Albert & Son have cut their last stick of timber and have permanently shut down its mill at Muskegon after operating 30 years and having cut upwards of two hundred million feet of lumber. This practically ends the log cutting industry in Muskegon. The possibilities are that if the firm does not sell its property, an immense health resort will be opened up, at which sulphur baths will be the feature. The sulphur and salt water was recently found while drilling for oil and the properties of the water are said to be the finest in the country.

DISTINGUISHING SNAKES.

How to Tell Dangerous Ones From the Harmless.

The arrival of vacation time and the consequent excursions into meadow and mountain land give timely interest to a small pamphlet written by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of reptiles in the New York zoological park, entitled "Poisonous Snakes of the United States—How to Distinguish Them."

"It is not generally appreciated," says Mr. Ditmars in this pamphlet, "that inhabiting the United States are some of the most deadly known species of snakes, and these fairly teem in some parts of the country. Even in the east—in the immediate vicinity of well known summering places poisonous snakes are abundant. It is well to know how to distinguish them from the many harmless and really beneficial reptiles.

"As will presently be explained, the North American dangerous snakes may be easily distinguished, except two, and these are the coral snakes, having a slender body and a head not at all distinct from the neck—in fact, looking precisely like the harmless reptiles. And they actually belong to the same family as the innocuous serpents—the colubridae. This family is divided into a number of subfamilies. The colubras and their deadly allies of the old world and the coral snakes of the new world form one of these subfamilies—the elapinae. From the typical harmless snakes they differ only in the possession of a very short, fixed pair of venom conducting teeth in the forward part of the upper jaw and by the absence of a small scale on each side of the head (the loreal plate), between the eye and the nostril. Fortunately, such deceptive looking reptiles are limited to two species in the United States. As they are peculiarly colored they may be recognized with little difficulty.

"Both of the species of the elaps inhabit the southern part of the country. The common coral snake or harlequin snake occurs from southern North Carolina to Florida and westward to Texas. It is most abundant in Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Louisiana. The Sonoran coral snake is restricted to Arizona, New Mexico and northern Mexico. Both of the species are vividly ringed with scarlet, yellow and black—the red and black rings the broadest.

"Described in detail, the pattern of the coral snakes may be given as broad, alternating rings of red and black, the latter bordered with very narrow rings of yellow. And here we encounter a difficulty, for several harmless snakes 'mimic' these species to displaying exactly the same colors and arranged in ringlike fashion. Yet there is one unvarying difference that will always distinguish the dangerous reptiles from their innocuous 'imitators,' as the yellow rings of the poisonous snakes always border the black rings, while among the non-venomous snakes there are pairs of black rings bordering a yellow one.

"The crotaline snakes, the rattlesnakes, copperhead and the moccasin may be easily told. We may dispose of the rattlesnakes with a simple suggestion, and that is to look for the rattle, a prominent and an absolutely unique organ among snakes. Its presence immediately brands the owner as a dangerous reptile.

"Thus we understand how to recognize all of the North American poisonous snakes except the moccasins—two species."

Lack of Judgment.

"So Cayuse Charley met his fate at the hands of a posse?"

"Yep," answered Three Finger Sam.

"What was the trouble?"

"His lamentable difficulty was a lack of judgment as to speed. He helped himself to a horse, but didn't pick one that was fast enough to keep ahead of the party as went after him."—Washington Star.

FIGHTING FROST IN ORCHARDS

Devices In Use by Fruit Growers In Colorado.

Frost season comes twice a year. The first is over; the last is in the future. But it is never too late to prepare for the next season. Early in the spring of the current year several Colorado fruit growers equipped their orchards with the so called California oil orchard heaters. One man who tried the pots bought enough equipment to protect ten acres. He was new at the work and did not have proper oil, so a portion of the time he was obliged to burn kerosene. But in spite of the fact that the thermometer fell to 23 for three or four nights in succession he was able to save the entire crop of apples on the protected area, while the fruit on the rest of his orchard which was not so protected was entirely lost. The expense for equipment and labor in this case was about $1,500, but it resulted in an $8,000 crop. This was certainly cheap insurance, and the pots are ready for future use. In another orchard the owner succeeded in saving an enormous crop of fruit, while just across a barbed wire fence in adjoining orchards the crop was an entire loss.

Since then a number of forms of heaters, both coal and oil, have been invented, and many people have equipped themselves with these appliances. The oil heaters, which were first used, are about the size and form of a ten pound lard pail made of light sheet iron. If the lumber surface is much larger the heat produced is too great and the beneficial results are lost. These heaters will burn from three to five hours without refilling. In planning to protect the orchard in this way Colorado growers are using 100 of the oil pots per acre. It probably will not be necessary to use this entire number except in exceptional cases, but should that occasion arise they think it is a better plan to be ready. But for light frosts perhaps half of this number will be lighted at first; then as they burn out the other portion may be used. In this way the work of refilling can be accomplished without difficulty.

Common forms of crude petroleum are not satisfactory, for the reason that when the oil and pots become hot the oil boils over, causing much waste and loss of heat. Growers find, however, that what is known as gas oil is fairly free from this trouble, and it is the form they are now using in Colorado. It has also been demonstrated that coal pots will answer the purpose just as well as oil, but whether they will be as efficient in practice remains as yet to be seen. Colorado coal is semi-hard, lights almost as easily as wood and is therefore quite different from anything that is found in the east.

Of course the conditions of climate in Colorado are very different from those found in the east, and it may be that the western methods must be modified, but there would seem to be no reason why something of this kind might not be devised which would be practical in protecting truck crops, small fruits and even large orchards if it were thought advisable. The illustrations are so simple as to require no explanation.

An Old Time English Election.

A curious incident once occurred at Patton at an election for parliament. Sir Mark Wood, who had been one of its members for several years, had as his colleague in the parliament of 1812 Sir William Congreve, the inventor of the famous "Congreve rocket." The latter resigned in 1816, and the baronet wished his own son to fill the vacancy.

There were only three voters in the constituency, Sir Mark, his son and his butler, named Jennings, but as the son was away and the butler had quarreled with his master an opportunity was afforded for a singular revenge. Jennings refused to second Sir Mark's nomination of his son and proposed himself, and a deadlock was averted only by Sir Mark coming to terms with the refractory butler, whose nomination he seconded in order to induce him to act as a seconder to his son.

Matters being thus put formally in train, Sir Mark arranged with Jennings that the former's vote should be alone given, and the final state of the poll at Patton's only known contest stood thus: Wood (Tory), 1; Jennings (Whig), 0.—Westminster Gazette.

FREE ATTRACTIONS FOR FAIR.

High Class Vaudeville and Circus Acts Features of Coming West Michigan State Fair.

Without exception, the free attractions provided for the entertainment of West Michigan State Fair visitors in past years have been high class, eliciting the highest commendation. In view of this fact, the management of the specialties secured for this year's fair, Sept. 13-17, will be of absorbing interest.

Contracts have been closed for a high class bill replete with novelties, which guarantees to patrons a rare treat in the amusement line at absolutely no expense. Other features of vaudeville and circus acts by which figure some thrilling innovations will be the offering of the equestrian act of West Michigan State Fair fame as usual, these performances will be given from a platform facing the grand stand, during the intervals between the heats of the racing events.

As a headliner this year there will be seen Captain Trent's trained seals, certain to prove a hit with old and young. The seal, despite his ungainliness, is one of the most intelligent as well as most docile of animals and, well trained, performs feats of incredible skill. Captain Trent's pets are favorites wherever they have appeared.

Arnoldo's trained wild animals are a decided innovation in this class of entertainment, his pets being leopards, panthers and jaguars, the most treacherous of beasts, and the most difficult to reduce to a state of subjection. Arnoldo, however, has his beasts well in hand. Other engagements are with the Landauer troupe of comedy aerial bar experts and the Simple Simon trio, trick house and comedy acrobatics.

All these act will be given each afternoon of the fair from a platform in front of the grand stand.

All railroads are offering one and one-half one way round trip fares to Grand Rapids during the fair.

MARTIN DRAFT HORSE TROPHY.

One of West Michigan State Fair's Most Interesting Features.

One of the most interesting of West Michigan State Fair features during the past four years has been the competition for the Martin draft horse trophy. This will be repeated at the coming fair, which will be held in Grand Rapids, Sept. 13 to 17.

The Martin trophy will be bestowed on the best draft team of any age, over 3,000 pounds in weight, owned in Michigan. The owner of the winning team has the honor of retaining possession of the trophy until Sept. 1, 1910, when it will revert to the West Michigan State Fair to be again offered for competition. Four liberal cash prizes will be awarded the owners of the four best competing teams. Drivers of all non-winning teams will be paid $2 each.

The Martin trophy was won in 1905 by the Quigley Lumber company, in 1906 and again in 1907 by the Voight Milling company and in 1908 by the Phoenix Furniture company. Scoring in this contest is on the basis of 75 points for team and 25 points for harness and wagon. Contesting teams are required to be on the grounds from noon until 4 o'clock and to drive in the grand cavalcade on Wenesday, Grand Rapids day. The purpose of the offer is to encourage the raising of draft horses and an honest pride in the care and ownership of heavy teams for farm and city work.

AN ABSOLUTELY CLEAN FAIR.

Gambling and Liquor Selling Tabooed at West Michigan State Fair.

Pursuant to its policy of giving the people the very best entertainment of its kind, the West Michigan State Fair, to be held in Grand Rapids, Sept. 13-17, will adhere to its established precedent of barring gambling and liquor selling from the grounds. None of the lures of professional tricksters will be permitted to divert money brought to the city from its rightful uses to fatten the fortunes of gaming concessionaires at Comstock park.

From the date of its organization gambling devices have been tabooed at the West Michigan State Fair, despite strenuous promises of large financial returns to the fair. Since 1906, in the determination to provide the people an absolutely clean, unobjectionable fair, liquor selling privileges have also been denied.

The results have been most gratifying to the fair management and the great majority of the patrons. None who have visited the fairs the past few years will have any hesitation about repeating the visit this year. They know ther will be no gambling on the grounds and that no liquor will be sold therein. The fair is clean, and worthy of anyone's visit.

Enter Your Products at the Fair.

Every farmer or breeder in this locality should not fail to enter his choice products at this year's West Michigan State Fair, which it is assured will be the greatest in the history of the organization. He often feels that among so many entries he will stand small chance of securing the prizes. His neighbor feels much the same way. Then when they visit the fair and see their neighbors walk off with prizes won by specimens far inferior to their own their chagrin is great.

No one is to blame but himself. The successful competitor was more enterprising, that is all. Enter your products at the fair. It will pay you.

NINE BARGAIN DAYS FROM SEPT. 2nd to SEPT. 11th

Charlevoix, Michigan

POSTOFFICE BLOCK

Sale opens Thursday, Sept. 2 and closes Saturday, Sept. 11

Courier Grange Column

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

One of the many functions of the grange, the greatest farmers' organization in Michigan, is to teach better methods for producing agricultural wealth. The leading spirits of the order find that if they can instruct the rank and file so that two blades will grow in the future where but one has grown in the past, they are doing service to mankind. And so they are, for an increase of a hundred-fold in crop yield means prosperity to the producer and thus indirectly to all.

There are in western Michigan today 206 subordinate granges and 17 pomona or county granges, a total of 223. Each of these granges is doing educational work. Each is not only advocating better methods of wealth producing, but it is instructing its members in better methods of business and it is encouraging them to take a part in public affairs. Furthermore, each of these granges is a social center for the community in which it exists. It is giving its members an opportunity to come together and exchange ideas and thus to become better acquainted with one another and to become familiar with the needs of the community as a community.

These granges are also doing fraternal work among their members and making life more worth the living. A settler locating in almost any part of western Michigan will find himself in the jurisdiction of some of these granges and thus will have ample opportunity for the satisfaction of his self-educational and his social instincts.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange met in regular session August 17 with a good attendance.

Three applications were received for membership.

After the regular order of business the grange was turned over to the lecturer, who furnished the following program:

Reading—Frank Hammond.
Reading—Will Walker.
Songs—Mr. VanHosen and Mr. Coblentz.

Under good of the order the motion was made and carried, that a committee be appointed to prepare a program for the open meeting to be held August 31; also that the secretary be instructed to invite Brothers Ward, DuBois and Paddock to attend the meeting. After the appointing of a committee to prepare supper for the open meeting grange closed.

Horton's Bay Grange No. 833.

Horton Bay grange met in regular session Friday evening August 20 and was called to order by Worthy Master George Long with an attendance of twelve.

After the regular order of business the meeting was turned over to the lecturer, who furnished the following program:

Select reading—By the sisters.

Roll-call, responded to by quotations from the ritual, after which lemonade and cake was served. Next meeting September 3.

Royal Stamp of Success.

Clarence Bennett's attractions are so well and favorably known in Charlevoix that it is with great pleasure Mr. Bridge, manager of the Charlevoix theater, announces the coming of one of their standard successes, "A Royal Slave," which is booked to play here Thursday, September 2.

The author, who wrote that other phenominal success, "The Holy City," which we also hope to see this season, has chosen for the action of the piece the most romantic period in the history of Mexico, the brief reign of the unfortunate Maximillian. The character Aguila, the decendant of the Montezumas, the last of a race now extinct, is a poetic creation which appeals to our imagination. The other characters of a long and interesting cast are equally strongly drawn. The specialties introduced by the comedy element are strictly in keeping with the atmosphere of the surroundings and the bit of sword-play in the duel scene, second act, is as pretty an exhibition as one could witness. Remember the date, Thursday evening, September 2nd. Seats on sale at Chapel's drug store Tuesday evening, August 31.

FARMERS FOUNDING BANKS.

Interesting Aspects of a Movement Which Goes on Extending.

The farmer-banker is becoming an important factor in the interior towns. In literally hundreds of little towns, some with not more than 150 population, have been started banks during the past three or four years. Many of these have farmers as stockholders and officers. Some of them are practically owned by farmers, only one or two stockholders being from the town.

These banks get large deposits because they draw from farming sections that have been prosperous during the past decade, and the fact that leading farmers are stockholders gives prestige to the institution. Indeed, this is so well understood that most new banks in the farming sections try to secure as many farmer stockholders as possible. It is not uncommon to find small banks with nine or eleven directors nearly all of whom are farmers, placed there because of the benefit to be derived from the advertising.

The influence of this is directly toward conservation. The farmer believes in making the bank safe; hence he looks with doubt on commercial paper and ties his faith to farm mortgages and similar investments. If nothing offers he keeps the money in the vault until at times banks have 65 to 70 per cent of their deposits in cash and sight exchange. He likewise has a well defined doubtfulness of everything that savors of Wall street and cautions his officers to use great care. This is particularly true since the flurry of 1907, and it results in tying up a great deal of money that should be working. The farmer-banker is being educated, but at present he is a factor to be considered in the estimate of interior bank conditions.

The bank commissioner has found a new scheme in bank promoting. He discovered that in the small towns of the central and western counties of the state men are organizing banks as speculations. The promoter goes into towns that have already more banks than needed and easily finds investors ready to put in money because of the banking craze and the advertising they get from being bank officers and stockholders. To push the matter the names of leading men of the state who are said to be interested are used without their knowledge. The promoter puts in very little money and usually manages to get that out as soon as the bank starts. Incidentally he sells bank fixtures, safes and stationery, from which he reaps a commission of $500 or more. He moves on to a new town and works the plan over again. This has become so common that the banking department has aired the plan and has exposed some specific instances, hoping it will put a stop to the practice.

What Becomes of the Corn.

People often wonder, particularly those who have traveled for hundreds of miles through the corn belt, what becomes of corn which is grown every year. In the year 1908, when the total crop was 2,666,000,000 bushels, 211,000,000 bushels were consumed in flour and grist mill products, 8,000,000 bushels in the manufacture of starch, 9,000,000 bushels for malt liquors, 17,000,000 bushels in the production of distilled liquors, 40,000,000 bushels for glucose, 190,000,000 bushels for export and 13,000,000 bushels for seed, making a total of 518,000,000 bushels, or 19.3 per cent of the entire crop. The remaining 80.7 per cent, or 2,118,000,000 bushels, seems to have been used almost entirely for feeding.

A Wonderful Blackberry.

Although the planting season for many fruits is gone, it is not too late to mention a species of blackberry known as the Logan. It is very successful in England and can be adapted to some climates in our country. It yields wonderful crops. While the plants are perfecting their fruits new canes, somewhat like those of the raspberry, spring from the base. This is the next season's fruiting wood and must be attended to. The Logan berry makes a very free growth, and winds soon twist the shoots, which must then be supported. After the crop has been gathered the old fruiting wood is cut out, and the new shoots from the base take its place. The plants fruit in July and August and do well on a north wall or high fence or may be trained to wires or iron hurdles. The fruits are esteemed for preserving. Much the same culture is required where the blackberry is grown in the garden. The whortleberry is an excellent fruit for preserving or for tarts and is prolific. It makes a strong growth and requires a similar treatment to the Logan berry. It is welcome in the shrubbery, or on a fence, and it makes much wood. Other berries such as the berberis are grown for garnishing and generally as bushes in shrubberies.

Culture of Chives.

The culture of this plant is simple, as it will grow in any ordinary garden soil. It is usually propagated by division of the roots, because it does not seed readily. The roots or clumps of roots may be purchased at moderate prices. The clumps should be planted in beds about nine inches apart in rows which are two feet apart. The planting may be done in either spring or autumn. The chives may also be planted in the border of the vegetable garden and make an excellent border. As a border plant the clumps should be planted about six inches apart. The leaves will grow thickly and form a dense green mat.

Too Often Have Been Improperly Cared For.

INTERVIEW WITH GEORGE E. ROWE

Location Is an Ideal One for Fruit Production

Mistakes In Pruning, Cultivation and Spraying—Directions from an Expert.

George E. Rowe, manager of the Western Michigan Development Bureau and a fruit grower of many years standing, in an interview recently gave expressions to the following statements regarding western Michigan orchards after an inspection of much of the territory in western Michigan.

"In general, I find the locations selected for orchards most desirable ones for apples, peaches, pears, plums and most of the small fruits. In nearly all cases the elevation of the orchards is good. They are near enough to the lake to receive proper protection for the trees from late spring frosts; the surface of the ground is nearly always rolling enough to assure good drainage; the soil is a gravelly loam, which I look upon as the most desirable for all classes of fruits. In a word, the natural physical conditions including soil, climate and elevation are the most excellent.

"I find that in many cases the stock, which has been planted to be poorly grown and very poorly bred, so that many of the trees are not true to name and many are shy of fruit buds. Others are out of balance, that is to say, the roots are all formed on one side of the tree or the heads all formed on one side. Many of the trees have been poorly set. They are out of line, and the heads turned in the wrong direction and all set too deep.

"In the majority of cases, the pruning has been crudely done. Some trees have been headed too high and often fruiting wood or spurs cut out and leaf wood left, whereas the reverse should have been done. Cultivation has often been carried on without any knowledge on the part of the operators processes by which trees obtain their food, preserve life and produce a crop. It has been done irregularly as regards time and depth of cultivation. Tools have been run too close to the trees, so that many roots are torn and mutilated. There is scarcely a tree in some orchards that has not been injured either in root, bud or top, by tools, whiffletree or horse. These trees have had to work hard to heal up the many wounds in addition to maintaining life.

"Many of the trees have been injured by the use of crude oil and other spraying materials, absolutely unnecessary in orchard use. The fruit on a large number of the trees in bearing has been poorly protected from chewing insects and scab.

"You ask, what should have been done? Well, there are several things. First, with the splendid location here found for fruit farms, the stock should have been selected by an expert judge of trees and the trees should have been bred from trees actually in fruit and known to be recent bearers of the choicest fruits of their kind. Breeding will tell in a tree as well as in livestock family life. The heads of the trees as well as the roots should have been well balanced at planting time or in the first year thereafter. The trees should have been cultivated twice every week from early spring until the last of August with a tool so constructed that the soil should have been stirred to the same depth, not more than two inches, at every cultivation and the work immediately around the trees should have been done by hand so as to have avoided bruising the bark or injuring the trees.

"Pruning should have been done early in the season before the buds opened and the heads of the trees should all have been formed at the same height, not over two and one-half feet from the ground. Furthermore the pruning should have been done by one who knows the difference between a leaf bud and a fruit bud, so as to preserve the latter and to remove as many of the former as necessary to give proper life and ventilation to the trees.

"All spraying should be done by one who knows what to spray for and what to spray with. We use copper sulphate or bordeaux mixture for fungus growth alone, such as scab on the apple and curl-leaf on the peach; shot-hole fungus on plum and cherry. This is used before the buds open in the spring. Then we use some form of arsenic, arsenic of lead preferred, for all chewing insects. This is used as soon as the buds open on apples, pears and cherries and is repeated on apples every ten or twelve days until the fruit is two-thirds grown. We use lime and sulphur for all scales. This also is used before the buds open in the spring. It is necessary that the men who do this work understand plant life as well as have some knowledge of chemistry."

THIRTEENTH ANNIVERSARY

Of Establishment of Rural Free Delivery

Will Be Celebrated in October—Over 20,000,000 Patrons

A Washington dispatch says:—Steps are being taken by the officials of the postoffice department for a fitting celebration in October to commemorate the thirteenth anniversary of the establishment of rural free delivery. This service was started in West Virginia with five routes running from three different offices in 1896. By the end of the third year 391 routes had been established at an annual expenditure of $150,012.

Up to the present time the cost of installation and operation has been about $170,000. There are 110,801 carriers, covering 40,919 routes. More than 20,000,000 patrons are served daily. Illinois has the largest number of rural delivery routes, 2284. New York, the first state in population, has 2168.

Seven states have more routes than New York.

Postmaster General Hitchock declares himself in favor of increasing the vacation period of letter carriers from 15 to 30 days annually and moreover has devised a scheme whereby these vacations can be granted in a manner that will save $250,000 this year in the cost of letter carriers' vacations. According to law, postal employes are allowed annually 15 days' leave of absence with pay.

BIGGEST LITTLE FAIR

Will Be the Charlevoix County at East Jordan

Secretary Nicholas is Working Hard for Its Success

The County Fair this year bids fair to be the biggest, little fair in the state this year. The purses for the races have been enlarged in order to draw a better and larger field of classy horses, and from the inquiry received by Secretary A. B. Nicholas, Jr., from horse owners all over the state, the enlargement of the purses has accomplished the purpose desired.

Secretary Nicholas is also going to introduce a game of "Button, button, who's got the button" something entirely new, and from the interest taken in it already, crowds of people will attend on Thursday to take part in it. Also Thursday will be automobile day and an announcement of the prizes offered for the best decorated automobiles, will be found elsewhere in this issue.

There will be plenty of free attraction in front of the grand stand each afternoon and Major R. H. Hendershot and son, the world's greatest drummer and lifer will be the special attraction, and will furnish excellent martial music for the patrons.

Man Injured on Manitou.

C. R. Sowerby, of Cincinnatti, a dining room employe on the Manitou, was severely injured while in the harbor last night by the trunks sliding across the hatchway. He was removed to Baker's Inn and Dr. Wilkinson called, who found on examination that he was badly bruised on the back and legs, and cut up some about the face. At last reports he was resting easy.

HON. L. F. KNOWLES FOR SENATOR

Is the Wish of Representative Citizens of County

AS EXPRESSED AT INFORMAL DINNER

Given in Honor of Judge Davis Monday Night

If He Consents to Use of Name Before Primaries Will Surely Win—Would be Candidate to be Proud of.

Monday night a number of the professional and business men and farmers from all parts of the county gathered at an informal dinner given at Baker's Inn in honor of Judge Davis of Ionia, who, during his many trips to this county, has made many warm friends who took this method of showing their appreciation of his friendship.

After the banquet was disposed of, which was served in the manner which has made Baker's Inn famous, the plans for the bringing of Charlevoix county to the front, by all working together for Charlevoix county all the time, was naturally discussed. The point was brought out that an opportunity was presented to secure for us representation in the state senate, and, when the choice of a candidate was brought up, only one name was heard, that of Hon. L. F. Knowles, of Boyne City. Mr. Knowles being absent his wishes in the matter could not be ascertained, but, without a dissenting voice it was decided to request Mr. Knowles to allow his name to go before the primaries for the Republican nomination for state senator next summer.

Probably if Mr. Knowles consents no candidate will go before the people, in any district, with a stronger prestige at the very start. Without solicitation or request on his part a body of representative men, gathered for another purpose, at the mention of his name had no other thought than, Knowles must be our candidate, and right well has he earned this compliment from his fellow citizens of Charlevoix county.

Leonard F. Knowles is a splendid type of the young Americans who are at the fore front in public life to-day. Thrown on his own resources at an early age, he not only secured an education but while doing so, was the main support of his family, his father being an invalid. Coming to this county, by his sincerity of purpose and cleanliness of life he soon gained the esteem of his fellow-men and when he announced himself as a candidate for the Con-Con, his candidacy was enthusiastically received and the same qualities which had gained him the nearly unanimous support of Charlevoix county gave him the election by an unequalled majority. As a member of the convention, composed of the ablest men in the state, no man ranked higher and the records of that convention proclaim him a student of government.

Such is the man whom the people of Charlevoix desire to see represent them in the next senate and we confidentially believe, that if he consents to the use of his name, he will be triumphantly nominated and elected.

WENT TO PETOSKEY

Charlevoix Odd Fellow Have a Royal Good Time

One of the largest crowds in years was present Friday evening at the regular meeting of the I. O. O. F., and a thoroughly good time was enjoyed. Big delegations come over from Charlevoix and Harbor Springs as expected, and the list of visiting members from all parts of the union, was very large. The initiatory work was performed on Lafe Gibson, after which a fine course of refreshments was served. Rev. Keiser of the Episcopal church of Charlevoix, gave a very interesting address, and Mr. Ross of the same place proved himself a prince of entertainers with his singing and monologues. Olaf Nordrum and George Green, formerly Petoskey residents, were members of the Charlevoix contingent, all of whom report a fine time. Petoskey News.

CENSUS QUESTIONS

Which Will be Asked by Enumerators.

Every One Must be Answered Truthfully or Penalty Paid.

As the time approaches for the taking of the 1910 census, interest in the subject increases. It will be of especial interest to inquire what questions will be asked and answers required. The person in question will have no choice in the matter, he must answer every question asked or take the penalty. The enumerator begins work April 15, 1910, and is given two weeks in which to complete the job.

S. Perry Younge of Stanton is the supervisor of census for this eleventh district.

Here is a list of the questions of especial interest:

Among other things the enumerator will be required to ask about the names of the household, their sex, age, conjugal condition, place of birth of parents, number of years in the United States, citizenship, occupation, whether or not employer or employe, and if employe whether or not employed at the date of enumeration and the number of months unemployed during the preceding calendar year, and whether or not engaged in agriculture.

Other questions will have to do with school attendance, literary, tenure of home, whether or not the person enumerated is a survivor of the Union or Confederate army, and the name and address of each blind or deaf and dumb person. One important consideration that is omitted from the list of queries is that of race, which owing to congressional action, will be conspicuous by its absence from the interrogations of the enumerator.

In case the person interrogated does not answer these questions, together with others that may be added in various localities, as to agriculture, manufacture, mining and other forms of industry, he may be subjected to the disagreeable and expensive experience of being taken before a federal court and fined $100, under the provisions of the law governing the taking of the census. The same penalty may be visited upon him if a false reply is returned to any of the questions.

ARRESTED AT BOYNE

Colored Man and White Girl from Fennville

Who Eloped From Allegan County Last Month.

The sheriff of Allegan county was in the city this week in quest of a man and woman whom it is alleged had eloped from Fennville some time last month. The first of this week Sheriff McWain received word from Allegan county asking for information of a colored man and a white woman, whom it was supposed had come up this way. The sheriff answered that a couple answering the description of the parties wanted were living here. The man's name was given as Arthur Watkins and that of the woman as Ethel Gale. The man was working at the Tannery and the woman was found to be working at the Woodenware plant. The sheriff arrived in the city Wednesday and arrested the pair and Thursday morning they were taken back to Fennville, where they will face charges that if found guilty will land them both in state prison. It is said that Watkins has a wife and child living in Fennville. Watkins is about twenty-eight years old and the girl seventeen.

Their whereabouts were first obtained through a letter written by Watkins to a brother in Van Buren county, asking for the loan of some money, but the result of it was they got it in the neck.—Boyne Citizen.

DEATH OF PIONEER

George W. Smith, of Bay Township Answers the Final Call

Died on Thursday, August 26, at his home in Bay township, about one mile from Horton Bay, George W. Smith, aged 67 years, of Bright's disease. Mr. Smith was well known to many in Boyne City and Charlevoix county, being one of the pioneers of this northern region. He was a man of generous impulses, and never forgot the generous ways of the sturdy pioneer. The stranger even though a begger, never failed to find food and shelter if he sought it at his hands, and he was at home by the bedside of the sick and delighted in all kind and neighborly offices. He has filled the various relations of life, as son, husband, father, brother, friend, and filled them well, and those who knew him. His life work was well done.

He leaves a wife and eight children to mourn his well spent life.

LIGHTNINGS WORK

Destroyed Barn of Fred Gray Wednesday Night

Near Deer Lake—Loss One Thousand, Partially Insured

The heavy rain storm of Wednesday night accompanied by its fierce onslaught of thunder and lightning was welcome to all of Northern Michigan, except possibly to Fred Gray, a well known farmer living near Deer Lake, whose big barn, 40 x60 feet, was struck by lightning and was burned to the ground. The storm seemed to be most severe in the region of Deer Lake, and shortly before 12 o'clock Mr. Gray was certain the lightning had struck in his immediate vicinity, as the roar of thunder and awful flash of lightning seemed to enter their very home. Mr. Gray got up a few moments after what seemed the worst crash and looked out of doors and his big farm barn was a mass of flames. Nothing could be done to save the building and all the family could do was to watch the fiery demon slowly eat its way through the whole structure.

In the barn was stored several harnesses and numerous farm tools, a calf and about fifty chickens, besides a quantity of hay and other farm products. The cows are usually kept in this barn, but on account of the weather being so hot Mr. Gray had early in the evening turned them out doors to sleep in the open which no doubt saved their lives.

The loss on the barn and contents is about $1,000, which was partially insured in the Knowles & Converse agency.

Mr. John Henry Taylor, dyer, died at his residence, Grant Road, at 6 o'clock this morning. The deceased, who was 57 years of age, came to New Zealand from Australia, and lived in various parts of New Zealand before he settled in Wellington, eleven years ago. Bridsco, of Napier. The late Mr. Taylor, who was born in Worchester, England, and had been in the colonies for 35 years, was severly burned through an explosion of benzine on his premises on Lampton quay, about two years ago, never got over the effects of the injuries.—Evening Post, July 8, 1909, Wellington, New Zealand.

MEETING FULL OF ENTHUSIASM

For the Booming of Charlevoix County

HELD AT EAST JORDAN FRIDAY

By the Board of Commerce and Grange Officers

All Will Work Together in Co-operation with West Michigan Developement Bureau

"Friday night the board of directors of the Charlevoix Board of Commerce, and a few other gentlemen interested in the developing of Charlevoix county, accepted an invitation of the East Jordan board to visit them and, at an informal banquet, talk over the plans of the West Michigan Development Bureau and plan for systematic work in preparing the exhibit and advertising from this county.

Those making the trip were S. A. Marting, A. F. Bridge, E. S. Stacks, D. S. Payton, W. E. Hamptun, R. W. Kane, D. F. Meech, W. J. Rachow, Dr. F. H. Wilkinson and Glean M. DuBois. The Charlevoix bunch were met at the dock by the East Jordan committee and escorted to the Russel house dining room where the board had a banquet prepared for their visitors. After the eatables had been disposed of the meeting was called to order by President Squires, of the East Jordan Board of Commerce, who explained the purpose of the meeting and called upon D. S. Payton, director of the bureau to explain the plans of the bureau, what was asked of East Jordan and what had already been accomplished in collecting statistics etc.

Mr. Payton said that statistics had been gathered of the schools churches, secret organizations, telephones, rural routes, lands etc., and that what the bureau now wished was the collecting of farm scenes and the products of Charlevoix county. A very interesting and animated discussion took place, questions being fired at Mr. Payton from every direction which he proved himself fully prepared to answer. The question of the co-operation of the granges was brought up and H. L. Olney and Martin Rhuling of the executive committee and Glenn M. DuBois, Pomona lecturer, assured the business men present that the grange was the pioneer in the movement and would lead the procession. At the conclusion of the discussion, President Squires assured Mr. Payton that East Jordan was prepared to pay over the sum asked for and perform her share of the labor involved.

Thus another link was forged in the chain which binds the Charlevoix, East Jordan and Boyne City's business men's associations together with the farmers, all working together for Charlevoix county, all the time.

It is hoped to have a meeting of all four organizations in a short time and to make further plans.

The case was given to the jury Tuesday afternoon and a verdict of guilty with one thousand dollar damages was returned.

The case of Emrey vs. Emrey replevin, the next case called, was quickly disposed of, the judge directing a verdict of no cause of action.

As we go to press the case of Kratee vs. Johnescheck, trespass on appeal is on trial.

Back Taxes Due State.

Auditor General O. B. Fuller figures that there is exactly $1,082,332.80 in back takes unpaid in the state. Most of this large sum is owed by the railroads and one road, the D. G. H. & M. is said to be the sum of $700,000.

It is figured that at least $1,010,498.62 is what the railroads owed the state up to August 1. However, all money from the railroads goes into the state primary fund and would mean a nice nest egg for that department for distribution.

The large sum involved over the refusal of the Detroit, Grand Haven & Milwaukee to pay is due to litigation which is in the courts and while the state has been given an adverse decision twice in the supreme court the matter is still being investigated to see if the railroad cannot be compelled to pay this large sum to the state.

One Year of Prohibition in Worcester, Massachusetts

Worcester, Mass., has a population of 128,135. On May 1, 1908, 128 saloons and a score of wholesale liquor stores and hotel bars went out of legal business. On May 1, 1909, at the close of the first year under local prohibition, so far as saloons are concerned, but handicapped with breweries still running and license towns within less than an hour's ride in almost any direction, the public records nevertheless afford a remarkable testimony to the value of prohibition even in so limited an area.

The fact that prohibition has been a success in Worcester is strongly confirmed in the vote last December, when for the second successive year the people voted in favor of the prohibition policy.

The facts now published regarding the first full year of prohibition in Worcester include these items: The arrests for drunkenness have decreased more than 55 per cent, and other crimes in proportion, as the following table issued by the Massachusetts No-License League, will show:

May 1, 1907-May 1, 1908, License; Compared with May 1, 1908-May 1, 1909, No-License.

Arrests for drunkenness, license, 3921, no-license, 1843, decrease under prohibition, 2081; arrests for assault and battery, 382, 263, 119; arrests for larceny, 313, 255, 58; arrests for neglect and non-support, 112, 87, 25; arrests for disturbing the peace, 210, 109, 99; alcoholic ward, city hospital, 274, 144, 130; deaths from alcoholism, 30, 6, 24; deaths from all causes, 2560, 2120, 440.

Out of 145 leading business men of the city who were asked for their opinions as to the affects of no-license, 107 declared in favor of a continuance of the no-license policy, 24 were noncommittal, and 14 were opposed to no-license.

The heads of a number of these big concerns give remarkable testimony as to the value of prohibition strictly from a business point of view. The grocers and provision dealers of the city at their last annual meeting voted to support the prohibition cause, declaring in a public statement that the general financial depression had not affected them and that the bills of the working people were being paid more promptly than ever before. The small grocers throughout the city declare that prohibition has been a decided benefit to them.

While it was asserted that the surrounding towns would vote license, every town bordering on Worcester has voted prohibition since Worcester abolished the saloons, although many were previously under license.

The aggregate local prohibition majority throughout Massachusetts for the year beginning May 1, 1909, is 25,951, a gain of 10,558 votes for prohibition since May 1, 1908.

BENJ. BROWN

A Good Feed For Hogs.

A successful Kansas breeder has experimented with hogs in feeding various rations and thinks he has found a feed that does the work just a little more satisfactorily than anything else.

"In feeding hogs," he says, "I let them run with the cattle, as usual. But I do not believe that hogs do just the best kind in following cattle and getting nothing else but corn. They need some variation from that and will do better when they get some other feed besides the corn they get with the cattle in the feed lot.

In feeding a recent carload of hogs that brought top prices I gave them a slop composed of water, shorts, linseed meal and tankage. I make this slop thin and salt it pretty freely. I put in shorts to the same amount of weight as both the tankage and linseed meal. It makes a very fine feed and one which hogs relish very much. I give it three times each day and find the hogs ready for it each time. It sort of sharpens up their appetites and at the same time acts as a laxative, keeping them in the best condition.

"The cost of this feed is not very much, so that in fattening this carload of hogs from the very start they cost very little and represented a large profit in my spring feeding."

The Prince and the Bell.

When Edward VII. of England was Prince of Wales he was in Philadelphia in 1860, and he took great interest in the relics of the Revolutionary period, although his visit to Independence hall was projected purely in a spirit of mischief by his entertainers. In rummaging in the garret the party discovered the old cracked bell, which had been somewhat contemptuously hidden away, and this more than any other relic seemed to fascinate the prince, whose words have been thus reported:

"This old bell is the greatest relic this republic has today. Instead of being here, covered with this accumulated dirt, it should occupy the chief place in this hall of independence. It is to you what the Magna Charta is to England. It is cracked, but it is an inspiration. Believe me, my friends, it affects me more than anything I have been shown."

The good sense of this suggestion appealed immediately to the pride and sensibility of the custodians of the relics, and from that moment the Liberty bell took its "chief place in the hall of independence."

Another Opportunity.

A Certain Man, having read somewhere that Opportunity knocks only once at each one's door, concluded to Sit up all Night for fear he would Miss the Call. So while he was Sitting near his Door there came a heavy Knock thereon.

When he opened the Door a Stranger seized him and Beat him all up and Took his Money and Garments and Chided him for being so Easy.

"But," said the Man, thinking to excuse himself, "I thought it was Opportunity who knocked."

"So it was," responded the Other, "but it was my Opportunity."

MODERN METHODS

Today Progressive Regions Put Themselves on the Map by Advertising.

WESTERN MICHIGAN DEVELOPMENT BUREAU TO PUSH PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN.

The people of eleven counties in Michigan are pinning their faith to the Western Michigan Development Bureau. They expect it to do great things for the northwestern part of the lower peninsula. It must be understood, however, that the bureau has strong competitors, that other regions in other states are aggressively reaching out after new settlers and new industries. An article appearing in a recent issue of the Advertisers' Almanack will give an idea of just how strong is that competition. The article in question is in part as follows:

"Hardly any part of our country has escaped the contagious public spirit which aims to make 'welcome to our city' mean something really substantial. New England, the South, the Southwest, the Pacific Coast, the Northwest and the Inland Empire have used publicity in magazines and newspapers successfully to call attention to their individual advantages.

"The Inland Empire is mentioned last, as would be natural with us eastern folk; but it is strictly a case of the last being first, after all.

"Spokane, Washington, is the capital and source of energy of the Inland Empire. They call it 'the best exploited inland city in the United States,' and it has now set out to popularize the empire as a whole. This latter comprises about 150,000 square miles of eastern Washington, northern Idaho, western Montana, and northeastern Oregon, and reaches over 'a little mite,' as New Englanders would say, into southeastern British Columbia. The publicity work has been done with the support of the Chamber of Commerce and the '150,000 Club.' About $60,000 were spent in 1908. They had 35,000 inquiries, placed about 25,000 settlers in the empire, and added sixty new manufacturing plants to the district. Bank clearings increased $6,372,460; manufacturing output increased 10 per cent, in spite of bad times; 100,000 acres of land were added to the irrigated belts; 500 miles of railroad were built, and in developing one distinct industry of the empire, apple raising, 7,000,000 trees were set out. Further to emphasize this apple industry, the National Apple Show was incorporated with $100,000 capital, and the first show, last December, was most successful. The Inland Empire is expected to spend $100,000 in advertising itself this year.

"In Idaho, twenty-one cities and towns have associated themselves in the League of Southern Idaho Commercial Clubs, with headquarters at Boise, and are conducting an extensive campaign.

"In the Northwest coast country, Seattle and Portland are advertising extensively. Seattle issued building permits, representing a value of $15,777,329 in 1908, being between 30 per cent and 40 per cent better than in 1907. In Portland, the Oregon Development League has its headquarters. It is made up of 82 separate municipal organizations, with paid secretaries in fifteen cities. Skilled advertisers are employed, and a highly constructive campaign is being followed out. Mr. Tom Richardson, the manager of the Portland Commercial Club, said that through advertising customers had been attracted to the state of Oregon who had increased the sale of dairy products—to name one item only—from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000 in the past five years. In 1908 Portland's building permits represented a value of $10,411,951, giving it rank as the eighth American city in building in that year.

"Reaching up into Canada, perhaps the most notable success in city advertising is found. Winnipeg, through its Development and Industrial Bureau, has conducted an advertising campaign for two years. In that time the bureau used 32,772 lines of advertising, much of it in magazines. They report 10,771 incoming communications; 3,874 actual requests for information from manufacturers; 33 manufacturing establishments brought to Winnipeg, and 151 industrial and commercial companies incorporated with total capital of $28,616,600. Winnipeg's bank clearings increased more rapidly than those of any Canadian city.

"Vancouver Island, B. C., also got the spirit, and spent $4,000 for publicity with such results that in 1909 it will spend $12,000.

"Coming back to our own country, we find the following:

"The South has been an energetic advertiser. It has been said that 'more people have been advertised into Texas' in the last few years than in any other state in the Union, beginning with the famous campaign of Dallas. They received 22,000 inquiries in nine months, secured eleven strong industries the first year, sold $2,000,000 worth of farms within a radius of twenty-five miles of Dallas, and twenty-five or thirty outside business concerns, attracted by the advertising, opened branch houses in the city. Manufacturers are still being found for Dallas every little while. Houston, Texas, has a campaign now running in magazines and newspapers. The Matagorda water district in Texas is also being advertised. Other Texas cities which are using publicity are Fort Worth, San Antonio and Galveston.

"The state of Maine, seeing the advantages of its wonderful coast line and its bountiful harvests of potatoes and apples, has also taken notice of the power of publicity and in its legislature a bill was introduced a few days ago, calling for a Commissioner of Publicity at $1,800 a year and $10,000 a year for [illegible] placed in standard publications of national circulation,' and 'to collect and disseminate all possible information about the state and its resources.'

"In England, too, the municipal publicity spirit is abroad in the land. A bill was presented in parliament not long ago, permitting certain English towns to advertise to a designated extent. A larger step has now been suggested, which is for the English government to advertise along imperial lines,' and try to push British products in every part of the world."

For the Western Michigan Development Bureau to compete successfully in this great game of development it must have the united support of every citizen. The local region has as fair opportunities as any of the places enumerated by the Almanack, but it certainly will take aggressive support to herald the advantages of western Michigan to the world.

WHY WE SHOULD DEVELOP AGRICULTURALLY.

Frank Smith, who has a fruit farm on the Peninsula near Mapleton, has been doing a little figuring so as to discover if possible what profits, if any, there are in systematic and thorough fruit farming, says the Traverse City Eagle. The past season he kept track of the expense of cultivating, trimming, spraying and picking 13 Crawford peach trees. His records show that this cost was $16. The fruit from these 13 trees sold for $71.50, which makes the net profit for the 13 trees $56.45. This is a profit of $4.34 a tree. As these trees are set so that there would be 109 to the acre the net profits from an acre of such trees would be $473.06. Mr. Smith is of the opinion that these figures prove that there are much larger profits in peach growing than potato raising.

Three crab apple trees on Mr. Smith's farm gave ten barrels of apples which were sold for $30. The expenses of getting the crop grown, harvested and marketed are given by Mr. Smith as follows:

Cultivating	$ .75
Spraying	.75
Picking	8.00
Barrels	3.00
Cartage	1.50
Commission	3.90
Total	$17.90

The difference between the selling price and the expenses is $21.10. This is a net profit of $7.03 a tree.

A single Alexander tree on Mr. Smith's farm produced 12 barrels of apples at a total cost as shown below:

Cultivating and spraying	$ 1.00
Picking	1.50
Barrels	4.20
Packing	1.00
Cartage	1.80
Commission	4.20
Total	$13.70

These apples sold for $3.50 a barrel, or a total of $42, continues the Eagle. The clear profit on this tree was, therefore, $28.30. Allowing for 50 apple trees to the acre, the profits, had Mr. Smith had an acre set to Alexander trees and each tree had done as well as the one for which the record is given, would have been $1,415.

Surely these figures prove, if they prove anything, that there is about as much money in fruit raising in the Grand Traverse region as in operating a bank. A net return of $1,115 an acre a year, ought to be good enough for anybody. Suppose a man had 40 acres of such Alexander trees! His net profits for the season would have been $56,600.

The moral to all this is that there is big money to be made in intelligent fruit growing in the Grand Traverse region, concludes the Eagle, and the quicker that we get our lands to producing fancy fruit the quicker Traverse City will become the commercial center for one of the most prosperous and progressive sections of the entire state.

Every thoughtful man in western Michigan knows that the conclusions of The Eagle about the Grand Traverse region are equally applicable to this entire portion of the state. In the big world outside a contrary impression has grown up, and to correct this error and to spread abroad a knowledge of the real opportunities to be found here is the object of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. The bureau deserves the support of every man who wishes to see western Michigan grow.

A wise man once showed his boys the strength of a bundle of sticks tied together and their weakness when separated, meaning thereby that his sons were powerful just so long as they worked together in harmony. Similarly the counties of Western Michigan united in such an organization as the Western Michigan Development Bureau can produce results impossible to all of the counties working separately.

The Portland Chamber of Commerce stands at the head of the Oregon Development League which is a union of individual organizations in the various cities of that state. Similarly the Western Michigan Development Bureau would unite the efforts and promote the co-operation of the various towns of Western Michigan.

Boards of Trade and similar organizations must unite their efforts in order to produce the largest results. The Western Michigan Development Bureau is a unification of the individuals and the organizations that wish to promote the varied advantages and develop the manifold resources of Western Michigan.

The owners of real estate will be the greatest single benefactors of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. It is only fair therefore that the owners of real estate should support the organization by a regular sum spread on the tax roll.

Nobody connected with the Western Michigan Development Bureau gets one cent of salary.

This is an age of co-operation. The Western Michigan Development Bureau exemplifies the spirit in doing Western Michigan.

A Popular Drafter.

The popularity of Percherons continues to grow in this country, and there is always a good demand for these great draflers. The breed takes its name from the district of La Perche, in France, which is now the chief draft horse breeding and handling center in that country.

The modern Percheron stands sixteen hands high and over, weighs from 1,700 to 2,200 pounds and is white, gray or black in color. He has an intelligent head, of a type peculiar to the breed; rather small ears and eyes; short, strongly muscled neck; strong, well laid shoulders and chest; a plump, rotund body, strong back, heavy quarters and somewhat drooping croup. He usually is low down and blocky, on short, clean legs, devoid of feather, and has well shaped, sound hoofs.

Early Maturity in Swine.

This is an exceedingly desirable quality in most animals, but is particularly so in hogs. If the spring pigs can be made to grow rapidly, lay on the right kind of flesh and fat and be marketed in the fall, the profit is sure to be considerable. Most of the growth and weight are put on while plenty of pasture is available. This makes it possible to secure gain at a very low figure. Breeds like Poland-Chinas, Essex, Thin Rind, Small Yorkshire, etc., seem to be quite desirable for early maturity.

The Breeding Sow.

The breeding sow should be selected on account of her fitness for her maternal duties. She should be long and deep of body and have many teats. She should have short legs well placed, level back, fine head, ears and coat and a good disposition.

In Italy no ancient monument can be restored nor can any old building be altered without special permission from the government.

AT the great exhibition, to be made at Chicago next winter, of the products of Western Michigan it is also desired that photographs of farm scenes, herds, buildings, grange halls, school houses and other public buildings be secured. Among the plans of the different boards of trade, in the several counties in this section is the securing of as many of these photographs as possible already arrangements have been made to send out a force from each city to cover as much of the ground as they can in a limited time and secure these pictures and other data in regard to the productiveness of our orchards, fields and herds. As it will be impossible to cover all the ground everybody is requested to send in to this office any pictures, or any other material, they may have which will aid in the all together effort which is being made to bring the attention of the outside world, the advantages of Northern Michigan and Charlevoix County.

Gives Railroad Men Show.

Act No. 104 of the Public Acts passed by the last session of the legislature takes effect to-morrow. By this enactment the fellow servant liability law is repealed so far as railroads and common carriers are concerned. All common carriers are made responsible for the acts of their officers, agents or employes.

This means that the railroads will have to treat their injured employes far more generously than in years past, when nearly every damage case brought against the corporation by the widow of the victim of a railroad accident or by the victim himself, if he was lucky enough to survive, was appealed to the supreme court on the fellow servant liability clause, a pure technicality, and there the damage usually awarded in the circuit court was set aside or reduced.

FOREST RANGERS WANTED

By the United States, Beginners Salary Nine Hundred Dollars

The United States Forest reservation service will hold an examination, October 25 and 26, at the headquarters of each National Forest, to select and make one hundred appointments to fill vacancies in the Forest Ranger force. The examination will be held in Au Sable for Michigan.

While the examination is entirely along practical lines and knowledge of field conditions rather than book learning is considered essential, the opportunities for those applicants with educational advantages are considerably increased. The rapid development of the National Forest is making continually increased demands upon those engaged in their management, and men with ability to assume responsibility and serve in supervisory capacities are in demand. Those more responsible positions on the National Forests are filled by promotion from lower grades, so that any one entering as a ranger is eligible for promotion to any of the more responsible and higher paid places including that of forest supervisor.

Only those men who are at least twenty-one years of age, not more than forty, of good character, temperate and in good physical condition, are eligible to take this examination. The salary paid to beginners is $900 a year.

Applicants can secure information concerning the examination from the District Forestry at Missoula, Montana, Forest Supervisors, or the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

TRAVELING ON SLEEPING CARS

How to Prepare For a Journey and Be Comfortable.

Preparations for a night's journey differ much from those for a day's trip; because the same articles are not required; hence the selection for the former must include comfort, and to secure this one must have personal experience or suggestions from some traveler.

A long dressing gown—a thin one in summer and a warm one in winter—is better than a night robe for sleeping. It is a mistake not to remove all the clothing when going to bed, but at the same time one should be in condition to go to the dressing room if necessary, so a wrapper fills the bill completely and is incidentally comfortable.

Toilet articles resolve themselves into a box of cold cream; also either some toilet water or saturated solution of borax. The water to be found in sleeping car toilet rooms is not only lacking in qualities for cleansing, but the basins are so abused by careless travelers that a very neat woman will not care to use them. So with her own cleansing agents she is independent. A box of toilet powder, a nail brush and soap and a brush and comb, with toothbrush, complete this outfit. She must carry her own soap. There is no greater danger of contracting skin trouble than by using soap that has been applied by others. For use on trains a pair of big soft gloves is necessary to traveling comfort and cleanliness. Wear these through the night, because the grime and dinginess that are rubbed into the hands through long hours of travel and from contact with the berth blankets are such that it often takes time to get them white again.

In the morning undergarments are put on in the berth, and then, drawing on the dressing gown and taking the hand bag and frock, the journey is made to the dressing room, where there is a reasonable amount of room to finish the toilet properly. Instead of wetting the face with water, it and the ears and neck should be smeared with cold cream. This must be wiped off with a fresh towel. Another portion of the towel must then be wet with either toilet water or borax solution and the greasy surface cleansed. This application removes all trace of cream and dust. If the hands have been protected at night by gloves they will not need washing, and one is saved putting them into a basin that looks unattractive. On completion of the toilet a woman may look as fresh as though dressed in her own room.

How to Use Crude Oil on the Scalp.

The use of coal oil on the scalp is quite common, but not every one who knows the value of petroleum realizes that crude oil is even better. The former, being not so heavy as the crude product, works farther into the scalp and may affect the color glands.

In using either the crude oil or petroleum it is much better to have some one else apply it. It is almost impossible to put it on so it does not get on the long hair, giving it a sticky, ugly look.

Crude oil should be applied at least a day before the hair is to be shampooed. Instruct whoever makes the application to get the oil on the scalp only, working it in well with the tips of the fingers. If this is done the hair is much improved; otherwise it is a dust collector and does more harm than good.

Be sure after applying crude oil that the shampooer uses hot enough water to remove it. If it appears to stick, rub a little pure white soap over the head to assist the removal of the grease.

How to Iron a White Skirt.

To iron a white underskirt begin at the strings and waistband, then take the bottom of the skirt. Iron all round on the right side with a very hot iron, then iron the first frill. This frill will probably have sewed work or lace. In either case it must be nicely ironed on the wrong side. Probably above the frill there will be tucks or hems. They must next be ironed over the wrong side and afterward on the right. Rub the iron the way of the item. If there is a second frill the cloth under the frill is ironed at the same time as the hem or tucks and the frill again ironed on the wrong side. Put skirt board into the skirt and place each end of the board on the table, thus allowing the skirt to hang over the board. It can thus be easily ironed and nicely finished. Afterward fold it lengthwise and hang up to air.

How to Preserve Your Sight.

A noted oculist advises against using the eyes immediately after waking. Therefore the habit of many young girls of reading or studying in bed is injurious. It is harmful to use the eyes when sleepy, as it is a great strain upon the muscles. If one must read or write when drowsy rise occasionally and bathe the eyes with hot or cold water. Remember that a quick change from a dark room to a brilliant light is a strain upon the eyes.

How to Clean Bottles.

To clean bottles fill them with scraps of newspaper torn into small bits, and put a little soapsuds in the water. Shake the bottle vigorously until the paper has been dissolved to a pulp, and then rinse the bottle thoroughly. You will be surprised how even the dirtiest bottle can be cleaned easily and thoroughly and made bright and shining.

Here's something for some of those southern Michigan farmers who think this an unproductive, worthless region to try and equal (we know they can't beat it): Will Hissett, who lives about a mile and a half south of Alden, just across the line in Kalkaska county, on a farm that is considered more than ordinarily sandy and below the average in fertility, threshed the wheat from three acres of ground last week and and had 105 bushels, or an average of thirty-five bushels per acre. It's getting along time of year for us to begin publishing crop statistics of this region that will keep the southern Michigan farmer guessing to meet them, or even approach them.—Elk Rapids Progress.

THEATRICAL

"A Royal Slave is one of the most elaborate and beautifully melodramatic productions on the road. The scenery is the finest that the studios can furnish and is painted from photographs made in Mexico. The costumes and stage accessories are very rich and the powerful and thrilling dramatic situations, make the play a series of beautiful stage pictures. Though it is a melodrama of the sensational sort, there is not a shot fired during the entire play, and it is possessed of real literary and dramatic merit of a high order.

This great production represents more than half a year's work by an able corps of scenic artists and skilled mechanics, and will give our people a chance to see, not only the beautiful scenic equipment but decidedly the most original play on the stage of this country. A dispatch from Muskegon says: After nearly two years of labor in a specially equipped laporatory at the plant of the Central Paper Co., George H. Tousey and Walter H. Dickerson, two New York chemists, have perfected a process whereby the waste liquor from the pulp mills of the paper factory may be utilized profitably in the manufacture of an extract of tanning leather.

The result of the chemists' laboratory investigations is a new industry for this city, the Muskegon Extract company and the likelihood, if the process is generally adopted, of considerably lowering the cost of manufacturing paper.

The Muskegon Extract company has been incorporated with a capitalization of $100,000 and articles of incorporation filed at Lansing. Eugene Meurer, president of the Central Paper company, and E. M. Perry, secretary and general manager of the same concern, are interested in the new enterprise.

Work has been started on a brick building 100 feet long and 40 feet wide for the extract company adjoining the site of the Central Paper company mills. If the process works out as successfully as predicted, it will be necessary to greatly enlarge the building to handle the thousands of gallons of waste liquor that came every year from the big digestors at the paper mill where the wood chips are mingled with acids and cooked into paper pulp.

The Michigan railroad commission has just issued an order prohibiting state railroads from running any trains backward or with the cars ahead of the engine. The various lines are given 90 days to put in Y's and turntables and it is probable that the orders will cause a great wail because of the expense resulting. The chief reason is that the engineer does not have a clear view of the track over the pile of coal on the tender.

The commission has also issued an order regulating the speed limit over interlocking plants, the maximum for passenger trains with interlockers in the very best of condition being 30 miles an hour, another for freight trains 20 miles an hour. If interlockers are not in the very best of condition the speed must be less.

During the past year Albert Widdis has been shipping the slabs removed from the old docks along the bay to Detroit, as everyone supposed for kindlings. It now develops that he has been experimenting on their use for the manufacture of paper, and that the experiment has proven entirely successful, and that the very best grade of paper can be made from the pulp obtained from these slabs.

Mr. Widdis has shown us a sample of the pulp which is of excellent quality. He owns a large quantity of this material along the Huron shore, having purchased many of the abandoned docks, even as far north as Cheboygan and estimates that he has sufficient to supply a first class mill for 25 years.

In talking of the matter to Mr. Widdis, the Herald scribe broached the matter of manufacturing the pulp here. A mill of ordinary capacity gives steady employment to about 50 hands and such an institution would certainly be a godsend to our city at this time. In addition to the material already mentioned it would supply a demand for the pulp wood of our farmers, thousands of cords of which are growing tributary to this city.

Why should action not be taken at once to see what can be accomplished toward the establishment of this industry here?

It would be a permanent institution as the demand for paper is ever increasing.

Let our city fathers and citizens generally "get a move" on them and see if we cannot land this industry instead of allowing the raw material to be shipped elsewhere to be manufactured thus supplying labor for others while our laboring men have to go elsewhere for work. The matter has been broached to a number of our leading citizens and all are most favorably impressed with the idea, and it will probably be taken up by the city council at once.—Tawas Herald.

Race Suicide a Blessing.

Once more Dr. Woods Hutchinson has come to the rescue of our much abused civilization. In September Woman's Home Companion, he points out that not only are all wrong about the race-suicide problem, but there isn't any.

According to Doctor Hutchinson, the whole question is befogged by misconceptions. He says the question is not a new one, but is very old. An increasing population is a sign of civilization. As for our immediate forefathers, they can claim no credit for large families, for they either gave no thought to the question at all, or else welcomed children as future bread-winners.

"To sum up," he says, "I believe that the evidence is conclusive that race suicide, so far as it has yet gone, has proved an almost unmixed blessing instead of a curse; that the race can never again return to the method of blind and wholesale reproduction without thought of the future. No class or group in the community which believes itself worthy to exist can of course view with equanimity any proposal to limit the offspring of marriage to less than three, or such number as may be necessary to secure the survival of that quota to adult age, so that the second generation may be at least a trifle more numerous than the first.

"On the other hand, biologic morality, while depreciating the production of children, who are likely to be born unfit, or become so from lack of proper support and training, glorifies and exalts as both the highest racial duty and the most precious individual privilege the bearing of children by those who are personally fit to bear and financially competent to rear such as will be of value to the state. There is no achievement, better worth living for, no more valuable legacy that can be left to the future, no more enduring claim to honorable remembrance, than a family of well-born, well-reared children.

"At the same time there is a growing tendency to encourage and promote in every possible way the marriage at a reasonably early age of young people, who are particularly desirable as future ancestors, to use a Hibernicism. Some day possibly we may become sufficiently intelligent to endow this sort of matrimony with state funds. At all events, an intelligent direction of race fertility, by selection of parents and rational limitation of the number of children, will be the path of future progress."

THE TOP SOIL ROAD.

Details of a Method Which Originated In Clark County, Ga.

MATERIAL IN FIELDS TAKEN.

Soil Used Must Have Enough Sand or Gravel and Clay to Resist Action of Traffic and Weather—Cost From $250 to $300 Per Mile.

A new method of road construction which was recently evolved in Clark county, Ga., is called the top soil method, because it consists of building the road out of the surface soil from the adjacent fields. In some respects it is like the sand-clay method, while in others it is similar to the gravel road. So far as the writer is aware, Clark county, Ga., enjoys the distinction of having originated this method. The details were worked out by Professor C. M. Strahn of Georgia university and Clark county's commissioner of deeds.

The success of this method depends largely upon the soil used. Just any soil will not do. It must have enough sand or gravel in it to resist the action of the traffic and weather and enough clay to bind the particles together. It is well known that, although clay has a high cementing value, it will not make a good road if used alone on account of the fact that when it is wet it absorbs moisture and softens. It is also well known that round, water worn gravel or sand which is clean and free from clay will not produce a satisfactory road surface because neither will bind, but if clay, gravel and sand are mixed together in certain proportions they have been found to produce a surface which will be both hard and smooth the year round.

If these materials can be found already mixed the trouble and expense of mixing can be avoided. It is a common practice throughout the United States to use bank gravel for road surfacing which has a little clay in it, but Clark county is the first, I believe, to skin the top soil from the adjacent fields and use it for this purpose. It was observed in Clark county that where the top soil consisted of a mixture of sand, gravel and clay the sand and gravel had been drawn toward the surface and incorporated with the clay during cultivation.

TOP SOIL ROAD, ATHENS, GA.
(From Good Roads Magazine, New York.)

The road is located and graded in the same manner as for gravel or macadam. The foundation is then shaped with a road machine and slightly crowned in the center, after which a layer of suitable top soil is spread to a width of about sixteen feet and a depth of about ten inches in the center and three or four inches at the sides. The next step is to open up the side ditches with a road machine. The earth from the ditches is thrown up against the bed of top soil as a shoulder.

The road machine is then used to level off the surface and to give it the proper slope from the center to the side ditches. The road is now thrown open to traffic and soon packs down into a hard, dry surface. If rainy weather occurs during the spreading of the material or soon after, so much the better. Wet weather and heavy traffic assist in the mixing and puddling process. After this process has continued until the surface soil is thoroughly mixed, the road is dressed and reshaped with a light two horse grader. This treatment is continued until the surface is well hardened and all soft or uneven spots are removed.

To get the best top soil along any particular road hand samples are taken and examined before the work is begun. Samples of uniform size are selected and the percentage of gravel, sand and clay ascertained by washing out the clay and sifting out the sand. The sample which appears to have about the right proportion of sand, gravel and clay is selected. From 10 to 25 per cent of clay appears to be sufficient for binding material.

Aside from the grading, these top soil roads cost from $250 to $300 per mile. The road shown in the photograph was so bad the winter before it was improved that the traffic was forced into the adjacent woods and cotton fields to avoid the deep ruts and mudholes. Although the road had just passed through a hard winter and had been subjected to much heavy hauling, the photograph shows that now it is not only free from ruts and mudholes, but that it is hard and smooth.—Maurice O. Eldridge in Good Roads Magazine.

WHICH WAS THE GUILTY MAN?

[Original.]

I am retired from the banking business after thirty years' service. On one occasion during this long term a singular thing occurred. The bank I was connected with was a small affair and we rarely had in the vault over fifty or sixty thousand dollars in currency, but at one time, owing to a peculiar financial condition of the country, we had over two hundred thousand. This money had accumulated during the week and reached the above figure on Saturday at the close of banking hours.

That Saturday night I fell to thinking about this great sum on hand. Our safe was an old pattern and could be readily opened by any bank robber with an ordinary capacity for his business. The combination was known to two officers of the bank (the president and cashier) and myself. I was paying teller. I was not thinking of any danger from within, only from without. The matter having once got into my head I couldn't get it out. I sat at home thinking about it till after midnight and then, without any definite purpose, put on my hat and walked to the bank, which was but a few blocks away. I strolled past the building, turned back and, yielding to an impulse, went in, made straight for the vault, saw no evidence of change and was about to turn away when a desire seized me to see that the cash was there. I was turning the combination knob when the door opened and the cashier entered.

"What are you doing here?" he asked, evidently astonished and at the same time suspicious.

"I came to see that the cash is all right. What did you come for?"

"I came for that too. I confess I didn't expect to find the teller of the bank opening the vault at this time of night."

"And I didn't expect the cashier to put in an appearance. Your tone indicates a suspicion that I am here to rob."

"I can't think of anything more suspicious than the teller of the bank opening the vault at 1 o'clock in the morning."

At that moment a door at the other end of the room opened, and who should walk in but the president. On seeing us he looked surprised.

"What's happened?" he asked quickly. "Any funds missing?"

"I think not," said the cashier. "But there is no telling how much would have been taken had I not arrived at the nick of time."

"I was worried," I faltered, "at having so large an amount of currency in the safe and could not resist an impulse to come and see that all was right."

"And count the funds!" sneered the cashier.

"What brought you?" asked the president of the cashier.

The cashier tried to stammer out a better excuse than I had given and, failing, finally blurted:

"And what brought you, for the matter of that?"

"I? I often come to the bank before going to bed to see that all is safe. Sometimes I get up at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, come here, look around and go home. Tonight, having so much currency in the safe, I was especially anxious."

"Having come first," I said, "on the same errand, I presume I am caught in the act."

"What were you opening the vault for?" asked the cashier. "Couldn't you see that if hadn't been tampered with?"

"I could see that. It hadn't been blown open, but I couldn't see that the lock hadn't been picked or that some one knowing the combination hadn't opened it and taken the funds."

"Gentlemen," said the president, "we will have a look at the money and go home."

I was directed to open the safe. The bills were found in piles as they had been left in the afternoon, and the safe was closed, and we separated.

The next day I was called before the president for an examination, which lasted two hours, and when I came out of his private office I saw the cashier go in, as I inferred, for a similar purpose. Notwithstanding that I showed a clean record, the president and cashier after consultation decided to dismiss me.

I appealed to the board of directors, giving them a statement of the facts.

After a meeting for consultation the board gave out a decision that the meeting of the three in the bank was a coincidence, that there was no guilt attached to any one of us, but, rather, we were all to be commended for our watchfulness.

The only good this did me was that I retained my position. I was still under suspicion. This was fostered by the cashier, who, I supposed, won over the president to his views. Nevertheless the president acquiesced in the decision of the board and exonerated me.

It was but a few weeks after all this happened that we were startled at an announcement that the president had resigned and the cashier had been promoted to the vacant position. I was smarting under what I considered a blow, for since the cashier considered me guilty of an intent to rob the bank, he would likely put me out in time, when the new president informed me that I had been promoted to succeed him as cashier.

I was thunderstruck. He did not refer to the past, and I went about my new duties in ignorance of what had happened to change the situation.

In ten days it came out that the president had lost $200,000 in the stock market. NELSON MAXWELL.

WARREN'S GREAT SPEECH BEFORE FEDERAL COURT

Indictment of Capitalism and Its Despotic Institutions.

Eloquent Plea For a Free Press and Free Speech.

Epoch Making as Patrick Henry's Immortal Oration.

THE SENTENCE.

Warren was sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000, the cost of the prosecution and to serve six months in the Fort Scott jail.

By GEORGE H. SHOAF.

No court in the history of jurisprudence ever presented a scene more replete with dramatic interest than that witnessed in the federal building at Fort Scott, Kan., Thursday afternoon, July 24, when, in response to Judge Pollock's invitation to show cause why sentence should not be pronounced, Fred D. Warren, editor of the Appeal to Reason, arose and began to speak. The last bit of uncontradicted evidence disclosing the bias and prejudice of the jurors who convicted Warren had been introduced. The last argument in behalf of justice for the defendant had been made by his attorneys. Bone and West of the prosecution had declined to reply to Darrow and Boyle. Judge Pollock had just delivered his decision overruling the motions for an arrest of judgment and a new trial. Everything that could be said and everything that could be done to reverse the processes of the court and snatch victory from defeat had been said and done.

Unconquered Client.

Tense were the feelings of the spectators as Warren faced the court. Instinctively it was realized that something was about to happen, but just what it would be no one could think or say. The benign face of Clarence Darrow, the celebrated lawyer who in a hundred courts has championed labor's cause and whose voice from a thousand platforms has been lifted in behalf of the poor and oppressed, showed concern, as did the faces of his associate attorneys, when it became evident that their defeated but unconquered client was about to initiate action in his own behalf. The government's agents and attorneys looked as if a red flag had been unexpectedly unfolded or a bomb was about to be hurled, and they cringed speechless in their chairs. Judge Pollock himself, his eyes fastened on the figure before him, his countenance plainly revealing the conflicting emotions of his mind, sat as if stricken dumb.

Voice Rang Like a Clarion.

"Yes, your honor, there are some reasons why sentence of the court should not be pronounced."

With his hands on the table before him and his eyes looking straight and fearlessly into those of the court, Warren's voice rang like a clarion as he began a speech as remarkable as it is without a parallel. The unexpectedness of the proceeding and Warren's boldness of utterance astounded Judge Pollock. Once or twice Prosecuting Attorney Bone looked appealingly at the court as if the latter dignitary ought to forechose on the speaker's remarks, but the court was too preoccupied with amazement to except. To a silenced judge and in the presence of an audience whose very breathing could neither be felt nor heard capitalism's most prominent victim and labor's uncompromising champion proceeded with the uncovering of the causes that had led to his conviction. Never in his life had Judge Pollock listened to a speech like this; never in the history of jurisprudence was there a speech like this made in a federal court.

Situation Dramatic Beyond Words.

Warren represented in the concrete the agony and woe, the blood and tears of the working class of the world. He typified the issue between the ruling class and those who are fighting the age-long war for human emancipation. Through him were voiced the outraged sentiments of men, women and children who in the field, factories and mines do the work of the world and who in some way would protest against the methods by which the wealth their work creates is taken from them and given to those who labor not. Here in this federal court, the strongest bulwark of the system that is responsible for the agony and blood and outraged sentiments, Warren, already convicted and about to receive sentence, faced without hesitation and without a tremor the flesh and blood embodiment of capitalism's mighty power and challenged him to do his worst.

Would Vote For Him For President.

Warren's speech climaxed his defense and clinched it irrefutably in the consciences of his auditors. If there had been any doubt as to the injustice of the prosecution and the animus and origin of it, this doubt rapidly dispelled as the speech proceeded. After sentence was pronounced and the prisoner was admitted to bail pending an appeal John H. Crider, one of the most prominent Republicans in Fort Scott and probably in secret society circles the most influential man in Kansas, who had listened to Warren's address, came forward and volunteered to sign his bond. The offer was accepted. Downstairs after adjournment of court a group of men, Democrats and Republicans, united in open indorsement of the speech and unqualifiedly expressed their admiration for the man who made it.

"If ever that man runs for president he will get my vote," declared one of those who participated in the discussion.

Tribute From a Juror.

"Darrow's argument and Warren's speech put this case in a different light," said R. J. Finley, one of the jurors who voted to convict and who sat through the proceedings of the day. "There is no question as to Warren's ability and sincerity. I am not a Socialist, but as far as I am able to determine I believe Warren is honest and free from criminal intent," Finley declared.

It is difficult to interpret the impression that was made on the mind of the court. Ordinarily convicted prisoners accept sentence in silence. Warren's course petrified with astonishment the court, to whom his remarks were addressed. An age seemed to have elapsed before Pollock recovered sufficiently to proceed. It was very evident that he did not know what to say. Undoubtedly he had made up his mind as to the severity of the sentence, but this speech from the prisoner apparently upset his plans. Now he vibrated between doubt and despair. Warren, possibly with a note of defiance, had announced that he did not ask or expect clemency or mercy; that he was not guilty and was not conscious of having committed an offense. The United States district attorney had demanded that the full penalty of the law, five years in the penitentiary and a $5,000 fine, be inflicted.

The Court In Doubt, but Pronounces Sentence.

With halting tones and in a manner plainly denoting the confused condition of his mind, Pollock began the pronouncement of the sentence with an apology in part and an attempt at argument in reply to Warren's speech.

According to the Fort Scott Tribune, Warren's impassioned address made a most profound impression.

"The fact that Judge Pollock stated he had given the case weeks and weeks of deliberation and had hardly known what to do shows that Warren may have had some merit in his claim that the government had sanctioned kidnaping. The speech Mr. Warren delivered will be kept as a treasure by many who are with him in this case," declared the Tribune.

Warren's Great Speech.

The speech, which is destined to become immortal in revolutionary literature, is as follows:

I wish to call the attention of the court to the fact that this case is the outgrowth of the kidnaping of three workmen by the agents of the great mining corporations, with the connivance of the state officials of Idaho and Colorado. The kidnaping of these workingmen was acquiesced in by the president and sanctioned by the supreme court of the United States.

In referring to the manner in which these workingmen were taken from their homes as kidnaping I wish it understood that no less distinguished a personage than Justice McKenna of the supreme court of the United States used this term in dissenting from the opinion of his associates, Justice McKenna, after reviewing the facts laid before the supreme court, said:

In the case at bar the states, through their officers, are the offenders. They by an illegal exertion of power deprived the accused of a constitutional right. • • • Kidnaping is a crime, pure and simple. • • • All of the officers of the law are supposed to be on guard against this. • • • But how is it when the law becomes the kidnaper—when the officers of the law, using the forms and exerting its power, become abductors? This is not a distinction without a difference, another form of the crime of kidnaping, distinguished only from that committed by an individual by circumstances. If a state may say to one within her borders, and upon whom her process is served, "I will not inquire how you came here; I must execute my laws and remit you to proceedings against those who have wronged you," may she so plead against her offense? May she claim that by mere physical presence within her borders an accused person is within her jurisdiction denuded of his constitutional rights, though he has been brought there by her violence? And constitutional rights the accused (the three workingmen I have alluded to) in this case certainly did have, and valuable ones.

Justice McKenna voiced my views and the views of every law abiding citizen on this important matter touching the rights of the individual. But the supreme court declared otherwise and refused to grant the relief asked for by these workingmen and guaranteed to them by the constitution of the United States and by every consideration of fair play and justice.

To Test the Supreme Court.

It was during the heat of this struggle between the Western Federation of Miners and the wealthy Mine Owners' association of the west that I conceived the idea of offering a reward for ex-Governor Taylor, who, as was generally known, was a fugitive from justice from his home state of Kentucky and in hiding in Indiana, protected from the service of requisition by the governor of Indiana, whose position was indorsed by Governor Roosevelt of New York and every prominent Republican politician and newspaper in the United States.

Would the supreme court hold to its opinion that kidnaping was not a crime if the victim was a member of the Republican party and a representative of the capitalist class? I did not believe that the $1,000 offered by the Appeal would induce any man to undertake the abduction of Mr. Taylor, as for seven years the state of Kentucky had a standing reward of $100,000 for the capture of the murderers of Governor Goebel, for which crime Taylor had been indicted by the Franklin county grand jury in January, 1900.

Similar to Other Rewards.

But I did expect that the offer of this reward in the manner and with the language used would attract public attention to the kidnaping decision of the supreme court. I felt that if this decision, sanctioning the kidnaping of poor and defenseless workingmen by rich and powerful capitalists, was understood by the American people a wave of protest would sweep the country and force the supreme court to recede from its position, as had been done before, notably in the famous Dred Scott decision, and will undoubtedly be done again.

This Taylor reward was circulated through the mails in a manner in daily use by banks, private detective agencies, anti horse thief associations, sheriffs and marshals. I have here three postal cards mailed by national and state banks offering rewards for the arrest of men whom these banks allege to have committed crime. The card which I offer for the inspection of the court, it will be noted, bears upon the back or outside of the card, in large letters, figures and characters, the following language: "B. B. Bond, produce dealer, wanted for issuing forged bills of lading; $250 reward will be paid by the First National bank, Nashville, Tenn., for his arrest and delivery to Nashville authorities."

First Instance on Record.

It will be observed that this language, to quote this court's decision on our demurrer to the indictment, "is calculated to impress the readers of the language with the thought that Bond was guilty of the commission of some crime for which he would be prosecuted by the Tennessee authorities if captured and returned to them." It can further be said, following the court's line of reasoning, that this language was obviously intended by the First National bank to reflect injuriously upon the character of B. B. Bond and from its terms and the manner and style in which it was displayed on the postal card is calculated to have that effect.

The other cards contain similar language and display. This is characteristic of thousands of cards which daily pass through the mails of the United States, and yet in not a single instance has any effort been made by the government to rid the mails of this objectionable matter and protect those of its citizens who are fugitives from justice.

My arrest and conviction is the first instance on record where a man was prosecuted for attempting to bring to the bar of justice an indicted fugitive charged with the crime of murder.

The Reason Not Hard to Find.

There must be some reason why I alone of the thousands of men who, according to the rule of this court and the opinion of the district attorney and his assistant, have committed substantially the same act should be singled out and marked for prosecution.

The reason is not hard to find. Society today is divided into two classes. On the one side we find the work people—men, women and children—who have no means of obtaining a livelihood but by their hard labor. On the other hand we find a relatively small group of men who own the land and the tools which these people must have access to if they are to live. It is the primary if not the sole purpose of the men who own this productive property to obtain as large profits as possible, while on the other hand the work people strive constantly to increase their wages. This creates a class conflict.

The Conflict Began With Civilization.

This conflict began with civilization and has come down under varying forms to this day and will continue with increasing intensity so long as a small group of rich men are permitted to lay upon the masses, to quote from Pope Leo, "a yoke little better than slavery." Discussing the ever present problem of labor and its compensation, John Adams in 1776 observed:

It is of no consequence by what name you call your people, whether by that of freemen or slaves. In some countries the laboring poor men were called freemen, in others slaves, but the difference was imaginary only. What matters it whether a landlord employing ten laborers on his farm gives them annually as much as will buy the necessaries of life or gives them those necessaries at first hand?

Coming down to the civil war period, we find that the Charlestown Baptist association in presenting a memorial to the Georgia legislature in 1835 discussing this ever with us problem of labor gave expression to the following conclusion:

It amounts in effect to this—whether the operatives of a country shall be bought and sold and themselves become property, as in this state, or whether they shall become hirelings and their labor only become property, as in some other states.

Slavery of the Working Class.

It will be seen from these two quotations, clearly reflecting the opinion

The Maze.

By HARRIET LUMMIS SMITH.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

The maze was located a few rods from the hotel, its compact walls of evergreen rising ten feet high. The little opening which revealed a narrow curving path possessed the undeniable charm of mystery. But Lettice, recalling tales she had heard of tourists wandering for hours in those intricate windings unable to find their way out, was inclined to be skeptical.

"It's so little," she criticised. "I imagined that a maze would cover acres."

Inwardly she felt convinced of her ability to walk triumphantly to the center and out again. She looked at the clock. It was three-quarters of an hour before the coaching party was to start. Bigger things than the conquest of a maze had been accomplished in that time.

Lettice stepped through the opening into the narrow path with its high, green walls, promising herself that she would turn back before there was any likelihood of losing her way. And almost on the moment she forgot that possibility. The path was very narrow, so narrow that the most amicable pair could not have walked abreast. The dense foliage of the evergreen was for all practical purposes impenetrable as granite. Overhead was the blue California sky, and the breeze was weighted with the odors of uncounted millions of blossoms.

"What a delicious place!" thought Lettice. The big outside world was no longer in evidence. She seemed to herself a solitary pilgrim, following life's winding paths, not knowing where they led, satisfied with a glimpse of the sky overhead and the odors of unseen flowers.

In this peaceful, almost philosophical frame of mind Lettice turned a corner and came face to face with a young man. And the encounter was sufficient to work an immediate change in the current of her thoughts. She swayed against the wall of evergreen as if about to fall.

"Jack!" she murmured faintly.

"Lettice!" cried the young man, and his tones were rapturous.

As he advanced with outstretched hands Lettice drew herself up. A sudden amazing dignity radiated from her slight figure. An expression of extreme hauteur replaced her previous look of agitation.

"I SEE, AND I BEG YOUR PARDON," SAID THE ELDERLY MAN.

"I beg your pardon," said Lettice, gazing at some indefinite object over the young man's head. "I am afraid you misunderstand me."

The young man might have replied that the break in her voice and her sudden pallor were sufficient excuses for the indiscretion into which he had been betrayed. He did nothing of the kind, however. He only stood and looked at her as if even at her haughtiest the sight of her rejoiced his eyes.

"If you will kindly let me pass," continued Lettice, and the young man obligingly flattened himself against the wall of foliage. But owing to the narrowness of the path her arm brushed his sleeve as she swept by, and something in the contact weakened her resolution. She felt the tears rushing to her eyes, and her knees were unsteady.

Suddenly she decided that she hated mazes and all that pertained to them. She would hurry back to the hotel and lie down for a few moments before the coaching party. She was absurdly nervous and unstrung. Still she excused her weakness on the ground that there is something disconcerting in the sudden apparition of a person whom you have every reason to believe thousands of miles away. If by any chance you have ever been engaged to the person in question that, of course, adds to the complications.

Lettice quickened her pace. She walked with a rapidity that brought the color to her cheeks and rendered her breathless. She was reflecting that she did not realize she had followed the winding path so far when she again found herself face to face with the young man whom she had met ten minutes before. On this occasion, however, she did not cry "Jack!" or give similar indications of weakness. She drew back and looked him over with an air divided between surprise and contempt.

"If you will allow me to say so," Lettice began, "I should hardly expect you to take advantage of the situation to dog my footsteps in this way."

"And if you will allow me to say so," returned Jack, with more spirit than he had evidenced on the previous occasion, "it is like your customary injustice to accuse me of such a thing. So far from dogging you, I am only interested in getting out of this wretched place."

"Perhaps you will allow me to pass, then," said Lettice, with great dignity.

"Certainly," Jack replied. Again he flattened himself against the evergreen, and again Lettice swept past him.

"Your customary injustice!" What a disagreeable phrase it was, and yet perhaps not quite unjust. She had condemned him unheard. Possibly if she had given him a chance to explain the past two years would not have been so difficult and sad. To smile when your heart is heavy, to laugh when sighs are crowding to your lips, to hide a bitter regret under the pretense of gayety, is not an easy programme to carry out. Lettice gave way suddenly to the luxury of self pity, and the blinding tears ran down her cheeks.

Half an hour later a young man, flushed and frowning, came face to face with a young woman who held her handkerchief to her eyes. Both stood still. The only break in the silence was a little muffled sob, and at the sound the young man's face contracted as if he were in pain.

"Lettice!" he exclaimed. "Oh, Lettice! Why are you crying?"

It was a moment before a stifled voice replied, "Because I can't find my way out."

"Is that all?" This time the silence was longer than before. "Is that all?" Jack hesitated. "Tell me, dear."

"No-o." The uncertain syllable was so faint that Jack bent his head to be sure. Then he put his hand gently over the girl's trembling fingers.

"Dearest, you wouldn't give me a chance to set myself right with you. My letters came back unopened. I went to see you, and you had left for Europe the day before. You wouldn't listen"—

Lettice looked up at him. Through her tears something bright and beautiful looked out, like the sunshine sifting through the raindrops.

"I'll listen now," she said.

It was some time before the desirability of leaving the maze occurred to either, and then they could not agree as to the direction in which the exit lay. Lettice, however, was sweetly submissive.

"I've had my own way long enough," she said. "Now I'll follow you wherever you choose to take me." And Jack, who had found her bewitching even in her willfulness, could only doubly adore her in her enchanting new role.

A few minutes later they walked into a circular space, where a bench stood back against the hedge. The two looked at each other.

"We've got to the center," Lettice cried happily. "And now we're farther from getting out than ever." She regarded the bench with approving eyes. "It looks so comfortable," she said.

They were still discovering new charms in their circular paradise when an elderly man with stooping shoulders came into view.

"I beg your pardon," he said, addressing the pair on the bench. "But will you tell me how to get out of this confounded trap?"

The lovers looked at him and then at each other.

"We haven't the least idea," Lettice acknowledged in tones of extreme cheerfulness.

"The fact is," Jack confessed shamelessly, "we're not in any hurry to get out."

"I see, and I beg your pardon," said the elderly man. And he obligingly vanished. Again they were alone with their happiness, and the mystery of the maze kept guard.

She stood in the doorway, one hand on the knob.

"Papa, dear," she lisped, "do you know what I'm going to buy you with a car for a birthday present?"

"No, darling," said papa, looking up from his papers. "What?"

"Breathe, papa," answered the little maid, "a jewelry new china shaving mug with gold flowers on it."

"But," said the fond parent, "papa has a nice one like that already, dear, a very handsome one."

"Oh, no, he hasn't," replied the little girl; "I've just dropped it!"

PRIZE DAY AT FAIR

Will be a Day of Pure Unalloyed Fun.

Button, Button, Who's Got the Button a Great Big Game

Of all the pleasure and whirlwind excitement that visitors to the Charlevoix County Fair will enjoy the pleasing, happy, laughing, roaring, delightful and profitable, "button, button, who's got the button" game will create the greatest furore of them all.

Here's the story in a nut-shell:

September 30th will be prize day at the great Charlevoix County Fair. Every purchaser of a ticket of admission to the fair on that day will receive a beautiful souvenir of the occasion.

Now for the fun. These souvenirs will have a commercial value. They will each be numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and on up to two thousand. Twenty of these will be numbered in duplicate. If Will Withers of Marion gets button no. 111, he will immediately start to find the person wearing the duplicate of his button. It is just possible that Pete Skinner from Lautlerville will be wearing another button the number 211. If Will finds Pete both of them will be entitled to a prize. Whenever two people meet wearing buttons of the same number, they will both receive a handsome prize upon calling at the secretary's office on the fair ground.

A list of prizes will be announced in the papers later. The numbers, will, of course, be kept secret.

There is going to be such a crowd at the fair on Prize Day that the committee won't be able to get around and introduce everyone to everybody but the officially numbered button will be the "open sesame." When anyone looks good enough to you to be wearing the same numbered button that you are wearing walk right up and say "Hello, what's your number? Button, button, who's got the button?"

The secretary has spoken to some of the East Jordan merchants regarding Prize Day and they all seem to have the fever. Frank Gannett says he is going to give a $5.00 bottle of perfume to the lady with the number corresponding to the one in his window. The East Jordan Lumber Co. will give $5.00 worth of groceries to the person with the number the same as in their window, Strochel Bros., C. C. Mack, Chas. Hudson, Empey Bros., F. E. Boosinger and other prominent merchants will adopt it in one way or another.

We don't know it to be a fact, but we have heard that Mrs. Jepson, our popular steam-boat lady is going to give an annual pass to the person delivering to her the badge bearing the number nearest to the number of passengers carried to the Fair from Charlevoix on Prize Day.

From this you will see that there will be many, many prizes offered in addition to the twenty for the duplicate numbers. If you want some fun, plan to get to the fair on Prize Day. Get a button and hunt for a prize. Watch next week's issue for announcement of prizes.

COUNTY NORMAL

Was Established in This County in 1903

Since That Time Has Had Sixty-four Graduates

The Charlevoix County Normal School was established in 1903. It is under the supervision of the county normal board which consists of State Superintendent L. L. Wright, County Commissioner J. H. Milford and Superintendent I. M. DeVoe, of Charlevoix. The purpose of the county normal is to train teachers for the rural schools of the county. In the six years it has been in operation 61 graduates have been sent out most of whom are now teaching in this and adjoining counties.

Applicants for admission must be at least seventeen years of age and should have completed the tenth grade or have done an equivalent amount of work. Tuition is free and graduates are given a certificate from the state department entitling them to teach three years without examination in any school of not more than two teachers.

Three things are essential to good teachers: 1st. A knowledge of the subjects to be taught. 2nd. An understanding of children and an insight into the child-mind. 3rd. Skill in bringing the child-mind and subject matter into helpful relations.

To secure these essentials the county normal course provides three phases of work. 1st. A thorough review of all the common branches together with work in music, drawing, manual training and elementary agriculture. 2nd. A study of psychology, pedagogy and the observation of classes in the training room and in the grades. 3rd. ARE GETTING TIRED.

Central Lake Will Stop the Coming After Booze.

In the arrest and conviction o drunks from Charlevoix and Petoskey, citizens of these towns may read that the limit of endurance has been reached at Central Lake. The drouth in their own coun. has driven this way a crowd of disreputables, who are not entitled to consideration at home and should not be given any here. Central Lake welcomes any man or woman who comes here on bona fide business and behaves as he or she should; but the large class, who have acquired an idea that this is a booze town, and inclined to view with lenient eyes their escapades, are much mistaken, and should take heed lest they fall." Any man or woman who cannot observe the common decencies, whether resident or not, should be severly dealt with, and I am informed that the officials are determined to put an abrupt stop to some of the objectionable features recently enacted here. The Torch will, after this week, publish the name, residence, and offense of every person convicted in justice court, and urges the vigilance of local police officers in suppressing such exhibitions of depravity as have been recently witnessed on the part of a certain element coming from dry territory in search of refreshment. As long as a person behaves properly Central Lake will not be inhospitable, but it must be understood that this village will no longer submit to imposition at the hands of the offscourings of larger cities in contiguous dry territory. It is an unmitigated nuisance, and the limit of endurance in this respect has been reached.

WEEDS MUST BE CUT

New Highway Law—Get After Noxious Weeds.

Makes it the Duty of Officials to Enforce the Law.

Chapter twenty-four of the new highway law, which took effect last week, makes it the duty of the overseer and commissioner of highways to see that all noxious weeds growing within their jurisdictions are cut at least twice a year.

The law reads as follows:

Section 3.—It shall be the duty of every owner, possessor or occupier of land or of every person, or persons, firms or corporation having charge of land in this state to cut or cause to be cut down and destroyed all Canada thistles, ox-eye daisies, milk weed, wild carrots or other noxious weeds growing thereon, or on any highway passing by or through such land, at least twice each year, once before the first day of July, and one before the first day of September, and as much oftener as necessary to prevent them going to seed, and if any owner, possessor, or occupier of land, or any person or persons, firm or corporation having charge of any lands in this state shall knowingly suffer any Canada thistles, milk week, wild carrot shall cause any noxious weed to grow thereon or any highway passing by or through such land, or shall suffer the seed to ripen, so as to cause or endanger the spread thereof, he or they shall, on conviction in any court of competent jurisdiction be liable to a line of ten dollars together with the costs of prosecution, for every such offense and he or they shall pay the cost of cutting and destroying such weeds and an additional ten percentum, as hereinafter provided.

Section 4.—Provides for the giving of proper notice by posting and publication and the assessing of cost of cutting and the additional ten per cent against the property.

Section 5.—It is the duty of the commissioner and overseer of highways to comply with the law.

Section 10.—It is the duty of the prosecuting attorney to enforce the law.

IN EFFECT LAST WEEK

New Laws Passed by State Legislature

Many Important Measures Were Enacted Into Law

Laws passed by the last legislature took effect Wednesday of last week, the ninety days required by the constitution having expired. They cover a wide range of subjects and a number are of considerable interest.

The new liquor law is one. Whether any effort will be made to have it reviewed by the Supreme court will depend largely on its practical operation. Saloons must close at 9 p. m. but in the cities common councils are empowered to extend the closing hour until midnight.

Closely allied to the liquor law is the anti-free lunch law, which makes it a misdemeanor to serve any free lunch with drinks, other than crackers and pretzels, but it is safe to forecast that various methods will be found to get around the restriction.

Although the fact may not be generally known, the legislature has made every Saturday afternoon a legal holiday. In addition there are seven full fledged holidays and the legislature also made Columbus day, Oct. 12, a holiday, with the proviso that it shall not interfere with the courts or banks.

Two new laws will grace the statute books relative to automobiles. The most important is the one which makes "joy riding" a felony. A chauffeur who takes his employer's machine out is construed to be a "joy rider." The punishment is severe, two years imprisonment or a line of $500 but for a first offense the judge is permitted to impose a sentence of three months or $100 fine.

A change was also made in the licensing of automobiles. Hereafter the license fee will be $3, dating from January 1, and the secretary of state is obliged to change the color of the license tag each year.

Hereafter the proprietors of billiard halls or any place where cue games are allowed must not permit any minor under seventeen, or any minor who is a student to remain in the place on penalty of incurring a fine of $25.

Cocaine is placed on the prohibitive list and can only be sold on a physician's prescription. The standard of ice cream has also been raised. It must contain not less than 10 per cent of butter fat and must not contain more than one-half of 1 per cent of pure gelatine.

All bonds issued by any county, city, township, village or school district are exempt from taxation. The legislature also passed a cigarette law, prohibiting the sale of them to minors, but a similar law has been in existence for years. A legislature without a cigarette bill would be an oddity.

A law of interest to women relates to the descent of property, the new law providing that when a man dies without a will, the wife is entitled to one-third of his property in fee. Another law provides that every decree shall provide for the wife's dower when the divorce is granted to her.

The nurses of the state will now be able to operate on somewhat of an independent basis. They secured a board of registration, which will consist of three nurses, a physician and the secretary of the state board of health.

The powers of the state railroad commission will be largely augmented under several new laws. Telephone companies will now be classed as common carriers and another law compels them to exchange messages at junction points. The water power companies of the state under jurisdiction of the railroad commission, which is given authority to fix the maximum rate for supplying electricity.

There are also several new laws regulating the conduct and operation of state banks. One of these makes it a felony to circulate a false statement regarding the condition of a bank and fixes the penalty at five years imprisonment or a fine of $5,000.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Introduction of Mr. Leonard by J. B. Estes of Kalamazoo

Through our oversight this introduction of Mr. Leonard, at the lecture, was missed while making up the paper. The lecture will be found on page three.

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

We are invited here tonight by the local organization of Christian Scientists to hear a lecture on Christian Science, delivered by a member of the Board of Lectureship of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, Mass.

Probably many of you are unfamiliar with the teaching and the method of healing and destroying sin as taught in Christian Science, and these lectures are given for the purpose of correcting the wrong impressions that the public may have as to the principle involved in this religion, and in the limited time that our speaker has tonight, he will explain as far as possible, the teachings of Christian Science as given in our text book Science and Health.

Thinking people in all parts of the civilized world are investigating the religion which includes the healing of the sick as well as the reforming of the sinner. Many of us are finding this religion an "ever present help" in our daily lives, and my own experience during the past fifteen years has proven to me the truth of Christian Science, for, by its help, I have been changed from a sick and wretched man into a healthy and happy one.

In our business we find that, with the better understanding acquired by the study of Christian Science, we can transact our affairs successfully without fear or worry, and at the same time peace and happiness are brought into our homes.

It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you Mr. Frank H. Leonard of Brooklyn, New York, for whom I ask your careful attention.

SHETLAND PONIES.

Raised With Ease in Several States Near Cold Lakes.

The business of raising Shetland ponies is becoming a profitable and important industry in several states. Those animals seem to thrive better in the northern and colder sections than in the warmer parts of the country. [illegible] Those who have [illegible] the pony [illegible] the [illegible] or the ground. [illegible] interesting [illegible] should be a sturdy medium between the two. Another fatal fault is an inclination to leggiuess. In fact, short legs are so characteristic of the Shetland that a leggy one is a rarity to be met with, and if a pony is really leggy he is certain to have Icelander blood in his veins.

"So in selecting a pony look for one that is short legged, sturdy in build, thick in the chest, strong in his neck, round in his quarters, pleasant faced and with a nice mane and foretop. The foretop should come between the ears from the top of the crest, and the pony's legs should be sound and strong. The pastern should be springy and the action smart and trappy as possible. The eye will in the most of cases disclose the disposition, but it is very rarely indeed that a pure bred Shetland is either pigheaded or vicious."

Silo Notes.

The silo is a sign of dairy prosperity.

A cow to the acre is not impossible when silage is fed.

Silage makes splendid sheep feed when used judiciously.

The time is coming when silos will be as numerous as cornciibs.

The man who has the largest milk checks is the man who feeds silage.

The silage fed cow is very easy to pick out, especially in the early summer or late spring.

Remember it's easier to fill and easier to feed from two small silos than one large one. The silage will keep better too.

The silo is appreciated at no season more than just between winter and summer feeds. The hay is usually low, and the cattle are hungry for green, succulent feed. Silage bridges over the season and brings the stock on in good condition.—Klinkell's Dairy Farmer.

Pretty Weary.

What Sort of a Man.

Mr. Chairman: Dear friends, I'm not going to make a regular speech with firstly, secondly and thirdly, because I'm only a boy, but young as I am I can tell you a little of my own experience. I am a boy messenger, and last week I carried a parcel to a gentleman. I had to wait for a reply, so was asked into the room while the old gentleman wrote the note; it didn't take long, then he turned round and took a pitcher and poured something into a glass, which he handed to me, saying,

"There's a drop of beer for you; it's a nasty cold night."

"No, thank you, sir," said I, "I don't drink beer."

"Nonsense, nonsense!" said he in a deep, grand voice, "drink it up; it will make a man of you."

"Will it sir," said I "what sort of a man?"

He put the glass down hard, said "Humph!" gave me the note and opened the door. I don't think it was much of an answer, for ever since all the rest of the week I've been looking about to find an answer.

First, I thought of the old gentleman who said beer would make a man of me. I know I'm not a good looking boy; I'll tell you how I know it. When I was a little chap a lady came to see mother and had not seen me before; she gave me a nice kiss and said how like I was to my father, then she said in a pretty voice, "He isn't what you'd call a good looking boy, but he has got a very nice little nose." Now, as my nose has to balance the other pretty features in my face, I want to be certain nose as it is is best when I'm a man; and that old gentleman's nose? Well, perhaps it had been a little nose once, but just now it looks as if half a dozen other little noses were sprouting out all over it, so on the safe side of my nose I don't risk being that sort of a man. Then, don't you notice a neighbor; he used to be a fine, strong man; he has always drunk plenty of beer; has a little barrel left for himself and wife every week, besides what he takes at the corner houses. Well, then he don't have work at two or three days. Comes home on the first from with his wages, and will always do his shopping at the little store on the corner, where he orders no end of fancy groceries, jams and fancy crackers, which he pays for, and the only way to get rid of him is to hand up a couple of baskets and carry them into his house; then when he drops off to sleep his poor wife has to sneak them back and the grocer gives back the money, so that she can buy just what they want. He's the laughing-stock of the whole street, and I am quite sure I don't want to be that sort of a man. Then the man who lives opposite to us has been twice in an asylum with softening of the brain, and he goes in for no end of beer; I don't want to be that sort of a man. I've watched different men at work. I've kept my eyes open and I've found the men who had the worst clothes were those who had the most beer; and really whenever I hit on a man and say, "That's the sort of man I'd like to be"—he's sure to be a teetotaler. There's my Bible class teacher; he works hard all day, but he often spends his evenings with us at bicycling, swimming, drilling and all the rest of it, and he's a splendid looking man, and although his nose is a little too long and a trifle crooked it hasn't sprouted. I'm not speaking disrespectfully, I'm only stating facts. I've got two eyes and I've used them, and I'm not going to put any good looking nose over a schooner of beer and chance the beer making a doubtful man out of this sort of a boy; and if any other boy hears any other man say that beer will make a man of him, let him ask at once: "What sort of a man, sir?"

White Horse of Kilburn.

The biggest artificial horse in the world is the famous white horse of Kilburn, England which was formed fifty years ago by a native of Kilburn, who cut away the turf in the correct form and covered it with limestone. The whole occupies about two acres of ground and may be seen twelve miles away. It is said that twenty persons can sit on the "eye" of the horse.

Canvas may be waterproofed by covering it with finely shaved beeswax and then melting it in with a hot flatiron.

Milk For Poultry.

All kinds of poultry have a great fondness for either sweet or sour milk. It is a cheap feed when properly fed. Separator milk, direct from the factory, mixed with corn chop, makes one of the best foods to fatten old hens. For laying hens and half grown chickens it may be poured into troughs just as it comes from the factory. For young chickens and turkeys it should be made into curds. The milk must be fed with judgment, especially to young turkeys, as all overfeeding will prove fatal. A moderate feed is all right, but too much will cause a loss. Give a small feed of curd mixed with corn chop late in the afternoon.

To Revive Grass.

No top dressing or fertilizer will do more to revive grass than nitrate of soda, and it should be used in combination with materials containing phosphoric acid and potash. A mixture of 150 pounds of nitrate of soda, 150 pounds of acid phosphate and 75 pounds of muriate of potash is recommended. Grass, even in the old meadows, will respond very quickly to this treatment.

Long Handled Tools.

Every farmer should use long handled tools instead of short ones and have his plow handles as far apart again as most of them are. The seats on his vehicles should be high enough and deep enough to enable him to sit up straight and not require a humped back.

Just a Mistake.

LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

It is to be creative and death destructive, so that God, the primal and only creator, must be Life and not death and therefore death, measured by the standard of perfection which is God, is not real but is the supposititious absence of or belief in the negation of Life. To what then can the belief in sin and death pertain save to mortal consciousness? This mortal consciousness is to be put off with the old man and his deeds, and as it is put off and is superseded by more spiritual consciousness, man will be found in the divine image, knowing no sin and death but forever manifesting eternal Life being perfect even as his "Father which is in heaven is perfect."

There is a universal belief about death that it is either the gateway to heaven or the entrance to hell. This belief would logically lead us to destroy the innocent infant in order to insure its gaining the kingdom and the action of the natives of India in casting their babies into the river Ganges would be based on sound logic and good reason! How manifest is the fallacy of the belief that death is ever a friend!

Death to be Overcome

Death is an enemy. Christ Jesus proved its unreality, and overcome it in accordance with the law of God, thus indicating ultimate freedom from death for all mankind. Is this statement impossible of acceptance. It is not an original one by any means, but simply a reiteration of what Paul has said. Paul did not say that we can go on overcoming all things until it comes to death, but that in its presence we are helpless victims. He said the last enemy to be destroyed is death, and in his letter to Timothy he says that Christ Jesus "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immorality to light." Do we believe that Paul understood what he was saying? Do we believe these statements to be true?

We, as Christian Scientists, accept them without modification or qualification, because they are so absolutely in accord with what our Master did and said. True, Christian Scientists have not yet reached the point where they have overcome the universal belief in death, nor have they yet reached the point where they heal every case that is brought to them, but like the prodigal son of the Bible story, they have started on their journey back to their Father's house. They are weary of living in a country far away from God; they are weary of feeding on the husks of words which, no matter how beautiful they may be, fail to bring any proof of their truth. When the infallible Principle of Christian Science is absolutely followed, we shall reach the Father's house, solve all life's problems, and realize in full the meaning of the angelic chorus, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

As to Chastisement

At this point some one might ask, If what you say is true, what are you going to do with the Biblical promise, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth?" I shall not change a word of the Bible in order to explain this, but will call your attention to something you all know, namely, that the Bible which we read is a translation into English from the original tongues, made by a number of men chosen for that purpose by King James of England. The Greek verb "paideuo," translated by these men into English as "chasten," means to instruct or direct, and nothing else. Liddle and Scott in their Greek Lexicon give as the first meaning of this word, "To rear or bring up children." Joseph Henry Thayer, Professor of New Testament Criticism in the Harvard Divinity School, says that in classic Greek it means "to train children." In his "Memorabilia" Xenophon uses this word in the passage, "He trained both soul and body."

While the preponderance of opinion amongst commentators is that "paideuo" in New Testament usage means to chasten, Liddell and Scott, Thayer and Cremer all state that chasten is not the original meaning of this word, but is a later or derived meaning, and Cremer adds the statement that it is an ecclesiastical one. The facts are, that in 1 Timothy, 1 : 20, 2 Timothy, 2 : 25, and Titus, 2:12, the verb, "paideuo" in the King James version is respectively translated "learn" (literally, be taught), "instruct," "teach." In Hebrews, 12:9 the noun "paideutas" is rendered by Cremer as instructor or teacher. It seems unreasonable to assume that among contemporary writers upon the same subject, a given word could have been used with such widely different meanings. Of course words change materially from century to century, but this would not explain the variation in the use of the word between the epistle to the Hebrews, written in 64 A. D., and the letters to Timothy and Titus, written in 6, and 66 A. D. respectively. When this passage, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," is rendered into English as it is literally written in classic Greek, it would read "Whom the Lord loveth he instructeth," and thus become another proof of the Christian Science teaching as to the abnormal nature of sin, which Christ destroyed in conformity with the law of God.

Temptation Never from God

In order that there may be sin there must be temptation, and in order that there may be temptation there must be sin, and they both must proceed from the same source. Is this source God or mankind? If it be God, we are lost! If it be mankind, we are saved. Let this question be answered for us by James and John. James writes, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." John writes, "Whosoever is born of God [and as God is the only creator, none is truly born nor may be unless he is born of God] doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." Dare we, in the face of James' statement that "God cannot be tempted with evil," and John's statement that "whosoever is born of God cannot sin because his seed of God remaineth in him," accept the belief or nature of God with sin.

Paul says that "God is no respecter of persons." He was right. Most of us will say in answer, "Oh yes," but do we? If we do, so long as we believe sin, disease and death to be real, lest we have ever believed that God either effects or indirectly is responsible, for them. As we look around us and see men, women and children of sin, as we relieve with millions of money, mother with broken heart, brother with clinched fist, mother with joy [mingled] with misery and woe and despair.

If any of us are having to meet the poverty, the despair, or the ill-health that was from the bottom of our hearts say we believe that "God is no respecter of persons"? Some one near to us is stricken with a mortal illness and we kneel and pray that the illness may be taken from the loved one; that the person may live. If this illness is from God it is good; and why do we pray that he or she may be relieved from it—if it is good? If we believe that God sent the sickness, and yet pray that it be removed, that the afflicted person may live, has not the physician who is attending that patient—if he believes that God sent the disease—just as much right to pray to God, at the same time, that the illness may continue in order that he may live?

Scientific Prayer

Mankind says God is immutable and changeless, but hundreds and millions of times every day men are beseeching the immutable and changeless God to change, change, change; until mankind conceive of God as the very center and circumference of eternal change. So long as we believe God to be responsible for all things, and yet kneel and pray that He may forget His immutability and take away what we do not want and give us what we think we do want it is not true that if our prayer were suddenly granted we would be frightened beyond measure? Is it logically possible for us to have very much faith in prayer, so long as we are held in the bondage of this belief in a changeable God? If we would take into our consciousness that changeless love, that changeless religion which Jesus the Christ preached, there would be no doubt, no fear; and we would go to God in prayer with the serene confidence, the implicit faith, that He who heareth in secret will reward us openly; which, as the Master taught, is our birthright and heritage.

This is what Christian Science is asking us to do; this is what Christian Science is laying before us; this is the table that is prepared for us in the presence of our enemies; this is the bread which cometh down from heaven; this is the water of eternal life—it is yours, it is mine. Let us accept the feast that God has put before us; let us recognize the Comforter, the Wayshower, again in our midst; the Comforter which Jesus promised to send when he said it was expedient that he go to his Father. Then there will be no more broken hearts, there will be no more sorrow, no more tears, no more seperation, no more sickness, no more suffering and no more sin, for we shall have entered into the realization that this is the day of the Lord; and with that realization there will come to us peace,—that peace which God has promised us, that peace which may be found only in the straight and narrow way within our Master leads us, into the kingdom of God within.

The Discoverer of Christian Science

The revelation of Christian Science came to Mrs. Eddy as the result of a lifetime spent in continuous search and desire for the spirit of the Word and the things of God. As a religious reformer she occupies a position unique in the history of the world—unswerving in her trust in the goodness of God, and unquestioning in her obedience to His commands. This calls on her for such meekness, humility, and self-sacrifice, that she never could live such a life were it not for the protecting care of a real, livable, demonstrable religion, wherein she finds immunity from the sufferings of those who turn away from the Christ-concept of God.

Ever since 1866 Mrs. Eddy's life has been devoted to the work of bringing to mankind this revelation of the way of salvation. She has done this with such singleness of purpose, that mankind is awakening to the recognition of her work as inspired, that Christian Science is the spirit of the Word which Jesus portrayed. Christian Scientists do not worship Mrs. Eddy, nor do they in any sense of the word deify her in their thought. The whole teaching of Christian Science leads us to put self under foot; to have no way and no will save God's way and God's will; and Mrs. Eddy asks the world, each one of us, to follow her only so far as she follows Christ. In her following of Christ she has been the instrument whereby the feet of hundreds of thousands have been planted upon the rock of the proved truth of God's promises, and against that rock, in the words of the Master, "the gates of hell shall not prevail." We do love our leader, and we give her the allegiance and devotion to which her tireless labor in mankind's behalf is entitled.

I have related what Christian Science did for me physically; let me add more. As a boy and young man I heard continually that God was responsible for all things; that suffering and sickness and misery and wretchedness were in some way associated with His great plan of salvation and in my hours of agony and helplessness I was so overwhelmed with fear of God that I reached a point where I had no belief in Him and my whole desire was to get away from Him if it were possible, to find something that would shield me from the sickness and misery that I was continually called upon to suffer. I had no God, I had nothing to trust, nothing to love, nothing to look forward to, and I had come to feel that I did not care to hear about God, and church-going had become a burden to me.

Then Christian Science came, with the assurance that God is Love; that He has nothing to do with evil; and this teaching took away my disease and my suffering, and took with it my fear, my dread of God. Christian Science came to me and gave me God and when I tell you this as my experience I am telling you the experience of countless thousands all over the globe. It has wrought that we have the one who has been so soulless and so sordid in her endeavor that [illegible] God has come to us, that [illegible] has been brought within [illegible] vision? We are willingly [illegible] obedient to her every teaching because it is through her continued labors for over forty years that the scales of the way of salvation has been removed and the glory of God again been made apparent to mankind.

Material Remedies

Respecting the claims of "materia medica" we can but ask, If God put disease on the earth to preserve or save the life of mankind, why did Jesus, who came doing the will of the Father, fail to use them in the healing which he accomplished? Jesus never used anything for the healing of mankind from disease other than the word of God. Here some one may ask, Did not Jesus use material remedies when he put clay and spittle on the blind man's eyes? Now, this case when understood, is one of the most wonderful lessons in the whole Bible. Do we believe that Jesus thought, when he put the clay on the man's eyes, it would restore his sight? If we do, then we believe this was an instance in which Jesus failed to foreknow what would happen, for according to the story, the clay failed to accomplish anything. Did the blind man see while the clay was on his eyes? No! Not until, in obedience to the command of Jesus, he went to the pool of Siloam and washed off the clay did the blind man see.

Jesus thus taught us that as we cast aside all material remedies, no matter how simple, and go in the way of his appointin, blindly though it may be at first, our obedience will open the eyes that see not and we shall behold the glory of God and of His Son, the living Christ. This is one of the few places in the Bible where not only the word but its meaning is given: "Go, wash in the pool of Siloam," which means "sent," was the command of Jesus. The man obeyed; and when he had washed, he saw. Manifestly it was not the clay, nor was it the water; it was his obedience to the word of God, as it came to him through Christ Jesus, which made him whole. Instantly our thought goes back to the story of Naaman, the leper who came to Elisha to be healed. The prophet sent word to him that he was to go and wash in the river Jordan seven times. The story intimates that he was angry at this advice, declaring that the waters of his own country were better than the waters of Jordan. He evidently wanted to be healed in his own way; but he was prevailed upon to be obedient to the word of God, as it came to him through the prophet, and he went and bathed in the river Jordan and came forth every whit whole.

When you and I are willing to be obedient, as were these men, then there will be nothing that we cannot take to the foot of the cross, and leave it there, coming away free and untrammeled, praising God for His wonderful goodness. Let me say this to those desirous of knowing God as Spirit Principle, Mind: Do not be satisfied with any one's statement as to what Christian Science teaches, but go to the fountain-head and let knowledge, pure and unadulterated, by careful, prayerful study of your Bible with Key and of the Christian Science text-book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," every line of which carries healing to its readers.

Christian Science is the demonstration of that great, tender, compassionate love which Jesus Christ manifested to the world, not only in His word, but in his demonstrations of power. Christian Science is the revelation to mankind today that only as we live the religion of love making its demonstration that of doing unto others as we would be done by, are we showing any conception of that religion, pure and undefiled which the Bible commands us to demonstrate. Love brings no evil; Love brings no suffering to man; and the understanding of Love, as it is demonstrated in Christian Science enables a man to reach out to his brother with a tenderness, a sweetness, a sense of consideration which the world, otherwise, knows not of.

Christian Science is the manifestation of that love which respects no person, that knows no relationship save the universal brotherhood, and which brings to mankind the satisfying consciousness that God is Love. In this knowledge of demonstrable religion, Christian Scientists have their satisfaction, their joy, a sense of harmony that can never be disturbed, a consciousness that Love includes all in its omniscience, and leads us, weary and heavy laden, to Calvary, to the cross, where we are freed from our burden in fulfillment of the promise of Him whose word never faileth. Here we find relief from our pain, escape from our sorrow and tears; spiritual regeneration emergence from self, from the world the flesh, and the devil, into that everlasting peace which God giveth His beloved children, and toward which Mrs. Eddy, God's messenger to this age, is leading us.

We ask you to investigate, not Christian Scientists, but Christian Science, and see how absolutely it reveals the Godly standard wherein what blesses one blesses all. Every promise shall be fulfilled, and the grand work of Christ, as exemplified in Christian Science, be universally accepted. Then shall His will be done in earth as it is in heaven; then shall we realize that His " is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever," see the full fruition of Love, have no other God than "our Father which art in heaven," who is everlasting Life, Truth, and Love.

Old College Ways.

Students at St. Andrews university two centuries ago paid nothing for their rooms, but £3 10s per quarter enabled them to dine at the high table. For £5 11s 1d. poorer men could get through the whole session—just six months. Breakfast was served at 7 a. m. and consisted of an oatmeal loaf and half a pint of beer. For supper each had half a twopenny loaf and a pint of beer. At the high table poultry, broth and beef were served, and at the second a plentiful supply of broth and beef. Herrings and flounders sometimes graced the board. Beer there was in abundance, and the colleges in those good old days had their brew house, a perquisite of the porter, who was permitted to sell ale to the students.—London Antiquary.

Another Opportunity.

A Certain Man, having read somewhere that Opportunity knocks only once at each one's door, concluded to sit up all Night for fear he would Miss the Call. So while he was Sitting near his Door there came a heavy Knock thereon.

When he opened the Door a Stranger seized him and Beat him all up and Took his Money and Garments and Chided him for being so Easy.

"But," said the Man, thinking to excuse himself, "I thought it was Opportunity who knocked."

"So it was," responded the Other, "but it was my Opportunity."

The Prussian Versailles.

Potsdam is the Prussian Versailles and contains four palaces. It was founded by the great elector of Brandenburg, but owes most of its splendor to Frederick the Great, whose apartments, which are shown to visitors, remain almost exactly as they were when he was alive. Among the most interesting treasures is a copy of Frederick's works annotated in the handwriting of Voltaire.

Expert Drilling.

An expert workman in one of the great needle factories in a test of skill performed one of the most delicate feats imaginable. He took a common sewing needle of medium size, an inch and five-eighths in length, and drilled a hole through its entire length from eye to point, the opening being just large enough to permit of the passage of a very fine hair.

TRIBUTE TO DR. HUNTINGTON

Jews Remember Episcopal Clergyman's Sympathy in Kishineff Massacre.

To the Rev. Dr. William R. Huntington, rector of Grace church, New York city, who recently died at Nahant, Mass., Annette Kohn of New York pays the following tribute:

In the death of Dr. William R. Huntington the Protestant Episcopal church mourns the loss of a good Christian, a valuable and hard working clergyman and a fine man.

But Dr. Huntington had a wider humanity, a spirit of truer religion and a finer manhood than can be confined within the bounds of any theological sect or creed. He was a cosmopolitan citizen of the world to whom all men were brothers and whose noble heart was touched by the sufferings and sorrows of any of God's children, whatever their faith, their race or their country.

At the time of the great Russian massacre at Kishineff, that electrified the civilized world, when 70,000 Russian Jews marched in funeral procession up Broadway, New York, bewailing with dirges the loss of kinsmen and compatriots, it was Dr. Huntington who ordered the funeral bells of Grace church to be tolled during the entire long day of that weird and solemn funeral procession while he stood with bared head watching it pass the church.

It was a fine and sympathetic act, noble in its simplicity, simple in its great nobility.

When the writer of this tribute expressed appreciation of this friendly sympathy to Dr. Greer, the bishop of the diocese, the good bishop disclaimed any personal responsibility for it, saying that "all the credit belonged to Dr. Huntington, for the act was his own entirely, though the good doctor had his highest commendation for having conceived it."

The Jewish population not only of New York, but of the United States, were deeply moved by this touching token of sympathy and fellowship.

Today as a body they join his family, his church and the Christian community in mourning his death and revering his memory.

TO CHECK THE DRUG HABIT.

State Department Preparing Legislation—Plan Worldwide Crusade.

The drug trade of the United States, so far as it is habit forming, is to be taken in hand by the government. In cooperation with the various states the federal government intends to stop the great increase in the sales of those drugs that lower the physical and moral standing of the people. Opium, morphine, cocine, chloral and similar distillations are to be placed under the severest inspection. The state department at Washington is now engaged in drawing up legislation to prevent the spread of the drug habit by eliminating the cause.

It is the intention of this government to make the crusade worldwide. Hamilton Wright, the American delegate on the opium commission, which has been sitting in Pekin, is drawing up plans for a conference of the principal governments at The Hague to take up the question of not only excluding opium except that intended for medicinal purposes, but also the other deleterious drugs to which a large number of the people of all countries have turned as offering a surcease from the troubles of life and which sap the user's energies and abet crime.

It is the intention of the state department if the same time to bring about reform by placing the manufacture and importation of habit forming drugs under the inspection of some division of the government which will be held responsible for the results. It is now believed that the best custodian of the trust would be the bureau of internal revenue, but this question has not been settled. The federal government, however, will not rest with inhibiting the interchange of such drugs between states. It will place at the command of the health departments of the various states the information it gathers, so that local traffic in such drugs may be checked and ultimately eliminated.

Telephoning to Stop a Runaway.

Telephones were utilized to good advantage in stopping a runaway on a country road near Waitsburg, in Walla Walla county, Wash., southwest of Spokane, and probably saved Bonny M., a standard trotter with a mark of 2:16, from injury by barbed wire fences. While the driver was making it on the city park track a few days ago the horse broke and started to set a new record along the road leading for the fifth ranch, three miles distant. In front of following the animal the driver went to the park telephone and notified the owner and other ranchers along the route to watch for a runaway. Several of these responded, and the horse was headed off in a standstill before serious damage resulted. The animal is valued at $2,000. This is said to be the first instance in which the telephone was pressed into service in that part of the country for similar use. Though Spokane have used the instrument to call out assistance to check cattle stampedes.

The first line carrying rockets were invented in 1820 by an Englishman named Trehgrouse and were soon after adopted by the Massachusetts Humane society for use at its stations, where they proved very successful, though baby brass cannons are exclusively used for throwing lines to wrecks.

Students Take Notice

All students of the high school who can possibly arrange to do so should confer with the superintendent in regard to their credits and classification before the beginning of school. A much more satisfactory selection of subjects will be made than if the matter is delayed until the first day of school when the superintendent's office is crowded and only a little time can be given to it. A change of course or subjects after one enters the high school is always to their injury and should be avoided if possible.

THEATRICAL

Uncle Dan'l or The Messenger from Jarvis Section will be the offering at the Charlevoix Theatre one night, Thursday, September 6. This is the play in which Barney McCauley and Mrs. Fiske first won such marked popular success for so many years. It tells a simple domestic story of New England life and has not a few genuinely effective dramatic situations. Several high-class specialties are introduced throughout the piece. Special attention has been given the scenic and electrical effects. They do not write as good songs nowadays as the old songs and Uncle Dan'l is proof that the real good plays of a few years ago were the "real goods." Prices 25, 35 and 50c. Box seats, 75c.

The Majestic offers Barney Hennessy, Melzer Bros. The Delanies and inovating pictures making a very strong bill for the remainder of the week. Monday night the management announces the official pictures of the fastest and fiercest fistic event in the world's history, the Ketchel-Papke fight.

In Memoriam.

To the officers and members of White Rose Hive No. 113.

We, your committee appointed to draft resolutions of respect in memory of our dear sister, Clara Tobin, submit the following:—

"None knows the door that opens
When they pass beyond control
So it's fastened hearts of roses
Time by one our loved ones fall."

It is with deep sorrow we announce the very sudden death of Lady Ada McCartney, who without a moments warning was called "Home" August 12, 1909.

"God's finger touched her and she slept." In these days of sadness when the white winged messenger has passed the guarded doors of our lodge room and severed the golden chain, there comes to us these words of consolation "I am the Resurrection and the Life, whoso ever believeth on Me shall never die."

Whereas, we fond our deceased sister in loving remembrance for her sterling traits of character and unassuming manner, be it

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved husband and grief-stricken family and may the Heavenly Father who cannot err in His great love bind up their broken hearts and give them strength to say "Thy will be done."

Resolved, That our charter be draped for thirty days, that these resolutions be spread upon the records, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and the COURIER for publication.

WARREN'S GREAT SPEECH BEFORE FEDERAL COURT

Indictment of Capitalism and Its Despotic Institutions.

Eloquent Plea For a Free Press and Free Speech.

Speech Making as Patrick Henry's Immortal Oration.

of the Revolutionary and civil war periods that the master class recognized no difference between the chattel slave and the wage hireling. In 1867 Karl Marx, the founder of scientific socialism, summed up the labor problem in the following striking sentence:

"In point of fact, however, whether a man works three days of the week for himself on his own land and three days for nothing on the estate of his lord or whether he works in the factory or workshop six hours daily for himself and six hours daily for his employer, it comes to the same thing."

This surplus value over and above that which is required by the slave, the serf and the wageworker to maintain his physical existence is the portion which the master, the feudal lord and the capitalist have taken by force of arms in the first case, by ownership of land in the second and by ownership of tools and cunningly devised laws and court decisions in the last instance.

The slave master built up a civil and political system which protected his right of property in the bodies of his slaves and the wealth they produced. One does not have to go very far back in the history of this country to find confirmation of this statement. Prior to 1860 the laws enacted by congress and by most of the several states, backed by the decisions of federal and state courts, had for their object the protection of the slave master in his right of ownership of men, women and children. The man who dared raise his voice in protest against the exploitation of the black man was branded as a traitor to his country. If he attempted to speak he was thrown into jail, and if he attempted to print a newspaper voicing his sentiments his press was destroyed and he was mobbed and murdered.

What was true in the two revolutionary periods which marked the disappearance of a political system based on kingcraft and a political system based on chattel slavery is true today.

Marked For Persecution.

The men and the newspapers that have espoused the cause of men, women and children who work in the fields, factories and mines of this nation are marked for persecution, as were the Revolutionary and abolition editors before them. For ten years as editor of the Appeal to Reason I have been in constant conflict with the ruling class and the men who hope to pick up the crumbs which drop from the tables of the great captains of industry, on whose will employment depends, not alone in the industries, but in the government and municipal service.

Postoffice and Courts Versus Appeal.

The postoffice department was first employed to hamper and harass the Appeal to Reason in its work of education and enlightenment. The most absurd rules and regulations were specially formulated to apply, as Third Assistant Postmaster General Madden wired to the Girard postmaster, "to the Appeal to Reason." In every instance where our right to the mails was questioned the Appeal won a signal victory, because we strictly obeyed the spirit and the letter of the law.

Then the aid of the courts was invoked to accomplish what the postoffice department had failed to do. The courts today, as prior to 1860, are with the owning and ruling class. Daily this fact is becoming more apparent. One has only to refer to the long list of decisions in which the interests of labor and capital are opposed to verify this statement. The blacklist has been legalized and the boycott outlawed. The injunction has been used with telling effect in labor controversies to terrorize and crush the men who work, while it has proved ineffective and of no avail when directed against great capitalist interests, as President Roosevelt pointed out when he was engaged in his battle with the great packing industries.

The people of Missouri in their capacity as sovereign voters recently elected a governor and legislature on a platform demanding relief from railroad extortion. A two cent fare bill was enacted into law. This law was upheld by the state supreme court. The railroads went to the federal courts, which with the stroke of a pen nullified the will of 3,000,000 people. So closely allied has become the federal judiciary of this country to the great corporations that even now there is pending in congress a resolution demanding an investigation of the acts and conduct of the federal judges who have prostituted their high office to the profit of these corporations, three-fourths of which, according to a statement made by Governor Hadley, are either illegally organized or unlawfully conducted.

Fighting Industrial Despotism.

For years the Appeal to Reason has been waging almost single handed a fight against the oppressive and intolerable industrial and political conditions which confront this country. We frankly admit having been unsparing in our criticism of the acts of public officials and the courts of this land. We have dared to tell the truth, and it is because of this that I face this court today a convicted felon in the eyes of thousands of men and women whose respect I covet.

Whence came this prosecution? The Kansas City Journal in November, 1907, editorially stated that the department of justice at the instance of the president of the United States had been instructed to commence proceedings to arrest a Socialist sheet at Girard, Kan. I do not know the Journal's source of information, but am inclined to believe from facts now in my possession that this prosecution of the Appeal to Reason has been directed from the attorney general's office in Washington.

When the Pierson envelope, on which this action is based, was sent to the postoffice inspector of this district from Los Angeles that gentleman turned it over to the district attorney. The district attorney returned the envelope to the postoffice inspector with the opinion that there was no ground for action. The inspector in making report to the department at Washington marked the case "Closed." He later explained to me that this meant that so far as the district of Kansas was concerned no further action would be taken. But soon thereafter word was received from Washington, so the assistant district attorney announced in the presence of this court, that there had been a violation of the law and that the case must be reopened and vigorously prosecuted.

"We Are After the Appeal."

The district attorney's office at Topeka, however, revised its decision after hearing from Washington that there was no ground for action against me. One of my attorneys journeyed to Washington and laid before the department thousands of reward cards similar to the Taylor reward which had been mailed from nearly every city in the Union. When my attorney inquired why the Appeal was singled out for prosecution on this flimsy charge, while all the senders of these other cards, who were equally culpable, were not molested, the representative of the government opened a drawer in his desk and produced an armload of marked copies of the Appeal.

Blue pencil marks designating certain articles in the Appeal indicated that this paper is pretty closely read by high government officials. The government official shrugged his shoulders in reply to Darrow's question and remarked, "We are after the Appeal."

This case has dragged its weary way through this court for over two years, continued from time to time at the instance of the government. I submit from these facts that I am not prosecuted for having violated any federal law, but purely because of my political opinions and my work in behalf of the working class of this nation.

This prosecution is not unexpected to us. As plainly stated by the government official to whom our attorney talked while in Washington, it is evident that secret service agents of the government have been camping on the trail of the Appeal for, lo, these many years.

Is it not pretty conclusive evidence that we have observed religiously the laws and regulations governing the conduct of a newspaper when after ten years of effort the government is able to find only this lone and paltry alleged violation?

Personally I feel proud of this record. I feel no sense of guilt, nor will the world approve this conviction when the truth prevails and the facts are known.

Submitted Copy to Postmaster.

The government's witnesses testified here on the stand that I submitted to them copy of the matter I expected to mail and asked whether in the postmaster's judgment it constituted a violation of the federal law. That official after looking the matter up said it did not, and I want to say here that during the ten years of my connection with the Appeal to Reason I have had frequent occasion to consult with the postmaster at Girard on matters relating to the postal laws, and in no instance was his judgment ever at fault. He assured me that in his judgment the matter I proposed mailing was identical in character with the thousands of postal cards mailed at his office by the sheriff, the marshal and the officers of the Anti Horse Thief association.

In submitting to this court these postal cards mailed by bankers it is not my intention that the government should proceed against these men on the evidence furnished by me. I know these gentlemen are immune from prosecution because they represent the dominant class in society today. The rewards which they offer are for men who have committed crimes against property, and in the prevailing social system the property of the rich is of vastly more consequence than the life and liberty of the poor.

Is Criticism a Crime?

On the other hand, the editor who has espoused the cause of the wage slave today has in the eyes of the ruling class committed a crime against existing institutions for daring to offer a reward for the apprehension of an influential member of the dominant political party.

I have also dared to criticise a decision of the highest judicial tribunal in the United States. Judge West, the assistant district attorney who assisted in my prosecution, in his argument a year ago last November, after presenting his reasons why the demurrer in this action should be overruled, closed his argument in a burst of passion with the statement that "as a matter of fact this literature was sent out for the purpose of bringing into contempt and discredit the supreme court of the United States." Is criticism a crime? And is it for this I am being prosecuted?

Our Colonist Forefathers.

Smarting under the yoke of tyranny of the English king to prevent the circulation of Revolutionary newspapers during the period preceding the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the first amendment to the new constitution was made to provide for a free press and free speech, always and everywhere recognized as the sustaining pillars of free institutions.

Our colonist forefathers, imbued with the high ideals embodied in their immortal Declaration, shouldered their guns and shot to death the divine right of kings, and then the cunning enemies of democracy raised in its stead the supreme court, with its many federal arms reaching out into all the states of the Union.

The supreme court has become in fact the reigning monarch of the American people. No measure of relief demanded by the voters of this nation enacted into law by their elected representatives and signed by the president may become operative without its judicial sanction. At the command of the lords of privilege any obnoxious law is promptly declared unconstitutional.

The supreme court of the United States has today more real power over the people than is vested in any monarch of the old world.

The late Senator Hanna boasted that the courts are maintained to buttress property rights. Ex President Roosevelt denounced a federal judge for his interpretation of the law in the government's prosecution of the beef trust.

President Taft in his Hot Springs (Va.) speech expressed a decided opinion upon the same question in referring to the inability of the poor to cope in the courts with men of wealth. With expressions like these from men of prominence, do you wonder that there is a growing distrust on the part of the poor people of this nation that the courts are against them?

The Courts Ruled by Property.

In the western district of New York of thirty cases decided in favor of injured employees twenty-eight were reversed in favor of the master class by the higher courts. United States District Attorney Sims of Chicago was waging a vigorous fight against the white slave drivers, and when victory was almost within his grasp his hand was paralyzed by a decision of the supreme court, which virtually put an end to the prosecution of that unspeakable infamy. There are property interests involved in the wholesale debauchery of young girls, and these property interests must be safeguarded at whatever cost. As for the girls, they are the daughters of the working class and in point of value are not to be compared to property.

Our modern system of jurisprudence is a survival of mediaeval times, when judges presided by right of ownership of lands and castles, and it will require another political revolution similar to that of 1776 and that of 1860 to abolish this bulwark of special privilegs and capitalist exploitation.

Convicted by Jury of Republicans.

I was convicted by a jury composed of partisan Republicans. It was shown by competent evidence introduced in this court today that two of the jurors had expressed hostile and prejudicial sentiments against me. Affidavits herewith filed show that one of the jurors, Mr. Nelson, became deathly sick in the jury room, and he affirms that it was because of this sickness and his fear of death unless medical attention could be secured that he was forced into voting for a conviction. Again it is shown by competent evidence introduced at this hearing that the principal witness for the government, ex-Governor Taylor, made statements which were untrue. He stated that at the time the reward which I offered was circulated through the mails he was not a fugitive from justice nor was there any charge pending against him of a criminal nature in Kentucky. Affidavits, state records and letters signed by Taylor himself, all on file in this court, show that Taylor had been indicted and that for seven years prior to the offer of our reward he had been a fugitive from justice with a price on his head. It is the common practice in all courts that where the defendant can show that a juror in qualifying perjures himself a new trial is granted. Perjured testimony on the part of the prosecuting witness is also ground for a new trial in ordinary cases. Of course I understand that this is not an ordinary case. The whole history of these proceedings shows conclusively that it is not an attempt to secure the ends of justice, but an effort to punish me because of my political views.

No Mercy or Leniency Asked.

In conclusion I will say that I am not asking the mercy or leniency of this court. I have committed no crime, and there is festering in my conscience no accusation of guilt, but if my conviction and punishment will serve to rivet public attention upon the abuses which I have tried to point out then I shall feel that I have not suffered this humiliation in vain.

After all, this is the price of human progress. Why should I expect immunity? The courts have ever been and are today the bulwarks of the ruling class. Why should they not punish offenders against that class?

In feudal slavery the courts sustained the feudal lords, in chattel slavery they protected the slave owners, and in wage slavery they defend the industrial masters.

Whoever protests for the sake of justice or in the name of humanity is the enemy of society and is condemned or put to death.

In one of the most eloquent characters of history Charles Dunnel, leading the van of the centuries, pointed out that the most infamous crimes against the liberty and progress of the human race had been sanctioned by the so-called courts of justice.

Truth Will Triumph In the End.

This case is a mere incident in the mighty struggle of the masses for emancipation. Slowly, [illegible] records the struggle of truth against the power of Mammon. The past is written in tears and blood. The future is dim and unknown, but the final outcome of this worldwide struggle is not in doubt. Freedom will conquer slavery, truth will prevail over error, justice will triumph over hypocrisy, the light will vanquish the darkness, and humanity, disenthralled, will rise resplendent in the glory of universal fatherhood.

The Pyrophore.

A living light, called the pyrophore, makes illumination cheap and convenient in Brazil. The pyrophore is a monster firefly, an inch and a half long. With one it is possible to read fine print, and three will light a room. The Brazilian peasant, when he traverses by night the perilous forest paths of his country, fastens to each shoe a pyrophore. Thus illuminated, he has no difficulty in avoiding poisonous snakes, pitfalls and wild beasts. The Brazilian coquette fastens in her hair or her corsage a pyrophore incased in white tulle. The effect is as of a great luminous pearl or opal. When a pyrophore's light goes out it is not necessary to fill him up with oil, to drop a coin in him or to throw him away, but a moment's duckling in cold water suffices. Thereafter his three little lanterns, one on the breast and two on the back, emit again as bright a radiance as ever. The pyrophore, as all nature students know, is called vulgarly cuengo, but scientifically the name is Coleopter serricorn sternose elaterides.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

In the Presence of Death.

Some years ago a Swansea vessel was caught in a terrible gale, says an English paper. The captain had his wife on board, and when the wind was still rising he told her to go down below and sleep, for all was well. He remained on the bridge till the mate came up and said: "We've done all we can. Hadn't you better tell the chaps to get out the boats?"

"Yes, yes, my lad. If you think so," said the captain, who knew the only choice left was whether to go down with the ship or in a small boat, which couldn't live ten seconds in that sea. The engineers came up with the news that the fires were all out.

"Very well, my lads," said the captain quietly. "Save yourselves if you can."

"Won't you fetch the wife on deck, sir?" asked one of the men.

"No," was the calm reply. "Let her sleep, poor girl! I am going down to have a smoke." And, smoking by the bedside of his sleeping wife, he went down with the ship.

A Man of Resources.

A young man genial of face and correct in attire arose from his seat in a well patronized cafe an evening or two ago, raised high a dollar bill and addressed those present.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have here a dollar bill. It is a good bill, open to inspection by all. I want to raffle it off, and I will esteem it a favor if fifteen gentlemen will come in. Ten cents a chance—10 cents for a dollar bill. It's dirt cheap. Who will come in, please? I'll esteem it a favor, as I said, and there's the chance for a real bargain."

Fifteen men good naturedly chipped in 10 cents each, drew small squares of paper from a hat, and the winner pocketed the bill, with a laugh.

"Thank you, gentlemen," said the raffler, with a Chesterfieldian bow. "That dollar was of no use to me. But now that I've sold it for a dollar and a half I have my car fare home. Thank you. Good night."—New York Globe.

In the eastern part of the bay of Bengal is a group of islands called the Andaman islands. They are profusely covered with vegetation, nearly every kind of tree growing there. The scenery, too, is very grand, but the islands are unhealthy and on this account are not thickly populated. In fact, the natives are gradually dying out. They are quite uncivilized and have had an evil name for cannibalism, but are now chiefly on fish. Squatting on rocks or standing on rudely shaped boats, they shoot at the fishes with arrows, although some employ long spears. The islands are used by the Indian government as a settlement for prisoners of the worst type, and it was while engaged in a tour of inspection in 1872 that Lord Mayo, the governor general of India, was stabbed to death by a desperate convict.—London Opinion.

The deepest metal mines are still in the Lake Superior copper region. There the Red Jacket shaft of the Calumet and Hecla mine is 4,720 feet vertical, while the Tamarack has two shafts over 5,000 feet deep—namely, No. 5, which is 5,187 feet, and No. 3, which is 5,230 feet vertical.

Charlevoix Pomona was my next attraction. I tell you, Mr. Editor this county Grange is a live wire.

The county is the most "picturesque in Michigan, and this makes the Granges "picturesqu." The meeting was held at Maple Grove grange hall, and, we venture the assertion commands the most wonderful and beautiful viewpoint of any Grange hall in Michigan.

E. B. Ward, master of the Pomona grange, makes the county meeting a veritable school of instruction Every member of the county grange has something to do, and herein lies the wonderful success achieved and achieving by Charlevoix Pomona.

Pomona lecturer DuBois gave a short talk along grange lines. A committee was appointed to solicit applications and five were secured.

CREAM ON THE FARM

By EDWARD H. WEBSTER.

The dairy industry is not the main business of farmers, but rather a side line forced upon them by adverse conditions or aggressive creamery agents. The farmer seldom gives serious attention to the careful handling of his cream. He has the cows and the separator, and the market that takes his cream asks but little of him in the way of quality. Naturally but little has been done to keep the product pure from the time the cow is milked. Now, however, times are changing rapidly in this respect. The creameries are requiring quality tests to be made of the patron's cream and are paying for it on that basis. This is going to bring the farmer face to face with a new proposition. It must learn how to care for his cream in such a way that he may deliver it to the creamery in perfect condition.

The milking is the starting point of most of the trouble. The milker sits down with a pail open at the top and begins to milk. Any dust straw or manure that may be hanging to the udder is gradually dislodged and finds its way into the milk. Thus while the dairyman milks he unconsciously plants—he plants the seed of destruction in the very product he is going to market. The destruction begins at once and is carried on very rapidly so long as the proper temperatures are maintained.

The remedy would naturally suggest itself. Stop the dirt from getting into the milk. This can be done easily and quickly. If the milker will carry with him a damp cloth and carefully wipe off the udder and the parts immediately around it the trouble will to a great extent be prevented. All of the coarser particles of dirt will be ruined off and the finer particles of dust dampened, so that they will not fall into the pail. This work will require but a few moments of extra time and prevent much after trouble in the way of sour and ill flavored cream. The cow should be milked in a place in which the air is free from dust. In the winter or when the cows are kept in the stable never feed or move hay or clean out the place or do anything to stir up dust or strong smells just before milking.

The cream should be separated at once after milking, while the milk still has the animal heat in it. The work of the day should be so arranged that this can be done. Do not use a cloth strainer. The separator will remove all the solid dirt that may be in the milk much better than it can be done with a strainer. There never was a cloth strainer used that would not in a few days become yellow and smell bad. Under the best conditions, where steam can be used to help in cleansing, the cloth strainer is a source of danger rather than a benefit. A well made wire strainer might be used, but there is no need of any strainer. Pour the fresh, warm milk directly into the supply can and send it through as quickly as possible.

Scab in Sheep.

Symptoms of scab in sheep are intense itching, aggravated by warm weather; the loss of wool in patches; the unnatural dryness of the skin, which cracks at times; rapid loss of flesh and general unthriftiness. A veterinarian says: The following dip is excellent and does not stain the wool: Tobacco, sixteen pounds; oil of tar, three pints; soda ash, twenty pounds; soft soap, four pounds. Boil the tobacco and dissolve the other ingredients in a few gallons of boiling water and add enough water to make fifty gallons. Dip the sheep in it while lukewarm. This mixture should dip fifty sheep if each when taken out is laid on a drain board and his wool well squeezed. It will be necessary to dip a second or even a third time in persistent cases.

New Antrim County Railroad.

The Antrim Iron Co. is building a new branch extending northeast of its Cold-prings railroad, to reach the Gorham tract of timber near the south and east line of Antrim county. This branch will be about five miles in length and two miles of steel have been laid the past two months by the gang of men under John Grace. Another gang under Robert Engerson is clearing and grading the right of way. A telephone line has already been strung along the new route. This new road will reach one of the best tracts of timber in this section of the state. A camp of men in tents has already been established on this tract. Mancelona Herald.

Neighborhood Notes

F. J. Browne, a fruit farmer near Archie, Grand Traverse County, has a red raspberry patch that has brought more than enough returns to pay for his farm. He has kept tab for the last eight seasons and the gross income from this patch, which is but little more than an acre in size, has been over $2,000, which is more than the original cost of the twenty-one acres in his place. This is an average return of $300 a year.

The attorney general in an opinion says that under a new law recently passed by the legislature, boards of supervisors relieve county treasurers of responsibility when these boards advertise for bids from banks anxious to be the depository for county funds. Then the board must place the funds in one of these banks whose bid is accepted. However, if there is no advertising for bids, then the county treasurer places the funds wherever he chooses and thus becomes responsible for them.

An examination of some interest took place at Ionia as the result of a complaint made by N. J. Spaulding, secretary of the Ionia Fair association, charging J. Curry with violation of the local option law. In the complaint it is alleged that on the night of July 28, a keg of beer was shipped into town from Grand Rapids and delivered by a drayman at the fair grounds, where it was tapped and a crowd indulged in a beer-fest during the night. The case may involve some fine legal points and it may go to the supreme court. One point in whether parties can "chip in" on a keg and dispense the contents in the manner stated. Several witnesses were sworn, and the testimony brought out a number who will be summoned when the examination is continued in two weeks.

Michigan has ever been partial to schools. Since the ordinance of '87 declaring "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged," went into force, there has been a continued and determined effort to give each succeeding generation a better intellectual equipment than that possessed by its predecessors.

There are in western Michigan today 1,708 public school houses in which 3,251 teachers are employed. There are eighty-one parochial schools, twenty private schools, five business colleges, ten normal training schools, one academy, one industrial institution and three colleges. Of the public schools, 121, with 1,558 teachers, are graded institutions.

Thirty-seven of the parochial schools are Catholic institutions and in these 105 teachers give instruction to 7,141 pupils.

One million dollars will come to Grand Traverse county from this year's apple crop. Of this amount, the growers will receive $600,000, while $300,000 will be paid for barrels, picking and packing and the commission men's profit will probably be another $100,000. On the peninsula alone, the growers will receive $450,000 for their apples while $52,500 will be paid out for barrels, picking, etc. The value of Leelanau county's crop to that county is estimated at $750,000.

"The grape is a coming crop of this region," says George E. Rowe, of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. "It comes on the market later than the grapes from the grape belt and stays longer. Last year, an experiment was tried of shipping a car load of grapes to Seattle. The Michigan fruit sold with a rush at a heavy profit, being much superior to the western varieties. I believe that grapes can be grown profitably here and the more that are grown, the higher will be the price."

Ludington has voted the sum of $50,000 with which the city will buy a park of Justus S. Stearns, the wealthy lumberman. Then Mr. Stearns will make the city a present of $50,000 which will be used as a bonus fund to secure new industries. Thus the desired result is obtained and the law is not violated.

INCREASED REGISTRATION FEE.

A Change From Eight Cents to Ten Cents Is Probable.

The announcement has just been made by Postmaster General Hitchcock of a proposed increase in the fee for the registration of letters and packages. The change will probably be made in the very near future, and it is expected that the rate will be increased from 8 to 10 cents.

The postmaster general is authorized to make the registry fee as high as 20 cents if necessary. Previous to 1871 it was 15 cents, and it was then reduced to 8 cents. The following year it was raised to 10 cents, and in 1891 the price of 8 cents was restored and has since been in force.

The registry service as conducted is very expensive, owing to the extreme precaution taken for the safe transmission and correct delivery of all registered mail.

In order to conduct the registry system as it is at present done this branch of the postoffice business shows a large deficit every year, and it is not believed that the public will offer any serious opposition in the increase.

In talking with a number of delegates who attended the recent annual convention of first-class postmasters, at Toledo, Mr. Hitchcock found that they were unanimous in the belief that there would be no objections to the proposed increase.

The postmaster general has invited a score of registry officials of long experience from all parts of the country to a conference with him at Washington, when the question will probably be definitely settled.

TRIP THROUGH TWO TOWNSHIPS

Securing Views for the West Michigan Development Bureau

TAKEN BY COURIER REPRESENTATIVE

Farmers in This Township are Enjoying Prosperity

Limited Number of Views Could Be Secured of the Feast of Good things Seen, Fertile Fields and Orchards

Monday, of last week, Dr. Cronter, D. S. Payton, director of the West Michigan Development Bureau, Photographer Mason, an employee of George W. Priest, and the COURIER editor made flying trips through Marion and Norwood townships securing views for the bureau's exhibit at Chicago. Owing to the limited number of views which it was possible to take on one trip, many places had to be neglected, as in the short time left for preparation, only a few samples of the work being done by the farmers of these prosperous townships and the splendid crops which they are raising were taken, it soon becoming evident that to take them all would be an impossible task.

The first stop made was at the farm of Jerry Barry where a splendid view of a field of beets was secured. Going further back on the farm a field of corn was found which was secured, and, back of that, was a field of potatoes, which, while we hated not to have a view of, we were forced to leave as we desired to have views of different localities. One thing that impressed us, at this the first stop, was the thoroughness of cultivation which had made these splendid crops possible.

The next stop was at the farm home of William Straw, where a view of his barn and silo was secured to show that Marion farmers are bringing to the science of farming modern methods. The crops and orchards on Mr. Straw's farm were hard to leave behind but we were forced to do so.

The beautiful farm home of Nat Burns was the next stopping place. Mr. Burns was not at home but a view was taken of his home, which is modern in every respect with the outbuildings which go to make up a Michigan farmstead.

Across the road from Mr. Burns, Elmer Ingalls, president of the dairyman's association of this county, has his dairy farm, with the buildings which go to make him a successful dairy farmer, an industry which is destined to become a great source of wealth to this county. Leaving these buildings behind however, we aimed to secure a view of Mr. Ingalls' beet field, he, having demonstrated that the growing of sugar beets and dairying go together. Coming in sight of his beet field we could not restrain ourselves from cries of admiration as the beauty of the rows of beet tops stretching out in the distance glistening in the sun was displayed, and we realized what a source of wealth the cultivation of sugar beets was to Charlevoix county.

Pressing on to Marion town hall, across the road from which is located Marion Grange Hall—fit setting for a community of prosperous farmers—a view was taken of the country in general, which is equal to any view that could be taken in Michigan.

Our next stop was made at the farm of William Withers, another well known Marion dairyman. Our particular interest in Mr. Withers' place lay in securing a view of his orchards, which are among the show places of the township. Mr. Withers has gone into the cultivation of apples in an intelligent manner and has given his trees a thorough pruning and spraying, and the bushels of perfect apples on his trees, notwithstanding he has thinned them out by picking off bushel after bushel, proves Charlevoix's claim to lie in the fruit center of the world. Mr. Withers orchards however, are not the only sources of wealth producing farming in which he is engaged, he also being a prominent dairyman and firm believer in the use of the silo and the growing of sugar beets. His comfortable farm buildings, a view of which was secured, and growing crops, prove him a success at his occupation.

After being out of the city only two hours, we were forced to return satisfied that it was not a question of where to look for views to prove our claims of having the best county but how to select those we did take.

Tuesday afternoon Mr. Payton, Mr. Mason and a COURIER representative secured a driver for another trip. Norwood township was the objective point, a stop being made in Marion however to secure a view of the orchards of Robert Gregory. Mr. Gregory's orchard has been neglected, which is the case of too many orchards which we saw in our travels, but notwithstanding, the trees are bending beneath their load of perfect fruit. Mr. Gregory also has several trees of small fruit which add a substantial sum to his income.

Passing by the beautiful farm home of Arthur Beattie, which in its surroundings and general appearance bears the marks of his reputation of being one of Charlevoix county's most successful farmers with regret, our next stop was made at Ed Shapton's, where we took a splendid view of trees loaded with fruit. A view was here taken of Mr. Shapton's new barn and silo, in process of construction. Mr. Shapton's new barn is a model, having the King system of ventilation and all the conveniences of modern barn architecture.

SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

For the County Fair Secured by Secretary Nicholas

Speed Entries Coming in Fast—Big Display of Fruit

All indications now point to the county fair to be held at East Jordan, September 28, 30, being one of the best fairs ever held in this part of the state.

Secretary Nicholas has secured as the chief attraction, Major R. H. Hendershot, the Original Drummer Boy of the Rappahanock, and his son, the most wonderful drummer and fifer in America, to furnish the patrons with music and solos that our citizens have never before heard brought out of a drum and fife. Their playing is wonderful. Everyone should see and hear them. The Major brings with him the original Horace Greely drum, presented to him through the hands of General Winfield Scott, after the battle of Fredericksburg, December 1862; the drum presented to him by the Woman's Relief Corps of Bangor, Maine, April 22, 1885, the gold mounted Garfield and Arthur drum sticks of 1880 and the badge and drum presented him by the W. R. C. and G. A. R. of the United States at the national encampment at Indianapolis, Ind., September 1903.

Wednesday is Grangers' Day and Thursday will be automobile day; also on Thursday will occur the big game of "Button, Button, Who's Got the Button?" in which every person on the grounds will participate. The list of prizes is growing and all those attending the last day have an equal chance to win them. Watch next week's issue for complete list.

Thursday, September 30, is Charlevoix—Boyne City day and a mammoth attendance will be present from both cities.

The grounds, including the track, have been put in first class condition and the speediest horses on the different circuit are making entries.

Another strong point will be the display of fruit which will eclipse any thing ever before shown in Charlevoix county. Make your plans now to attend the fair and be sure and exhibit some of the products of Charlevoix county farms. Write Secretary Nicholas for premium list.

The Majestic offers for the rest of this week "The Musical Bells" in musical comedy. Brixton & Brixton comedy sketch artists and Joseph E. Price German Comedian. An exceptionally strong bill is promised for next week.

JUVENILE COURT

Communication from Judge J. M. Harris, of Same

In Regard to Recent Case and Work of the Court.

On July 20th a party of boys employed as caddies on the golf grounds in the city for some real or fancied grievance, overturned the caddy house, damaging it to such an extent that it had to be rebuilt. The golf association had previous to this suffered the loss of another building on the same grounds, destroyed by boys, though probably none of the boys involved in the act of July 20th were concerned in the first destruction; but the officers of the association felt that they were entitled to protection from malicious or mischievous destruction of the property of the association and July 24th filed a complaint against three boys, whose names they had ascertained, with the police court of the City of Charlevoix and on examination, it appeared that the boys were under the age of seventeen years and that therefore the police justice had no jurisdiction and acting under the provisions of the juvenile court law, transferred the causes to the juvenile court.

The juvenile court thereupon notified the county agent who investigated the matter and reported nineteen boys as having participated in the act. One of these boys so reported to the juvenile court was over the age of seventeen years and his case was reported to the police court of the city. Of the others, thirteen upon being notified, came into the juvenile court and admitted their participation in the wrongful act; three admitted being there but denied any participation in the act and one was excused as being too young to be responsible. One boy had left the city and has not yet reported.

Section five of the juvenile court law provides that upon finding of delinquencies, the court may impose a fine; or if the offense be trespass, the court may require the damage to be made good. If the offense be larceny, the stolen property be returned or the court may require it to be paid for by the child, if he is capable of earning the money.

The juvenile court, acting upon the provisions of the above section, caused an examination to be made of the damage done in dollars and cents and from such examination determined that the damage done was at least forty dollars and explained to the boys interested the nature of their offense and that by the payment of two dollars apiece, substantial reparation would be made for the damage done and to the credit of the boys, it may be said that ten of them promptly responded and that more would have done so promptly had it not been for the mistaken parents and others in encouraging them to avoid making reparation for their part and also in encouraging them in breaking their appointments with the court and later in answer to a summons issued from court appeared, and now sixteen of them have made reparation.

It is a matter of regret that parents and others, some of whom have the prestige of holding appointments as city officials encourage boys in wilfully destroying the property of others and by their own falsehoods and prejudicial statements also encourage deception upon the part of the boys that the law makes it the duty of the court to help.

For instance, one parent comes to court and says that the caddy house blew down after this number of boys had assured the court that they tore it down. A city official says that it was an attempt upon the part of the officers and the court to take money from poor boys for rich corporations, and other parents said that the purpose of taking the money from the boys was to turn it over to the officials of the court as graft. The money collected amounts to $12.00 and has been turned over to the treasurer of the association and his receipt therefor taken less the amount of costs which was $1.35 paid to William Driggett, and made necessary only by the acts above.

Ordinarily the court would pay no attention to these criticisms in a public way and the excuse for doing so this time is that people and officers indulging themselves with statements prejudicial and known to be untrue, hamper the court in that work that it is created to do and that work is first to ameliorate the condition of dependent and neglected children and to do the best thing for the good of the children thus found delinquent.

J. M. HARRIS,
Judge of juvenile court.

HOWARD-COOK

Popular Charlevoix Young People Married Tuesday Night

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Cook Tuesday evening, September 11, 1909 at 5:30 a very pretty wedding took place, their daughter Cora and David Howard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Howard of this city. The house was very prettily decorated with evergreens, mountain ash berries, potted plants and cut flowers. The bride wore a gown of white messaline and carried white roses.

Little Miss Ada Lois Yettaw, ring bearer, carrying the ring in the heart of a large rose. The bridesmaid and best man were Miss Iva Howard and George Cook, sister and brother of the bride and bridegroom with Rev. Mr. Putnam to tie the knot. After the wedding ceremony a bountiful supper was served.

Numerous presents were given and among them a deed to a lot on Lewis street from the bride's father and mother, where they will build their future home.

A very few relatives and friends were present.

SCHOOL BEGINS MONDAY

Superintendent DeVoe is Well Acquainted With Its Needs.

Enrollment is Good and a Successful Year Looked for.

Monday the public schools of this city will open for the year. The new superintendent, I. M. DeVoe, is no stranger to Charlevoix citizens and pupils, having been connected with our schools for the past four years. Mr. Devoe, who holds a life certificate from the Mt. Pleasant Normal and has had ten years experience in his chosen profession, will be assisted by a full corps of teachers, all of whom, with one exception, are normal graduates.

Mr. DeVoe furnishes us with the following information in regard to school work.

"It is important that all pupils should begin school the first day. The students of the Charlevoix schools must cover the work in nine months that a large number of schools do in nine and one half or ten months. Foundations for the year's work are carefully made during the first few days of school, and the pupils coming in after school opens will find it difficult and discouraging to do the work for which the rest of the class are well prepared. The teachers are willing to do all they can for those who must necessarily be absent, but they expect the parents and pupils to make every effort possible to maintain regularity of attendance.

Patrons of the school should at all times co-operate with the teachers; they are always welcome to visit any room at any time. The teachers are glad to become acquainted with patrons and to talk over matters concerning the welfare of the pupils.

Complaints concerning the school are frequently due to the misunderstanding or lack of knowledge of the actual conditions, should complaints arise, it should be talked over with the teacher then taken to the Superintendent, and only after failure to get satisfaction in this way should it be referred to the Board of Education.

The schools are organized on the plan of a twelve year course: the first four grades constitute the primary department, the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth are included in the grammar department. The work of the high school is distributed over a period of four years. The courses in English, history, science, mathematics, ancient and modern languages, and the commercial branches, book-keeping, typewriting, shorthand and commercial law, are designed to meet the requirements of those preparing to enter the university or other educational institutions, as well as to give the best educational foundation to those who cannot enter the higher institutions of learning.

WHAT WILL BE ASKED FARMERS

By the Census Enumerator Next Year

DATA SECURED WILL BE VALUABLE

Agriculture Our Greatest Industry Growing Fast

Farmers are Requested to Keep Their Farm Books Up so They Can Readily Give Information

A dispatch from Washington says:

It will be suggested by the United States Census Director Durand to the farmers all over the country that the work of securing accurate returns at the coming census of agriculture will be greatly facilitated if the farmers will keep or provide some sort of written record of their farm operations during the year of 1909.

The census of agriculture, of all the subjects in the census law, is regarded as one of the greatest importance. The twelfth census reported a total fixed capital of $5,010,039,516 invested in manufactures. A more conservative estimate based upon a different standard of comparison places the investment in agriculture as more than twice that of manufacturers.

In 1900 the census found 5,739,657 farms, an increase of 1,175,016 over the total for 1890. The 1890 figures were 353,734 higher than the number of farms counted in the 1880 census. The 1910 total should reach 5,911,637, or roughly about 6,000,000 farms, which is the number estimated by Chief Statistician Powers. There were 10,433,188 males and females over 10 years of age June 1, 1900 engaged in agricultural pursuits. Professor Powers believes that 1910 census will swell that number to the extent of several millions.

The magnitude of these figures makes it evident that the importance of the agricultural census [illegible] can be overestimated.

Director Durand believes that great good will be accomplished by getting into direct contact with the farmers and it is estimated that millions of farmers will be reached at their homes or at their mutual improvement meetings by the contemplated method of circulating preparatory information.

Farm economists and scientists learned in agricultural problems are now in Washington assisting Director Durand and his staff in the formulation of the agricultural schedule so that the questions to be asked by the enumerators shall be easily comprehended and so draw out the information ordered by congress to be ascertained.

At the same time these practical steps are being taken by the census bureau, the farmers themselves will be called upon to help push the statistical plow over the country wide field of farm data. They will be reminded that an accurate and practical census is the only one worth while.

The necessity for some written or permanent record by the farmers themselves of farm operations is obvious and its value in furnishing data more reliable than guess-work is equally evident.

In order that the farmers may begin at once Director Durand indicates as follows what operations are to be recorded although the schedule is still in incomplete shape:

"Each person in charge of a farm will be asked to state the acreage and value of his farm; that is, the acreage and value of land kept and cultivated by him, also the area of land in his farm covered with woodland, and finally that which is utilized for specified farm purposes.

"Each farmer will be asked to give the acreage, quantity produced and value of each crop, including grains, hay, vegetables, fruits, cotton, tobacco, etc., raised on the farm in the season of 1909.

"Each farmer will be asked to report the number and value of all domestic animals, poultry and the swarms of bees on the farm April 15, 1910; also the number and value of young animals such as calves, colts, lambs, pigs, and of young fowls, such as chickens, turkeys ducks, etc., raised on the farm in

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Central Lake Farmers Tell Tales of Success in This Region

George E. McCartney, Editor of the Central Lake Torch, was in town Sunday. George is an enthusiast on the work of the West Michigan Development Bureau, believing with the COURIER, that all we need to do is to bring the advantages of this section, backed up with facts and figures to secure an army of buyers of farm lands for this section. In the last issue of the Torch he gives a few items of successful farming in the vicinity of his town, as follows:

A few instances the Torch man was able to pick up from E. S. Gill are here given. They are taken from the books of the Canning Company for the past two or three years, and no doubt there are many instances as good or better that could be secured.

Peter Williams on four acres raised sweet corn which brought him at the factory $156.14, and the value of the fodder was estimated at $15 per acre, being an addition of $60. The total production of the four acres therefore average $53.61.

Thomas DeMontpied, from an acre of squash harvested a few ponads over ten tons, bringing him at the factory $45.58. This with practically no cultivation.

Jerry Bedell put $4.05 worth of pumpkin seed in his cornfield, of probably ten acres or more. There was absolutely no extra cultivation. The corn crop was not curtailed by reason of the pumpkins, it was but a small job to harvest them, and the canning factory paid him $98.31 for the product. A pretty good pick-up.

From three acres J. W. Flickinger took $240 worth of string beans, and many small patches have shown better results. For instance, from a half acre John Chamberlin took $71.53 and used $1 worth of seed.

E. B. Gill on leased land got twenty tons of beets, which brought $350, and reports patches that have gone as high as six tons to the acre.

A. F. Wallbrecht, of the Intermediate Valley Roller Mills, says that wheat this year is running from twenty to thirty-six and forty bushels per acre, and many exceptional yields are reported. Mr. Wallbrecht criticizes strongly the system of plowing common among our farmers: Says it's a game of cut and cover, in which a large part of the soil is not stirred at all. With proper plowing the average wheat yield should be larger than it is.

The Progress notes that Will Blissett who lives just across the line in Kalkaska county on a farm that is considered more than ordinarily sandy and below the average in fertility, threshed the wheat from three acres of ground and had 105 bushels, or an average of thirty-five bushels per acre.

A Boy on Prohibition.

Mr. Chairman:

I am asked to tell this meeting what we boys think about a Prohibitory law for America. Well, we go in for it, of course. Why shouldn't we? Aren't they always putting prohibitory laws on us boys, and nobody ever asks us whether we want them or not. We can't ride a wheel as we want to, or go swimming, or skating, or coasting, or snowballing, or anything, without danger of running up against a prohibitory law.

Now, there is a steep hill on the main street of our village, and last winter there was a heavy rain storm, and then it froze and that hill was like glass, and don't we boys have a jolly time coasting down that hill until Billy Smith ran into a woman and scattered her two baskets of eggs all over the hill. Billy didn't do it on purpose, for he was scooting along when she got right in his way. He shouted, but before he could call out Jason an egg went for his mouth, and another hit him in the left eye. Now, the woman wasn't much hurt, and we boys chipped in and bought her some more eggs and better than the ones she lost. Billy says so, and it ought to know.

Well, the next day there was a sign put up and it said: "Any boy found coasting on this hill will be sent to the lock up."

Now, only a week before, Tom Guzzle brought a load of wood to town, and then drank it up at the saloon at the top of the hill, and mad with drink, drove his team headlong, down the hill, tore away a veranda, smashed a plate-glass window and nearly killed a man who tried to stop him. But they didn't prohibit the saloon.

Then because a barn was burned, didn't the council pass a law that no firecrackers should be let off on any street of the village. Now, I'd like to know how boys are going to show their loyalty if they can't let off firecrackers and make a harmless racket on the Fourth.

They never proved that the barn was burned by firecrackers; but we all know that there was a big fight at that saloon on the Fourth and one man got hurt. And didn't old "Flare-Up" get drunk at that saloon and then go and set fire to his shop, and it burned up and injured, too? But they didn't prohibit the saloon!

Then, didn't they prohibit us swimming in the mill pond? Who wants to be all fixed up when they go in swimming? And how lots of boys and girls who haven't decent clothes to wear, and what they have are pawned up, because their father drink up all their money at that saloon. And the saloons aren't prohibited yet!

Then because Tom Scorcher ran over a baby carriage that had twice hitit tighting and swearing and in it and tumbled it over, didn't the council the very next week prohibit anybody riding a wheel on the sidewalk? Now, Tom didn't do it on purpose. The carriage was run right in front of his wheel and he took an awful trouble trying not to do it. And the babies weren't hurt much, because they were fat and the mud was real soft. Only they couldn't tell which from t'other till they were washed.

Only last year a man left his team in front of the saloon while he went in to drink, and didn't they get up a row in the bar and frighten the horses so they ran away and smashed the buggy and one of the ladies in the buggy was so badly hurt she died. But the saloon goes on all the same.

Then didn't they prohibit snowballing on the street? And I'd like to know when they would have found the body of old Sam Fogel if we hadn't seen one of his bogus sticking out of a drift when we were tumbling a new fort? But the saloon where he got drunk isn't prohibited yet!

Of course, if it's right to prohibit bad things, it can't be right to license what makes all the badness. And we boys say it isn't fair to prohibit tighting and swearing and lots of other things, while you license the stuff that makes men do 'em all. So, of course, we boys and girls are in favor of a Prohibitory law for America now and forever.

Sheep or Goat?

Nan's mother heard her crying after she had gone to bed and upon inquiry learned that the child, having heard for the first time the parable of the sheep and the goats, was in terror lest she should be a goat.

Her grandfather, a clergyman, tried to comfort 'em and finally succeeded in convincing her that if she led a "godly, righteous and sober life" she need not fear the objectionable classification. However, the next time Nan was again the victim of her emotions and her mother inquired that the scene of the previous night must be repeated.

"But, oh, mamma," sobbed the child, "this is different. Grandpa let me explained all about me, and I am so afraid for myself now. For oh, mamma, what if you should be a goat?"—Delineator.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

A handsome young soldier of fortune, a princess of enchanting beauty, two eccentric adventurers who leave with disposing of the island of Japat and its ruby mines, two heirs who must marry within a year to inherit the property despite the fact that they are already married, a shrewd American lawyer, a scheming British solicitor, a pretty stenographer, a prince who is musical and profligate and a horde of fanatical Moslems who will inherit the riches of Japat provided the heirs do not marry each other—these are the leading characters in a romance which for genuine novelty, thrilling and unusual situations, live American humor and the pathos of a great but apparently hopeless love has rarely been equaled and never surpassed.

CHAPTER I.

THE LATE MR. SKAGGS.

THE death of Taswell Skaggs was stimulating, to say the least. Inapplicable though the expression may seem. He attained the end of a late old age by tumbling aimlessly into the mouth of a crater on the island of Japat, somewhere in the mysterious south seas. The world had quite thoroughly forgotten him during the twenty odd years immediately preceding his death. It was, however, hotheadedly worth while to remember him at this particular time. He left a last will and testament that leads fair to distress as well as startle a great many people on both sides of the Atlantic.

In Boston the law firm of Bowen & Hare was puzzling itself beyond reason in the effort to anticipate and circumvent the plans of the firm of Bosworth, Newnes & Grapewin, London, E. C., while on the other side of the Atlantic Messrs. Bosworth, Newnes & Grapewin were blindly struggling to do precisely the same thing in relation to Messrs. Bowen & Hare.

Without seeking to further involve myself I shall at once conduct the reader to the nearest of these law offices.

"Pretty badly tangled, I declare," said Mr. Hare, staring helplessly at his senior partner.

"Hopelessly," agreed Mr. Bowen, very much as if he had at first intended to groan.

Before them on the table lay the contents of a bulky envelope, a long and stupendous letter from their London correspondents and with it a copy of Taswell Skaggs' will. Mr. Bowen recently had been named as joint executor of the will, together with Sir John Allencromble of London, W. C., one time neighbor of the late Mr. Skaggs. A long and exasperating cablegram had touched somewhat irresolutely upon the terms of the will, besides notifying him that one of the heirs resided in Boston. He was instructed to apprise this young male of his good fortune.

There was one very important, perhaps imposing, feature in connection with the old gentleman's will—he was decidedly sound of mind and body when it was altered.

When such astute lawyers as Bowen & Hare give up to amazement, the usual forerunner of consternation, it is high time to regard the case as startling.

"Read it again, Bowen."

"The will?"

"No; the letter."

Whereupon Mr. Bowen again read aloud the letter from Bosworth, Newnes & Grapewin, this time slowly and speculatively.

"They seem as much upset by the situation as we," he observed reflectively.

"Extraordinary state of affairs, I must say."

"And I don't know what to do about it. I don't even know how to begin. They're both married."

"And not to each other."

"She's the wife of a Lord knows what of a lord, and he's married to an uncommonly fine girl, they say, notwithstanding the fact that she has larger social aspirations than he has means."

"And if that all important clause in the will is not carried out to the letter the whole fortune goes to the howwows."

"Practically the same thing. He calls them 'natives,' that's all. It looks to me as though the howwows will get the old man's millions. I don't see how anything short of Providence can alter the situation."

"Thank heaven, Bowen, he names you as executor, not me."

"I shall decline to serve. It's an impossible situation, Hare. In the first place, Skaggs was not an intimate friend of mine. I met him in Constantinople five years ago and afterward bunched some business for him in New York. He had no right to impose upon me as if"—

"But why should you hesitate? You have only to wait for the year to roll by and then turn your troubles over to the natives. Young Browne can't marry Miss Ruthven inside of a year simply because there is no Miss Ruthven. She's Lady—Lady—what's the name?"

"Deppingham."

"And Browne already has one Mrs. Browne to his credit, don't you see. Well, that settles it, I'd say. It's hardly probable that Browne will murder or divorce his wife, nor is it likely that her ladyship would have the courage to dispose of her incumbrance in either way on such short notice."

"But it means millions to them, Hare."

"That's their unfortunate lookout. You are to act as an executor, not as a matrimonial agent."

"But, man, it's an outrage to give all of it to those wretched islanders. Bosworth says that rubies and sapphires grow there like mushrooms."

"Bosworth also says that the islanders are thrifty, intelligent and will fight for their rights. There are lawyers among them, he says, as well as jewel diggers and fishermen."

"Skaggs and Lady Deppingham's grandfather were the only white men who ever lived there long enough to find out what the island had stored up for civilization. That's why they bought it outright, but I'm hanged if I can see why he wants to give it back to the natives."

"Perhaps he owes it to them. He doubtless bought it for a song, and, contrary to all human belief, he may have resurrected a conscience. Anyhow, there remains a chance for the heirs to break the will."

"It can't be done, Hare; it can't be done. It's as clean an instrument as ever survived a man."

It is by this time safe for the reader to assume that Mr. Taswell Skaggs had been a rich man and therefore privileged to be eccentric. He came of a sound old country family in upper England, but seems to have married a bit above his station. His wife was serving as governess in the home of a certain earl when Taswell won her heart and dragged her from the exalted position of minding other people's children into the less conspicuous one of caring for her own.

Their only son was killed by a runaway horse when he was twenty, and their daughter became the wife of an American named Browne when she was scarcely out of her teens. It was then that Mr. Skaggs, practically childless, determined to make himself wifeless as well.

He magnanimously deeded the unentailed farm to his wife, turned his securities into cash and then set forth upon a voyage of exploration. It is common history that upon one dark, still night in December he said goodby forever to the farm and its mistress, but it is doubtful if either of them heard him.

To be "jolly well even" with him Mrs. Skaggs did a most priggish thing. She died six months later, but before doing so she made a will in which she left the entire estate to her daughter, effectually depriving the absent husband of any chance to reclaim his own.

Taswell Skaggs was in Shanghai when he heard the news. It was on a Friday. His informant was that erstwhile friend Jack Wyckholme. Naturally Skaggs felt deeply aggrieved with the fate which permitted him to capitulate when unconditional surrender was so close at hand. His language for one brief quarter of an hour did more to upset the progress of Christian endeavor in the far east than all the idols in the Chinese empire.

"There's nawthin' in England for me, Jackie. My gal's a bloomin' foreigner by this time, and she'll sell the bleedin' farm, of course. She's an American. God bless 'er 'eart. I dare say if I'd go to 'er and say I'll like my farm back again she'd want to fork over, but 'er 'usband wouldn't be for that sort of hextravagance. 'E'd boot me off the hisland."

"The United States isn't an island, Tazzy," explained Mr. Wyckholme, gulping his brandy and soda.

Mr. Wyckholme was the second son of Sir Somebody-or-other and had married the vicar's daughter. This put him into such bad odor with his family that he hurried off to the dogs—and a goodly sized impasse besides if the records of the bankrupt's asylum are to be credited. His wife, after enduring him for sixteen years, secured a divorce. Accepting the world as his home, he ventured forth to visit every nook and cranny of it. In course of time he came upon his old friend and neighbor and boyhood friend, Taswell Skaggs, in the city of Shanghai. Neither of them had seen the British isles in two years or more.

"'Ow do you know?" demanded Taswell.

"Haven't I been there, old chap? A year or more? It's a rotten big place where gentlemen aspire to sell gloves and hunkerchiefs and needlework over the shop counters. You know, Tazzy, I could well afford to starve, and I wouldn't sell things, so I came away. But it's no hstand."

"Well, that's neither here nor there, Jackie. I 'aven't a 'ome, and you 'aven't a 'ome, and we're wanderers on the face of the earth. My wife played me a beastly trick, dyin like that. I say marriage is a bloomin' nuisance."

"Marriage, my boy, is the convalescence from a love affair. One wants to get out the worst way, but has to stay in till he's jolly well cured. For my part, I'm never going back to England."

"Nor I. It would be just like me, Jackie, to 'ave a relapse and never get out again."

The old friends took an inventory. Jack Wyckholme, gentleman's son and ne'er-do-well, possessed £9 and a fraction, an appetite and excellent spirits, while Taswell Skaggs exhibited a balance of £1,000 in a Shanghai bank, a fairly successful trade in Celestial necessities and an unbounded eagerness to change his luck.

"I have a proposition to make to you, Tazzy," said Mr. Wyckholme late in the night.

"I think I'll listen to it, Jackie," replied Mr. Skaggs, quite soberly.

As the outcome of this midnight proposition Taswell Skaggs and Jack Wyckholme arrived two months later at the tiny island of Japat, somewhere south of the Arabian sea, there to remain until their dying days and there to accumulate the wealth which gave the first named a chance to make an extraordinary will. For thirty years they lived on the island of Japat. Wyckholme preceded Skaggs to the grave by two winters, and he willed his share of everything to his partner of thirty years' standing. But there was a proviso in Wyckholme's bequest, just as there was in that of Skaggs. Each had made his will some fifteen years or more before death, and each had bequeathed his fortune to the survivor. At the death of the survivor the entire property was to go to the grandchild of each testator, with certain reservations to be mentioned later on, each having by investigation discovered that he possessed a single grandchild.

The Island of Japat had been the home of a Mohammedan race, the outgrowth of Arabian adventurers who had fared far from home many years before Wyckholme happened upon the island by accident. It was a British possession, and there were two or three thousand inhabitants, all Mohammedans. Skaggs and Wyckholme par chased the land from the natives, protected and eased their rights with the government and proceeded to realize on what the natives had unwittingly prepared for them. In course of time the natives repented of the deal which gave the Englishmen the right to pick and sell the rubies and other precious stones that they had been trading away for such trifles as silks, gewgaws and women. A revolution was imminent, whereupon the owners organized the entire population into a great stock company, retaining four-fifths of the property themselves. This seemed to be a satisfactory arrangement, despite the fact that some of the more warlike leaders were difficult to appease. It is only necessary to add that the beautiful island of Japat, sizzling like an emerald in the sapphire waters of the orient, brought millions in money to the two men who had been unlucky in love.

And now, after more than thirty years of voluntary exile, both of them were dead, and both of them were buried in the heart of an island of rubies, their deed and their deeds remaining to posterity—with reservations.

CHAPTER II.

AN EXTRAORDINARY DOCUMENT.

IT appears that the Messrs. Skaggs and Wyckholme on their dual career drew to a close set about to learn what had become of their daughters. Investigation proved that Wyckholme's daughter had married a London artist named Ruthven. The Ruthvens in turn had one child, a daughter. Wyckholme's wife and his daughter died when his grandchild was eight or ten years old. By last report the grandchild was living with her father in London. She was a pretty young woman, with scores of admirers on her hands and a very level head on her shoulders.

Wyckholme held to his agreement with Skaggs by bequeathing his share of the property to him, but it was definitely set forth that at the death of his partner it was to go to Agnes Ruthven, the grandchild—with reservations.

Skaggs found that his daughter, who married Browne, the American, likewise had died, but that she had left behind a son and heir. This son, Roderi Browne, was in school when the joint will was designed, and he was to have Skaggs' fortune at the death of Wyckholme in case that worthy survived.

In order to keep the business and the property intact and under the perpetual control of one partnership the granddaughter of Wyckholme was to marry the grandson of Skaggs within the year after the death of the surviving partner. The penalty to be imposed upon them if the conditions were not complied with, neither to be excusable for the defection of the other, lay in the provision that the

In this city there are two men who are doing more for Charlevoix than has ever been done in recent years, VanPelt and Payton. VanPelt is spending his money in erecting buildings which are a credit to the city and evidence of his faith in its future and Payton is spending his time and money in exploiting the advantages of this county and city.

We can't all have the money VanPelt has to expend in buildings, but we can cheer him on, and to the best of our ability do our part to make his investments profitable, and while he is reaping his benefit for his faith in the future, receive the reward which will come to us all.

We can't all of us have the personal magnetism of a Payton but we can and him by volunteering the information asked for, which will lessen his labors instead of making him urge and beg to receive the same.

We can all be boosters and not knockers; lifters and not leaners and now is the time to show the stuff we are made of.

WILL HOLD CROP

Such is Decision of Potato Grower's Mass Meeting

Held at Traverse City—Minimum 50 Cents Per Bushel

About 150 Northern Michigan potato growers were in attendance at the mass meeting at the court house in Traverse City, Wednesday afternoon, the meeting being held under the auspices of the Farmer's Society of Equity and being for the purpose of devising means to prevent the dumping of the Michigan potato crop on the market in the fall. The meeting was called to order at 2:15 by Walter Greitick, state president of the Farmers Society of Equity. Mr. Greitick stated that he had been ill and was in no condition to make an address, so he introduced the national president, J. A. Everitt, of Indianapolis.

Mr. Everitt at once proceeded to give an address which was listened to with the deepest attention.

Thursday morning's session was largely spent in the revision of the report of the committee on plans and organization and selling of potatoes.

Your committee reports as follows:

That the plan of organization shall be the same as provided in the Farmers' Society of Equity viz: Local unions, county unions and a state union.

For selling we recommend as follows:

First. That the crops shall be pledged to be held for the minimum price.

Second. When the minimum price can be secured the member is at liberty to sell.

Third. The charge for selling shall be 25 cents an acre provided no charge shall be less than $2 if the pledge is not a member of the Farmers' Society of Equity.

Fourth. The money so raised shall be used to pay the solicitors and organizers and to meet the legitimate and necessary expenses of the organization in the state. The apportionment shall be made by the state officers.

Fifth. The undersigned is a member of the Farmers' Society of Equity or becomes such by the contract and pledges and is entitled to all the privileges of a member of said society.

James Greason,
E. W. VanFleet
W. J. Bonnett,
James Howey.

These rules and plans were unanimously adopted.

James Greason of Kalkaska, made the motion that the minimum price be 45 cents before the first of December and 60 cents after the 1st of December in the report of the committee on minimum price, which was submitted at last evening's session, be amended to the minimum price of fifty cents per bushel, this price to cover both prices heretofore submitted. The motion was supported and unanimously accepted.

Following is the amended report of the committee on the minimum price of potatoes:

Amended Report:—Your committee recommends that the minimum price of potatoes shall be 50 cents per bushel.

TRIP THROUGH TOWNSHIPS

Passing into Norwood we stopped at the home of Albert Beattie, where we secured a view, of a row of pear trees, loaded with fruit, also a view of Mr. Beattie's house and outbuildings, the peculiar attractiveness of which lay in their slick appearance. Across the road from Mr. Beattie's is the farm of Joe Clark, whose splendid modern building we regretted to leave but whose orchards proved a stronger attraction, trees being loaded with the most perfect fruit our eyes ever rested upon.

Our next stop was made at the farm of Mrs. Hilton, which is one of the most beautiful places to be found in a day's drive, surrounded on every hand, by orchards loaded with fruit. A view was secured here of a group of trees loaded down.

Pressing on to the Village of Norwood we got a view of the beautiful home of George H. Van Pelt and next went to the orchards of Stafford Bros. a description of which would only be a repetition of what we have written before, trees bending beneath their loads of perfect fruit.

By this time it was supper time, and we finished the half day's trip by stopping at Supervisor Bugbee's where, after taking another orchard scene, we had a supper which was a substantial finish to a day of pleasure, and proved to us that if Charlevoix produces first class farmers she also has cooks without an equal.

In the evening a meeting of Norwood grange was attended, Mr. Payton explaining the work of the bureau and receiving the assurance that Norwood would furnish ten barrel of apples for the Chicago show. While many things were left behind we were well satisfied with the day's work.

Don't miss seeing the great display of fruit at the Charlevoix County Fair September 28-30. 37-1-1

Wednesday night Round Lake lodge I. O. O. F. entertained twenty-four visitors from Petoskey lodge. The first degree was conferred upon E. J. Tuttle, Wesley Howard and Roy Ripley in a very impressive manner after which the lodge enjoyed a social session followed by a feed.

Central Lake township, as far as solicited, has given 150 signatures for the submission of the local option question to about eighty refusals. Banks, we are informed, is the banner township of the county, having 287 signatures and thirty-four refusals to sign the petition.—Torch.

An Opening Display
OF NEW
Fall Dress Fabrics

This is an Event that appeals to every discriminating, dress-buying woman—will appeal to you. If you were not here yesterday or the day before—come today.

Mere words cannot describe the beauty, the lavish and wonderful color-combinations, or the finer, subtle points of the fabrics shown now for the first time. We never before exhibited so wide a range of crisp Fall patterns. It completely outclasses all events of this character in the past; and in saying this—we but publicly voice the opinions of those style-appreciative women who attended other opening displays—who were here yesterday—and know.

It is a display all women will find intensely interesting. Especially will the woman about to choose her new dress material—who wishes to know the latest thought in Fall and Winter dress fashions—find it so.

Style and dependability prevades the showing at all prices. Women of fashion will recognize all through this display of La Parte Dress Fabrics, distinctive style attributes of the season's fashion tendencies—examples of exclusiveness—that reflect experience and studious care in the selection of fabrics, linings, trimmings, etc.

It is a pleasure to welcome the Dress-loving Women of this Community to a display so authoritative and complete. It is a pleasure to welcome YOU.

BUSINESS THRIVING

Statement of State Savings Bank Very Gratifying.

In another part of this issue we print the statement of the condition of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, as called for by the state banking department at the close of business, September 1. Also in another part a comparitive statement of the growth of business since February of this year.

Nothing perhaps could prove the healthy condition of business in this section better than these figures, which should be carefully studied, each quarter showing a substantial increase. These figures are ones which not only Cashier Rashow and the directors of the State Bank can show with a feeling of just pride but are an equal source of gratification to every citizen of Charlevoix.

Dr. Fremont C. Warne, of East Jordan, died at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, Monday morning after an illness of over two years.

Dr. Warne was one of the most highly respected pioneer business men and physicians of this county, having come to East Jordan in 1881, where he entered into the drug business and practice of his profession, which he continued up to two years ago, since which he has only continued as manager of the telephone exchange.

He leaves two children, Bessie and Arthur, Mrs. Warne having died about two years ago. He was a member of the Masonic order and Knights of Pythias. The former order will have charge of the funeral, which will be held at East Jordan at two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Otsego county requires only 305 names on the petitions for local option in order to have the question submitted to the voters. Up to date more than 500 have signed the petitions, and the circulators are not through yet. The canvas is going on in the several townships of the county, and every man will be given a chance to sign the petition. There's no question about Otsego, and local option will go in a whooping next April.—Otsego County Herald.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wicksel of Berlin, Ottawa county, have concluded a 13-year continuous resorting trip. The long visit was made to a lumber camp about 20 miles west of the Soo, and in all that time they never saw a street car, a railroad train, a telephone or any other of the numerous marks of present day civilization.—Their effacement was due to the fact that Mr. Wicksel became possessed of the belief that that was the one way he could regain his health. The cure was entirely successful. When Mr. Wicksel entered the big woods, he was a mere skeleton, weighing but a trifle more than 100 pounds. Today he weighs 155 and is strong and robust in every way. Mrs. Wicksel made no complaint concerning the long exile, saying that she was kept happy by seeing the constant improvement in her husband.

During July there were 2,748 deaths in Michigan reported to the secretary of state which corresponds to an annual death rate of 12 per 1,000 estimated population. The largest proportion of deaths were caused by violence, various forms of tuberculosis being the second cause in importance and in deadly effect. There were 1,787 births reported to the department as having occurred during July, which corresponds to an annual birth rate of 21.2 per 1,000 estimated population.

John J. Tweddle of Traverse City, appears to have solved the problem of keeping fruit far beyond its usual season without any artificial means. This week he brought seven apples out of his cellar that had been placed there last fall and each specimen was in perfect condition and tasted like freshly picked fruit. Four of the apples were of the Ben Davis variety, and the other three were Starks. Mr. Tweddle takes considerable pride in his ability as a horticulturist and claims that he has preserved specimens of the Wineap apple in perfect condition for two years.

Sim R. Wilson formerly editor of the Boyne Citizen, who has just returned from an extensive tour through the west, has this to say regarding the farming possibilities of that country as compared with this section of Michigan: "Yes, they have splendid farms out there and the fruit is luscious and of large size, but much of the land is overvalued. Right here in Michigan a man can buy farm land equally as good and much less in price than much that is for sale out there."—Citizen.

Plastic slate, that is to say mouldable slate, is a mixture formed by combining about one part of coal tar and four parts of slate dust and is recommended for covering large wounds in trees. This mass must be about the consistency of a not too thick glazier's putty, so that it can be batted and rolled out in the hand. Slate dust can easily be made by crushing small pieces of slate. The mass sticks to wood, to metal, to stone, and in fact to everything that is not greasy and closes every opening air tight.—Scientific American.

Standing in front of an old-fashioned brass cannon, ramming the wadding down, Paul Paulsen, a member of the Escanaba division of the Michigan state naval reserves, was literally blown from the muzzle of the gun when the charge exploded prematurely. Felicitous.

An Iowa man says that shortly after the election of a governor of that state some years ago the governor paid an official visit to the state prison. In the course of which he was ushered into the chapel where the convicts were assembled in a body.

Before the governor could realize what was going on the chaplain had presented him to the company, with the remark that he would doubtless have something to say.

"But my dear sir," whispered the startled governor, "I haven't anything to say, and I wouldn't say it if I had! You know what a wretched speaker I am!"

The chaplain could only reply, "I beg your pardon, sir, for being so premature, but as I have committed you so decidedly I see no way out of it and feel confident that you will not mind addressing a few remarks to the men."

Whereupon, with a sigh of apprehension, the governor delivered himself as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen— No, no, I don't mean that. Gentlemen and fellow citizens— No, I don't exactly mean that either, but—but well, men and fellow prisoners, I can't make a speech. I—I don't know how to make a speech—and so—so well, about all I can say is that—that—I'm very glad to see so many of you here!"—Harper's Weekly.

Tom—I wish that I had Joe's great good luck.

Dick—So he's generally lucky?

Tom—Lucky? If he walked out of the window in his sleep at dead of night there would be another man going by below carrying a feather bed.—London Telegraph.

AERIAL CONTESTS FOR GOLD AND GLORY.

Series of Races For Championship to Be Flown at West Michigan State Fair Between Knabenshue and Beechey.

Balloons Racing at Top Speed.

SUCH an event will be the startling feature at the West Michigan State Fair, in Grand Rapids, Sept. 13 to 17. The fair management has succeeded in securing the entries of Roy Knabenshue, a famed aeronaut of Toledo O., and Lincoln Beechey, equally well known, of Buffalo, N. Y., for a series of daily races for the aerial championship and a purse of $3,000, $2,000 to the winner and $1,000 to the loser.

The rivalry between Knabenshue and Beechey is intense.

These airships are of the same general type as that constructed for Walter Wellman for use in his flight to the pole. These will be raced every day, weather conditions permitting, over a prescribed course above the fair grounds, the contests to be best three in five, for a purse of $2,000 in gold to the winner, $1,000 in gold to the loser.

Both Mr. Knabenshue and Mr. Beechey have made hundreds of successful flights, and each one claims superiority over the other. The meeting at the West Michigan Fair will, however, be the first opportunity that has been afforded them to settle the matter in actual races, and the meeting on this occasion is looked forward to with interest, not only by the fair management and visitors but by those interested in the latest and most fascinating problem of the present day—the navigation of the air. The results of these daily races will be chronicled the world over, and every visitor to the West Michigan Fair will have an opportunity to witness an epoch making feature of world-wide import.

ON THE MAP

Where Western Michigan Development Bureau Would Place This Region.

AIMS TO UNITE WESTERN MICHIGAN IN BIG CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT.

The development of the resources of Western Michigan is, broadly, the object of an organization recently formed and includes within its proposed field of especial activity that portion of Western Michigan lying in the counties of Muskegon, Newaygo, Oceana, Lake, Mason, Manistee, Wexford, Benzie, Leelanau, Grand Traverse, Antrim, Charlevoix and Emmett.

This district has been named the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

It is organized for the purpose of thoroughly advertising the resources of this section to the land-hungry people of the whole country, and by united effort to insure the settlement of the unoccupied lands, to build up the towns and cities, and last but not least to awaken the dwellers in this region to the wonderful opportunities of the country in which they live. Co-operation is the keynote of the Development Bureau.

In point of co-operative effort the Western Michigan Development Bureau takes pattern after the work of similar organizations in the far west. For instance, the Oregon Development League includes 82 separate organizations, all using the same letter-heads, all working toward one end. The result has been an intense enthusiasm on the part of the people in that region. They have a real affection for the community in which they live—a power which has made itself felt in the most remote corners of the United States.

One of the best evidences of this enthusiasm is that in many instances communities having a population of from 500 to 10,000 have raised at a single meeting from $500 to $12,000 to support the Oregon Development League. On several occasions more than $8,000 have been subscribed, payable in monthly amounts, enabling those communities to employ skilled advertisers, who had no other business than to do the executive work and attend to the advertising of the commercial bodies.

It is hardly too much to say that the most valuable result of these trained advertisers has manifested itself in the optimistic spirit, the local patriotism and intense enthusiasm of the people of Oregon for their state. There has been created among the people of that region a confidence in their natural resources such that no visitor fails to catch their contagious spirit of belief in Oregon and its opportunities.

This is the first object of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. To awaken in the people of western Michigan a realization of the wonderful opportunities which exist in this part of the state. The Development Bureau has the avowed intention of reminding the people that western Michigan was famous as a fruit region before Oregon was ever heard of; it will call to the attention of people living here the fact, which hustling westerners have made the public forget, namely that Western Michigan has at its very doors the markets to reach which Oregon must ship thousands of miles. It will point out that land can be bought in Western Michigan for one-fifth the cost of the same acreage in the far west, and that it will produce a far greater return on the investment than the western land. In short, that the people of Oregon, Washington, California, and other western states have made the people of this region believe that the west has something better to offer than is to be found in Michigan even when a moment's consideration suffices to convince of larger opportunities prevailing here. To correct popular delusion in the minds of our own people, to awaken them to their wonderful opportunities is the primary object of the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

It will make it its object to run home-seekers' excursions and otherwise colonize this part of the state. This increase in population will benefit city and country regions.

First of all this will result in an increased value of real estate. This will of course be a direct profit to the owners of lots. Next it will result in a lowered rate of taxation. For it is a uniform experience that taxes are lower in well-settled and highly-developed regions. Next increased population will result in improved transportation facilities. It is an obvious fact that with an increase of traffic there will be an improved service by the railroads and new lines now traversing western Michigan. Besides other transportation companies will be inevitably attracted to this field by the greater volume of business.

For example, there is at present but one electric interurban railroad in the thirteen counties united in the Western Michigan Development Bureau. With the present population it is hardly likely that more could profitably exist, but with the growth in the number of inhabitants there is no question but other interurban lines will be attracted here.

The resort interests will also be stimulated by the Western Michigan Development Bureau. Owing to its favorable location along the shore of the lake western Michigan may rightfully look to become a big summer playground for the superheated regions of the middle west and south. This profitable business is hardly more than in its infancy and can be only brought to its true importance by a co-operative effort such as is planned by the Development Bureau.

A Good Feed For Hogs.

A successful Kansas breeder has experimented with hogs in feeding various rations and thinks he has found a feed that does the work just a little more satisfactorily than anything else.

"In feeding hogs," he says, "I let them run with the cattle, as usual. But I do not believe that hogs do just the best kind in following cattle and getting nothing else but corn. They need some variation from that and will do better when they get some other feed besides the corn they get with the cattle in the feed lot.

In feeding a recent carload of hogs that brought top prices I gave them a slop composed of water, shorts, linseed meal and tankage. I made this slop thin and salt it pretty freely. I put in shorts to the same amount of weight as both the tankage and linseed meal. It makes a very fine feed and one which hogs relish very much. I give it three times each day and find the hogs ready for it each time. It sort of sharpens up their appetites and at the same time acts as a laxative keeping them in the best condition.

"The cost of this feed is not very much, so that in fattening this carload of hogs from the very start they cost very little and represented a large profit in my spring feeding."

"Suppose women should vote, what would be the result?"

"Oh, I don't know," answered Silas Barker petulantly. "Perhaps we'd have hand painted ballots."—Washington Star.

whole industry and its accumulated fortune, including the land (and they owned practically the entire island), were to go to the islanders. Wyckholme named Sir John Allencrombie as one executor, and Skaggs selected Alfred Bowen of Boston as the other.

As Wyckholme was the first to die, Skaggs became sole owner of the island and its treasures, and it was he who made the final will in accordance with the original plans.

The island of Japat, with its jewels and its ancient chateau, of modern construction, represented several million pounds sterling. Wyckholme's dream of erecting an exact replica of a famous old chateau found response in the equally whimsical Skaggs, who constantly bemoaned the fact that it was impossible to spend money. For five years after its completion the two old men, with an army of Arabian retainers and Nubian slaves, lived like oriental potentates in the huge structure on the highlands overlooking the sea.

Skaggs seldom went from one part of his home to another without a guide. It was an vast and so labyrinthine that he feared he might become lost forever. The dungeon below the chateau and the moat with its bridges were the especial delight of these lonely, romantic old chaps. One of the builders of this rare pile was now sleeping peacefully in the sarcophagus beneath the chapel; the other was lying dead and undiscovered in the very heart of his possessions.

The magnificent plans of the partners would have been a glorious tribute to romance had it not been for one fatal obstacle. The trouble was that young Miss Ruthven and young Mr. Browne did not know that their grandfathers lived, much less that they owned an island in the south seas. Therefore it is quite natural that they could not have known they were expected to marry each other.

Miss Ruthven, from motives peculiar to the head and not to the heart, set about to earn a title for herself. Three months before the death of Mr. Skaggs she was married to Lord Deppingham, who possessed a title and a country place that rightfully belonged to his creditors. Mr. Browne, just out of college, hung out his shingle as a physician and surgeon and forthwith, with all the confidence his profession is supposed to inspire, proceeded to marry the daughter of a Brokerage banker in Boston and at once found himself struggling with the difficulties of Back Bay society.

A clause in the will, letter of instruction attached, demanded that the two grandchildren should take up their residence in the chateau within six months after the death of the testator. Failure to remain through the compulsory term of captivity upon said island forfeited the wedding day. Four months had already passed. It was also stipulated that the executor should confer with each of the pair at the end of their year of servitude, provided it was shown in court that they had carried out the wishes of the testator in letter and spirit, had made the most efficient effort within human power.

"It is very exciting," murmured Mr Hare for the third time. "I suppose the first step is to notify young Mr. Browne of his misfortune. His lordship has the task of breaking the news to Lady Deppingham."

"You are assuming that I intend to act under this ridiculous will."

"Certainly. It means about $7,000 to you at the end of the year, with nothing to do but to notify two persons of the terms in the will. If they're not divorced and married again at the end of the year you and Sir John simply turn everything over to the Malays, or whatever they are. I think it's easy shedding for you."

Young Mr. Browne hastened downtown in response to a message from the American executor and was told of the will which had been filed in England, the home land of the testator. To say that this dismayed, good looking young gentleman was Pahbergeisted would be putting it more than mildly.

"What shall I do what can I do, Mr., Bowen?" he gasped, bewildered.

"Consult an attorney," advised Mr Bowen promptly.

"I'll do it!" shouted Bobby Browne, one time halfback on his college eleven. "Break the will for me, Mr. Bowen, and I'll give"—

"I can't break it, Bobby. I'm its executor."

"Good Lord! Well, then, who is the best will breaker you know, please? Something has to be done right away."

"I am afraid you don't grasp the situation. Now, if you were not married it would"—

"I wouldn't give up my wife for all the islands in the universe. That's settled. You don't know how happy we are. She's the"—

"Yes, yes, I know," interrupted the wily Mr Bowen. "Don't tell me about it. You can see Judge Garrett over in the K building. It. They say he expects to come back from the grave to keep his own will"—

Ten minutes later an excited young man rushed into an office in the K. building.

"You will have to fight it jointly," said Judge Garrett after extracting the wheat from the chaff of Browne's remarks. "You can't take hers away from her, and she can't get yours. We must combine against the natives. Come back tomorrow at 2."

"It's as sound as the rock of Gibraltar."

Promptly at 2 Browne appeared, eager eyed and nervous. He had left behind him at home a miserable young woman with red eyes and choking breath who bemoaned the cruel conviction that she stood between him and fortune.

"But, hang it all, dearest, I wouldn't marry that girl if I had the chance.
